THE PREFACE. Thur to hote Praga in letter was not the reason in letter was not the for harnes for

Ow confit, and how conworthy a choice I have made of my (elf, to condertake a worke of this mixture; mine owne reason, though exceeding weake, bath sufficiently resolved, me. For had it beene begotten then with my first dawne of day, when the light of common knowledge began to open it selfe to my yonger yeares: and before any wound received, either front Fortune or lime: I might yet well have doubted, that the darkeneffe of Age and Death would have covered over both It and Mee, long before the performance. For, beginning with the Creation: I have proceeded with the History of the World; and lastly purposed (some few sallies excepted) to confine my discourse, within this our renowned Iland of Great Brittaine. I confesse that it had better sorted with my dissability, the better part of nee the next time. whole times are runne out in other trauailes; to have let together ( as I could) the unioynted and scattered frame of our English affaires, than of the coniuer [all: in whome had there beene no other defect, (who am all defect) then the time of the day, it were enough; the day of a tempestuous life, drawne on to the very evening ere I began. But those inmost, and soulepeircing wounds, which are ever aking while vncured: with the defire to fatisfiethole few friends, which I have tried by the fire of advertice; the former enforcing, the latter personading; have caused mee to make my thoughts legible, and my selfe the Subject of every opinion wise or weake.

To the world I present them, to which I am nothing indebted : neither baue others that were, (Fortune changing) (ped much better in any age. For, Prosperity and Adversity have ever-more tied and ontied vulgar affections. And as we fee it in experience, That dogs doe alwaies barke at those they know not; and that it is in their nature to accompany one another in those clamours: so is it with the inconsiderate multitude. Who, wanting that vertue which wee call Honesty in all men, and that especiall eift of GOD which we call Charity in Christian men; condemne, without hearing; and wound, without offence given : led there-vnto by vncertaine report only; Demonolog, 1: which his Maiesty truly acknowledgeth for the Author of all lies. Blame 3.6.1. no man ( faith Siracides ) before thou have inquired the matter : vn-Ecclett.v.7

derstand first, and then reforme righteously. Rumor, res fine teste, fine iudice, maligna, fallax; Rumor is without witnesse, without iudge, malicious and deceineable. This wanity of vulgar opinion it was that Emiliaria bonnis gaue St. Augustine Argument to affirme, That he feared the praise of good tions, 3 and men, and detested that of the euill. And heereinno manhath given a better telior. Sen deira. L. rule, then this of Seneca; Conscientia satisfaciamus: nihil in famam laboremus; sequatur vel mala, dum benè merearis. Let vs sarissie our owne consciences, and not trouble our selues with same; be it never foill, it is to be despised so we descrue well.

For my selfe, if I have in any thing served my Country, and prised it before my private: the generall acceptation can yeeld me no other profit at this time, than doth a faire sunshine day to a Sea-man after shipwrack, and the contrary no other harmethan an our ragious tempest after the port attained. I know that I lost the love of many, for my sidelity towardes Her, whom I must still bonor in the dust , though further than the defence of Her excellent person, I neuer persequeted any man. Of those that did it, and by what device they did it: He that is the Supreame Judge of all the world, bath taken the accompt; lo as for this kind of suffering, I must say with Seneca, Mala opinio, bene parta, delcear.

As for other men; if there be any that have made themselves Fathers of that fame, which hath beene begotten for them: I canneither enuy at such their purchased glory, nor much lament mine orone mishap in that kind; but content my selfe to say with Virgil, Sic vos non vobis, in many particulars,

To labour other latisfaction, were an effect of phrenzie, not of hope: feeing it is not Truth, but Opinion, that can travaile the world without apaffeport. For were it otherwise; and were there not as many internall formes of the minde, as there are externall figures of men; there were then some possibility, to persuade by the mouth of one Advocate, even Equity alone.

But such is the multiplying and extensive vertue of dead Earth, and of that breath-giving life which GOD hath cast upon Slime and Dust: as that among those that were, of whom we reade and heare, and among those that are, whom we see and converse with; every one hathreceived a severall picture of face, and euerie one a diverse picture of minde; every one a forme apart, every one a fancy and cogitation differing there being nothing wherein Nature so much triumpheth, as in d similitude. From whence it commeth, that there is found so great diversity of opinions; so strong a contrariety of inclinations; so many naturall and connaturall; wife, foolish; manly, and childish affections, and passions in Mortall Men. For it is not the visible fashion and shape of plants, and of reasonable Creatures, that makes the difference, of working in the one, and of condition in the other; but the forme internall.

And though it hath pleased GOD, to reserve the Art of reading mens thoughts to him [ fe : yet, as the fruit tels the name of the Tree ; so doe the outward workes of men ( so farre as their cogitations are acted ) give vs whereof to gueffe at the reft. Nay, it were not hard to expreffe the one by the other, very neare the life : did not craft in many, feare in the most, and the worlds love in all, teach every capacity, according to the compasse it hath, to qualifie and maske over their inward deformities for a time. Though it be also true, Nemo potest diu personam ferre fictam: cito in naturam suam recidunt, quibus veritas non subest. No man can long continue masked in a counterfeit behauiour: the thinges that are forced for pretences, having no ground of truth, cannot long diffemble their owne natures. Neither can any man (faith Plutarch ) so change himselfe, but that his heart may be sometime seene at his

In this great discord and disimilitude of reasonable creatures, if wee direct our selues to the Multitude; Omnis honestæ rei malus index est vulgus, The common people are cuill ludges of honest things, and whose wisdome ( saith Ecclesiastes ) is to bee despised; if to the better fort; every understanding hath a peculiar judgment, by which it both cenfureth other men, and valueth it (elfe. And therefore conto mee it will not seeme strange, though I finde these my worthlesse papers torne with Rats: feeing the flouthfull Censurers of all ages, have not spared to taxe the Reuerend Fathers of the Church, with Ambition; the severest men to themselves, with Hypocrifie; the greatest louers of Iustice, with Popularity; and those of the truest valour and fortitude, with vaine-glorie. But of these na-Eccl.c. 11. tures, which lie in wayt to finde fault, and to turne good into evill, feeing with facilities. Salomon complained long fince: and that the very age of the world ren- quanterel ders it every day after other more malitious; I must leave the professors to their easie waies of reprehension, than which there is nothing of more

To me it belongs in the first part of this praface, following the common and approved custome of those who have left the memories of time past to after ages; to give, as neare as I can, the same right to History which they have done. Yet feeing therein I should but borrow other mens wordes : I will not trouble the Reader with the repetition. True it is, that among many other benefits, for which it hath beene honored; in this one it triumphethouer all humane knowledge, That it hath given ws life in our wnderstanding, fince the world it selfe had life and beginning, even to this day: yea it hath triumphed over time, which befides it, nothing but eternity hath triumphed over for it hath carried our knowledge over the vast & denouring space of so many thousands of yeares, and given so faire and peircing eies to our minde; that we plainely behould living now, as if we had lived then, that great World, Magni Delfapiens opus, the wife worke (faith Hermes) of a great GOD, as it was then, when but new to it felfe. By it I fay it is, that we live in the very time when it was created: we behold how it was governed: how it was covered with waters, and againer epeopled: How Kings and Kingdomes have flor/fled and fallen; and for what vertue and piety GOD made prosperous; and for what vice and desormany he made wretched, both the one and the other. And it is not the least debt which we owe conto History, that it hath made we aquainted with our dead ancestor; and, out of the depth and darkenesse of the earth, delivered us their memory and same. In a word, we may gather out of History a policy no lesse wise than eternall; by the comparison and application of other mens fore-passed miseries, with our owne likee, rours and ill describes.

But it is neither of Examples the most lively instructions, nor the words of the wises men the terror of survey coments, that hath yet of wrought in our bland and stupssed of GOD doth peirce through all our preteness; as to make vs remember, That the instruction of GOD doth require none other accilers than our owne coasciences; which neither the sale beauty of our apparent actions, nor all the formallities, which to pacifie the opinions of men) we put on scaninany, or the least kind, cover from his knowledge. And so much did that Heavhen wisdome confesse, no way as yet qualified by the knowledge of a true GOD. If any sale is trouble it from the cuertasting gods, he thinkses nor well

To repeat GODS indgements in particular, ppon those of all degrees, which have plaied with his mercies; would require a volume apart: for the Sea of examples bath no bottome. The markes, set on private men, are with their bodies cast into the earth; and their fortunes, written onely in the memories of those that lived with them: so as they who succeed, and have not seene the fall of others, doe not feare their come faults. GODS judements opposithe greater and greatest; have beene left to posterity; first, by those happy hands which the Holy Ghost hath guided; and secondly, by their evertue, who have gathered the acts and ends of men, mighty and remarkeable in the world. Now to poynt farre off, and to speake of the conversion of Angells into Deuills, for Ambition: Or of the greatest and most glorious Kings, who have gnawne the grasse of the earth with beasts, for pride and ingratitude towards GOD: Or of that wife working of Pharao, when be flue the Infants of Ilrael, ere they had recovered their Cradles: Or of the policy of Iezabel, in covering the Murder of Naboth by a triall of the Elders, according to the Law: with many thousands of the like: what were it other, than to make an hopeleffe proofe, that farre-off examples would not be left to the same farr-off respects, as heretofore? For who hath not observed, what labour, practise, perill, bloudshed, and cruelty, the Kings and Princes of the world have undergone, exerciled. taken on them, and committed; to make them-selues and their issues maisters of the world? And yet hath Babylon, Perfia, Egypt, Syria, Macedon, Carthage, Rome, and the reft, no fruit, flower, graffe, nor leafe, springing vpon the face of the Earth, of those seedes: No; their very roots and ruines doe hardly remaine. Omnia que manu hominum fada funt, vel manu hominum euertuntur, vel stando & durando deficiunt : All that the hand of man can make, is either ouerturnd by the hand of man, or at length by standing and continuing confumed. Thereasons of whose ruines, are diversly given by those that ground their opinions on second causes. All Kingdomes and States byue fallen ( lay the Politicians ) by outward and forraine force, or by inward negligence and dissension, or by a third cause arising from both: Others obferue. That the greatest have funck downe under their owne weight; of which Liuie hath a touch : eo creuit, vt magnitudine laboret fina; Others, That the divine providence (which Cratippus objected to Porepey ) hath fet downe the date and period of every estate, before their first foundation and erection. But hereof I will give my felfe a day out to resolue.

For feeing the first bookes of the stollowing story, have round recknished discourse of the strip Kings and Kingdomes: and that it is impossible the stort life of a Preface, to trauaile after and over-take farr-off Annauty, and to indee of it; I will, for the present, examine what prosses bath beene gathered by our owne Kings, and their Neighbour Princes: who having beheld, both in divine and humane letters, the succession indesire, invision, and cruelties, have (notwithstanding) planted after the same patternes.

True it is that the indgements of all men are not agreeable; nor (which is more strange) the affection of any one man stirred upp a-like with examples of like nature: But energy ne is touched most, with that which most neerely seems that to touch his owne prinate; Or otherwise best sueth with his apprehension. But the indgements of GOD are for our verchangeable; neither is he wearied by the long processe of time, and won to gine his blessing in one age, to that which he hash our sed in another. Wherefore those that are wish, or whose wisdome, if it be not great, yet is true and well grounded; will be able to discern the bitter fruites of irreligious policie; as well among those examples that are found in ages removed sarre from the present, as in those of latter times. And that it may no self expeare by evident proofe; than by assentiation, That ill doing bath alwaise beene attended with ill successe; I will here, by way of preface, runne over some examples, which the worke ensuing hath not reached;

Among our Kings of the Norman race, we have no sooner passed over the violence of the Norman Conquest, than we encounter with a fingular and most remarkeable example of Gods instice, opon the children of Henry the first. For that King, when both by force, craft, and crueltie, hee had disposest, ouer-reacht, and lastly made blind and destroyed his elder Brother Robert Duke of Normandy, to make his owne some Some Lords of this Land : GOD cast them all, Male and Female, Nephewes and Neeces (Maud excepted) into the bottome of the Sea, with above a hundred and fiftie others that attended them; whereof a great many were Noble, and of the King dearely beloued.

To passe ouer the rest, till we come to Edward the Second; it is certain, that after the Murder of that King, the issue of bloud then made, though it had some times of stay and stopping, did againe breake out; and that so often, and in such aboundance, as all our Princes of the Masculinerace (pery few excepted) died of the same disease. And although the young yeares of Edward the Third, made his knowledge of that horrible fact no more then suspitious : yet in that hee after wards caused his owne Vncle the Earle of Kent to die, for no other offence than the desire of his Brothers redemption, whome the Earle as then supposed to beeliuing; (the King making that to be treason in his Vncle, which your indeed treason in him-felfe, had his Vncles intelligence beene true this I saymade it manifest, that hee was not ignorant of what had past, nor greatly desirous to have had it other wise: though he caused Mortimer to die for the same.

This cruelty the secret and vnsearchable judgement of GOD revenved, on the Grand-child of Edward the Third: and so it fell out, even to the last of that Line, that in the second or third descent they were all buried runder the ruines of those buildings, of which the Mortar had beene tempered with innocent bloud. For Richard the second, who saw, both his Treasurers, his Chancellor, and his Steward, with divers others of his Counsailours, some of them slaughtered by the people, others in his absence executed by his enemies; yet hee aiwaies tooke him selfe for ouer-wife, to bee taught by examples. The Earles of Huntington and Kent, Montague and Spencer, who thought them selves as great posititians in those daies, as others have done in these: hoping to please the King, and to secure themselues, by the Murder of Gloucester; died soone after, with many other their adherents, by the like violent hands; and farre more shamefully then did that Duke. And as for the King him selfe ( wlo in regard of many deedes, omworthy of his Greatnesse, cannot bee execused, as the disauowing him-selfe by breach of Faith, Charters, Pardons, and Patents ) He was in the Prime of his youth deposed; and murdered by his Colea-germane and valfall, Henry of Lancaster; afterwards Henry

This King, whose Title was weake, and his obtaining the Crownetraiterous: who brake Faith with the Lordes at his landing, protesting to intend only the recouerie of his proper Inheritance; brake faith with Richard him(elfe; and brake Faith with all the Kingdome in Parliament, to whom he swore that the deposed King should line. After that he had enjoyed this Realme some few yeares; and in that time had beene set open on all sides by his Subjects, and neuer free from conspiracies and rebellions: he saw (if Soules immortall see and discerne any thinges after the bodies death) his Grand-childe Henrie the fixt, and his Sonne the Prince, suddenly, and without mercy, murdered; the possession of the Crowne (for which he had caused so much blood to bee powed out ) transferred from his race; and by the Issues of his Enemies worne and enioyed: Enemies, whom by his owne prastife hee supposed, that he had left no lesse powerlesse, than the succession of the Kingdome questionlesse; by entailing the same ropon his owne Issues by Parliament. And out of doubt, humane reason could have iudged no other wife, but that thefe cautious provisions of the Father, feconded by the valour and fignall victories of his Sonne Henry the fift, had buried the hopes of every Competitor, under the despaire of alreconquest and recourry. I say, that bumane reason might so have judged: were not this passage of Casaubon also true; Dies; hora, momentum, cuertendis dominationibus sufficit, quá adamantinis credebantur radicibus else fundata; A day, an houre, a moment, is enough to ouerturne the things, that seemed to have been founded and rooted in Adamant.

Now for Henrie the fixt, woon whom the great storme of his Grandfathers greeuous faults fell, as it formerly had done woon Richard the Grand-childe of Edward : although he was generally esteemed for a gentle and innocent Prince; yet as he refused the daughter of Armaignac, of the House of Nauatre, the greatest of the Princes of France, to whom hee was affianced (by which match hee might have defended his Inheritance in France) and married the Daughter of Aniou, (by which he loft all that hee had in France) so as in condiscending to the conworthy death of his Vnckle of Glocester, the maine and strong pillar of the house of Lancaster; Hee drew on himselfe and this kingdome the greatest joynt-losse & dishonor that ever it sustained since the Norman Conquest. Of whom it may truly be said, which a Counsellor of his owne spake of Henriethe Third of France, Quil estoit vn. fort gentil. Prince; mais son reigne est aduenu en vne fort mauuois temps, That he was a very gentle Prince; but his reign happened in a very vnfortunate scason.

It is true, that Buckingham and Suffolke were the practifers and contrivers of the Dukes death: Buckingham and Suffolke, because the Duke gaue instructions to their authority, which otherwise under the Queen had bin absolute sthe Queene, in respect of her personall wound, spretaque iniuria hath it neuer yeelded fince the world was.

And now came it to Edward the fourthsturne (though after many difficulties) to triumph. For all the Plants of Lancaster were rooted cupp; One onely Earle of Richmond excepted: phome also hee had once bought of the Duke of Britaine, but could not hold him. And yet was not this of Edward (uch aplantation, as could any way promife it selfe stability. For this Edward the King ( to omit more than many of his other cruelties ) beheld and allowed the flaughter, which Gloucester, Dorset, Haftings, and others, made of Edward the Prince in his owne presence: of which tragicall Actors, there was not one that escaped the judgement of GOD in the same kinde. And He, which ( befides the execution of his brother of Glarence, for none other offence then hee him-felfe had formed in his owne imagination ) instructed Gloucester to kill Henry the fixt, his predecessour; taught him also by the same Art to kill his orone fonnes and Successors Edward and Richard. Forthose Kings, which have fold the bloud of others at a low rate; have but made the Market for their owne enemies, to buy of theirs at the fame price.

To Edward the fourth succeeded Richard the Third, the greatest Maister in mischeife of all that fore-went him: who although, for the necessity of his Tragedie, hee had more parts to play, and more to performe in his owne person, then all the rest; yet hee so well fitted every affection that playd with him, as if each of them had but acted his owne interest. For he wrought so cunningly wpon the affections of Hastings, and Buckingham, enemies to the Queene and to all her kindred: as hee The Preface.

easily allured them to condiscend that Rivers and Grey, the Kings Maternill Vncle and halfe brother, should (for the first ) bee seuered from him : secondly bee prought their confent to bauethem imprisoned, and lastly (for the a voyding of future inconvenience ) to have their heads severed from their bodies. And having now brought those his chiefe instruments to exercife that common precept, which the Deuill bath written on every post, ribus tuenda namely, To depresse those whome they had grieved, and to destroy those whom sent de dem. they had deprest; Hee orged that argument so farre and so forcibly; as nothing but the death of the yong king himselfe, and of his brother, could fashion the conclusion. For hee caused it to be hammered into Buckinghams head, That, ween souer the king or his brother, should have able yeares to exercise their power; they would take amost sewerereienge of that curelesse wrong, of ered to their uncle and brother, Rivers and Grey.

But this was not his manner of reasoning with Hastings, whose fidelity to his Maisters sonnes was without suspect: and yet the Divell, who never diswades by impossibility, taught him to try him. And so hee did. But when bee found by Caresby, who founded him, that he was not fordable; He first resolved to kill him fitting in councell: wherein having fayled with his [word; He fet the Hangman upon him, with a weapon of more weight. And because nothing else could move his apperite; He caused his head to be stricken off, before he eate his dinner. A greater judgement of GOD, than this ropon Hastings, I have never observed in any storie. For the selfe same due that the Earle Rivers, Grey, and others, were ( without triall of Law, or offence given ) by Hallings advice executed at Pomfret : I lay Hastings him-selfe in the same daie, and (as Itakeit) in the same houre, in the same law lesse manner had his head stricken off in the Tower of London. But Buckingham lived a while longer; and with an eloquent oration per funded the Londoners to elect Richard for their king. And having received the Earldome of Hereford for rew.rd, besides the high bobe of marrying his daughter to the Kings onely sonne; after many grienous vexations of minde, and unfortunate attempts, being in the end betrayed and delivered op by his trustiest servant; He had his head severed from his body at Salisbury, without the trouble of any of his Peeres. And what successe had Richard himselfe after all these mischefes and Murders, policies. and counter-policies to Christian religion: and after such time, as with a most mercilesse hand hee had pressed out the breath of his Nephews and Naturall Lords; other than the prosperity of so bort a life, as it tooke end, ere himselfe could well looke over and discerne it? the great outcrie of innocent bloud, obtayning at GODS hands the effusion of his; who became a spectacle of theme and dilbonor both to his friends and enemeis.

This cruell King, Henry the seauenth cut off; and was therein(no doubt) the immediate instrument of GODS instice. Apoliticke Prince bee was

if ever there were any, and who by the ingine of his wisdome, beat downe and overturned as many strong oppositions both before and after hee ware the crowne as ever King of England did: I say by his wisdome, because as he ever left the raines of his affections in the hands of his profit, so he alwaies wayed his condertakings by his abilities, leaving nothing more to hazard than so much as cannot be denied it in all humane actions. Hee had well observed the proceedings of Loys the eleventh, whome hee followed in all that was royall or royal-like, hur hee was farre more inst, and begun not their processes whome hee hited or feared by the execution, as Loys did.

Hee could neuer indure any mediation in rewarding his servants, and therein exceeding wise, for what so over him-selfe gaue, hee him-selfe received back the thanks and the love. Innowing it well that the affections of men (purchased by nothing to reddely as by benefits) were traynes that better became great Kings, than great subjects. On the courtary, in what so ever hee greeted his subjects, he wisely put it off on those, that he found sit ministers for such actions. How-so-ever, the taking off, of Stanles head, who set to crowne on his, and the death of the young Earle of Warwick, some to George D. of Clarence, shows, as the successed of the errors of his Ancesters, for his possession in the first line ended in his grand children, as that of Edward the third and Henry the fourth had done.

Now for King Henry the eight: if all the pictures and Patternes of a mercilesse Prince were lost in the World, they might all againe be painted to the life, out of the story of this King. For how many servants did hee aduance in hast (but for what vertue no man could suspect) and with the change of his fancy ruined againe; no man knowing for what offence? To how many others of more defert gaue hee aboundant flowers from whence to gather bony, and in the end of Haruest burnt them in the Hiue? How many wives did hee cut off, and cast off, as his fancy and affection changed? How many Princes of the bloud (whereof some of them for age could hardly crawle towards the block) with a world of others of all degrees (of whome our common Chronicles have kept the accompt) did he execute? Yea, in his very deathbed, and when he was at the point to have given his accompt to GOD for the aboundance of bloud already spilt: He imprisoned the Duke of Norfolke the Father; and executed the Earle of Surrey the some; the one; whose defernings he knew not how to value, having neuer omitted any thing that concerned his owne honour, and the Kings service; the other, never having committed anything worthy of his least displeasure: the one exceeding valiant and aduised; the other, no lesse valiant than learned; and of excellent hope. But besides the sorrowes which hee heaped opon the Fatherlesse, and widdowes at home : and besides the vaine enterprises abroade, wherein it is thought that hee confumed more Treasure, than all our victorious

Kings

The Preface.

Kings did in their feuerall Conquests: what causelesse and cruell warres did he make voon his owne Nephew King lames the fift & What Lawes and Wills did be deuile, to establish this Kingdome in his owne illues ? when his Sharpest weapons to cut off, and cut do sone those branches, which sprang from the same roote that him-selfe did. And in the end (not withstanding these his fo many irreligious provisions) it pleased GOD to take away all his owne, without increase, though, for themselves in their severall kindes, all Princes of eminent vertue. For these wondes of Samuel to Agas King of the Amalekites, have beene verified room many others : As thy fword hath made other women childlesse: so shall thy mother be childlesse among other women. And that bloud, which the same King Henry affirmed, that the cold aire of Scotland had frozen up in the North, GOD hath diffused by the sunshine of his grace: from whence His Maiesty now living, and long to live, is descended. Of whome I may say it truely, That if all the malice of the world were infused into one eie: yet could it not discerne in His life, even to this daie, any one of those foule spots, by which the Consciences of all the forenamed Princes (in effect ) have beene defiled; nor any droppe of that innocent bloud on the foord of his justice, with which the most that fore-went him, have stayned both their hands and fame. And for this Crowne of England; it may truely be a wowed, That he hathreceiued it euen from the hand of GOD, and hath stayed the time of putting it on how soeuer he were proudked to hasten it : I hat Hee neuer tooke reuenge of any man, that fought to put him befide it. : That Heerefused the asistance of Her enemies, that wore it long, with as great glory as ever Princesse did, That His Maiesty entred not by a breach, nor by bloud; but by the Ordinary gate, which his owne right let open; and into which, by a generall loue and Obedience, Hee was received. And howfoever His Maiesties praceding title to this Kingdome, was preferred by many Princes ( witnesse the Treaty at Cambray in the yeare, 1559 ) yet hee neuer pleased to dispute it, during the life of that reno woned Lady, his Pradeceffor; no, notwithstanding the iniury of not being declared Heire, in all the time of Her long reigne.

Neither ought weet of orget, or neglect our thankefulnesset of OD for the vaniting of the Northerne parts of Britany to the South, to wit of Scotland to Bngland, which though they were sewered but by small brookes and banks, yet by reason of the long contine wed warre, and the cruckies exercised upon each other, in the affection of the Nations, they were infinitely sewered. This I say is not the least of Gods blessings which His Maickly bath brought with him runto this Land: No, the all our petty greenances together, and heap them up to their hight, they will appeare but as a Mole-bil, compared with the Mountaine of this concord, And if all the Hisforiens since then; have acknowledged the coniting of the Red-Rose, and the White, for the greatest happinesse, (Christian Religion excepted) that ever this Kingdome received from GOD, certainely the peace betweene the two Lions of gold and gules, and the making them one, doth by many degrees exceed the former; for by it, besides the sparing of our british bloud, heretofore and during the difference so often & aboundantly shed, the state of England is more assured, the Kingdom more inabled to recover her auntient honor and rights, and by it made more invincible, than by all our former alliances, practices, policies and conquests. It is true that hereof we do not yet finde the effect. But had the Duke of Parma in the yeare 1588, joyned the army which hee commanded soith that of Spaine, and landed it on the south coast; and had his Maiesty at the same time declared himselfe against ros in the north: it is eahe to divine what had become of the liberty of England, certainely we would then without murmur have bought this vinion at a farre greater prife than it hath fince cost rus.

It is true, that there was never any Common-weale or Kingdome in the world, wherein no man had cause to lament. Kings live in the world and not aboue it. They are not infinite to examine every mans cause, or to releiue euery mans wants . And yet, in the latter, (though to his owne preiudice ) His Maiesty hath had more compassion of other mens necessities, than of his owne Coffers. Of whome it may be said, as of Salomon, Dedit Deus Salomoni latitudinem Cordis: Which if other men doe not conderstand in Sal. 1. K. 4. with Pineda, to be meant by Liberality, but by Latitude of knowledge; yet may it bee better spoken of His Maiesty, than of any King that ever England had; who as well in Divine, as Humane winder standing, bath exceeded all that fore-went him, by many degrees.

I could say much more of the Kings Maiesty, without flatterie; did I not feare the imputation of presumption, and withall suspect, that it might befall these papers of mine, (though the losse were little) as it did the Pictures of Queene Elizabeth, made by conskilfull and common Painters; which by her owne Commandement, were knockt in peeces and cast into the fire. For ill Artists, in setting out the beauty of the externall: and weake writers, in describing the vertues of the internall; doe often leave to posterity, of well-formed faces a deformed memory; and of the most perfect and Princely mindes, a most defective representation. It may suffice, and there needes no other discourse; if the honest Reader but compare the cruell and turbulent passages of our former Kings, and of other their Neighbour-Printes (of whome for that purpose I have inserted this breife discourse) with His Maiesties temperate, revengelesse, and liberall disposition : I say, that if the honest Reader weigh them instly, and with an even hand: and withall, but bestoweuery deformed child on his true Parent; He shall find, that there is no man which hath so inst cause to complaine, as the King him-selfe hath.

The Preface.

Now as we have told the successe of the trumperies and cruelties of our owne Kings, and other great personages: so we finde, that GOD is every where the same GOD. And as it pleased him to punish the osurpation, and connatural cruelty of Henry the first, and of our third Edward, in their Children for many generations : so dealt He with the sonnes of Loys Debonaire, the some of Charles the great, or Charlemain. For after such time as Debonaire of France, had torne out the eies of Bernard his Nephew, the some of Pepin, the eldest some of Charlemain, and beire of the Empire, and then caused him to die in prison, as did our Henry to Robest his elder brother : there followed nothing but murders upon murders, poysonings, imprisonments, and civill warre; till the whole race of that famous Emperour was extinguished.

And though Debonaire, after he had rid himfelfe of his Nephero by a violent death ; and of his Bastard Brothers by actuill death (bauing inclosed them with sure gard, all the daies of their lives, within a Monasteries) held him-selfe secure from all opposition: Yes GOD raised out against him ( which hee suspected not ) his owne sonnes, to vexe him, to inuade him, to take him prisoner, and to depose him; his owne sonnes, with whome (to satisfie their ambition) hee had shared his estate, and given them Crownes to weare, and Kingdomes to gouerne, during his owne life. Yeahis eldeft some Lothaire (for hee had foure, three by his first wife, and one by his second; to witt, Lothaire, Pepin, Loys, and Charles) made it the cause of his deposition, That he had wsed violence towards his Brothers and Kinsmen, and that he had suffered his Nephew (whome hee might haue deliuered) to be flaine, co quod, faith the Text, fratti-sup Peffuine bus et propinquis violentiam intulerit, et nepotem suum, quem ipse liberare poterat, interfici permiserit. Because hee vsed violence to his Brothers and Kinsmen, and suffred his Nephew to be slain whom he might have delivered.

Tet did hee that which few Kings doe; namely, repent him of his crueltie. For among many other things, which hee performed in the Generall Assemblie of the States, it followes, Post hac autem palam se errasse confessus, & imitatus Imperatoris Theodosij exemplum, pænitentiam 209. Widen spontaneam suscepit, tam de his, quam quæ in Bernardum proprium nepotem gesserat. After this hee did openly confesse him-selfe to haucerred, and following the example of the Emperour Theodofius hee vnder-went voluntary penance as, well for his other offences, as for that which hee had done against Bernard his owne Nephew.

This hee did : and it was praise-worthie. But the bloud that is uniustly spilt, is not againe gathered up from the ground by repentance. These Medicines, ministred to the dead, haue but dead rewards.

This King, as I have faid, had foure Sonnes. To Lothaire his eldes he gave the Kingdome of Italy; as Charlemain, his Father, had done to Pepin the Father of Bernard, who was to succeed him in the Empire... To Pepin the feather is and to Charles, whome hee had by a second wife, kingdome of Bauier: and to Charles, whome hee had by a second wife, called Iudith, the remainder of the Kingdome of France. But this second wife, being a Mother-in-law to the rest, perswaded Debonaire to cast his some Pepin out of A quitaine; thereby to greaten Charles: which, after the death of his some Pepin, he prosequence to effect, against his Grandchild bearing the same name. In the meane while, heing inuaded by his some Loys of Bauier, he dies for greife.

Debonaire dead : Loys of Bauier, and Charles afterwards called the bald, and their Nephew Pepin of Aquitaine, joyne in league against the Embergio Lorhaire their eldest Brother. They fight neare to Auxerre the most bloudy battaile that ever was strokenin France : in which, the maruelous loffe of Nobility, and men of warre, gaue courage to the Saracens to inuade Italie; to the Hunnes, to fall rupon Almaine; and the Dancs, to enter expon Normandy. Charles the Bald by treason seizeth pon his Nephew Pepin, kills him in a Cloyster, Carloman rebells against his Father Charles the Bald, the Father burnes out the eies of his some Carloman; Bauire inuades the Emperour Lothaire his Brother, Lothaire quits the Empire. Hee is assailed and wounded to the heart by his owne. conscience, for his rebellion against his Father and for his other cruelties, and dies in a Monestarie. Charles the Bald the Vncle oppresseth his Nethewes the lonnes of Lothaire, hee veur peth the Empire to the prejudice of Lovs of Bauire his elder Brother, Bauiers armies and his sonne Carloman are beaten, hee dies of greife, and the V furper Charles is poy foned by Zedechias a lew his Phisitian, his sonne Loys le Beque dies of the same drinke. Beque had Charles the simple, and two Bastards, Loys and Car-Ioman; they rebell against their Brother, but the eldest breakes his Neck, the vounger is flaine by a wild Bore; the some of Bauiere had the same ill destiny and brake his neck by a fall out of a Window in (porting with his companions. Charles the groffe becomes Lord of all that the sonnes of Debonaire held in Germanie, where with not contented, hee inuades Charles the simple, but being for saken of his Nobility, of his wife, and of his understanding, hee dies a distracted begger. Charles the simple is held in Wardship by Eudes Maior of the Pallace, then by Robert the Brother of Eudes, and lastly being taken by the Earle of Vermandois, hee is forced to die in the prison of Peron: Loys the some of Charles the simple breakes his Neck in Chafing a Wolfe, and of the two sonnes of this Loys, the one dies of poyson, the other dies in the prison of Orleans, after whome Hugh Capet, of another race, and a stranger to the French, makes him-felfe. King.

These miserable ends had the issues of Debonaire: who after hee had once apparrelled iniustice with authority, his somes and successour stocke cop the fashion; and wore that Garment so long without other proussour, as when the same was torne from their shoulders, every man despised them as miserable and naked beggers. It were the successe they had, (sath a learned French-man) showers, què en ceste moris y avoit plus du sait des hommes que de Dieu, ou de la instice that in the death of that Prince, to wit of Bernard the sonne of Pepin, the true heire of Charlemaine, men had more medling, than either GOD, or Instice had.

But to come nearer home; it is certaine that Francis the first, One of the worthiest Kings (except for that fast ) that ever the French-men had, did neuer enioy him-selfe; after hee had commended the destruction of the Protestants of Mirandol and Cabrieres, to the Parliament of Prouence, which poore people were there-upon burnt, and murdered; men, weemen, and children. It is true, that the faid King Francis repented him felfe of thefact, and gaue charge to Henry his some, to doe instice opporthe Murderers; threatning his some with GODS indgments, if hee neglected it. But this unseasonable care of his, GOD was not pleased to accept for payment. For after Henry him-felfe was flaine in sport by Montcomerie; we all may remember what became of his foure sonnes, Francis Charles, Henry, and Hercules. Of which although three of them became Kings, and were married to beautifull and vertuous Ladies: Yet were they, one after another, cast out of the world, without stock or seed. And not-with-standing their subtilty, and breach of faith; with all their Maßacres, opon those of the religion, and great effusion of bloud; the Crowne was set on his head, whome they all laboured to dissolve; the Protestants remaine more in number than euer they were ; and hold to this day more strong citties than euer they had.

Let vs now seeif GOD be not the same GOD in Spaine, as in England and France. Towards whome we wil looke no further backe than to Don Pedro of Calille: in respect of which Prince, all the Tyrants of Sicil, our Richard the third, and the great Euan Vassilowich of Moscouia, were but pettie ones: this Castilian, of all Christian and Heathen Kings, bauing beene the most mercilesse. For besides those of his owne bloud and Nobility which hee caused to hee slaine in his owne Cours and Chamber, as Sancho Ruis the great Maister of Calatraua, Ruis Gonsales, Alphonso Tello, and Don Iohn of Arragon, whome he cutt in pecces and cass into the streets, denying him Christian burial! Is y besides these, and the slaughter of Gomes Manriques, Diego Peres, Alphonso Gomes, and the great commander of Castile; Hee made away the two Insants of Arragon his Cosen germans, his brother Don Frederick, Don Iohn de la Cerde, Albuquerques, Nugnes de Guzman, Cornel, Cabrera, Tenorio, Mendes de Toledo, Guttiere his great Treasurer, and all his Kindred, and a world of others. Neither did be spare his two youngest brothers, innocent Princes: whome after hee had kept in clole prison from their Cradles, till one of them had lived fixteene yeares, and the other, fourettene; hee murdered them there. Nay hee spared not his Mother, nor his wife the Lady Blanch of Bourbon, Lastly as he caused the Arch bishop of Toledo, and the Deane, to bee killed of purpose to enioy their treasures : so did he put to death Maho-Bigo. of Spaine met Aben Alhamar King of Barbarie, with seauen and thirty of his Nobilitie; that came onto him for succour, with a great summe of mony, to leay (by his fauour) some companies of souldiers to resurne withall. Yea he would needs afift the Hangman with his wee hand, in the execution of the old King; in fo much as Pope Vrban declared him an enemie both to GOD and Man. But what was his end? Having beene formerly beaven out of his Kingdome, and re-established by the valour of the English Nation, led by the famous Duke of Lancaster : He was stabled to death by his younger Brother the Earle of Astramara, who disposses all his Children of their inheritance; which, but for the Fathers iniustice and cruelty, had neuer beene in danger of any such thing.

If wee can p. rallell any man with this King, it must bee Duk: Iohn of Bur; oigne: who, after his traiterous murder of the Duke of Orleans, caused the Constable of Armagnac, the Chancelour of France, the Bishops of Constance, Bayeux, Eureux, Senlis, Saintes, and other religious and reurend Church men, the Earle of gran Prè Hector of Chattres, and (in essential of the Ossilian of the Chamber of Accompts, Treassure, and Request, (with fixteene hundred others to accompany them) to bee suddenly and violently slaine. Hereby, while hee hoped to gouerne, and to have maistred France: Hee was soone after strucken with an axe in the face, which is a the presence of the Dauphin; and, without any leisure to repent his mildeeds, presently slaine. These were the Louers of other mens misseties: and milerie found them out.

Now for the Kings of Spaine, which lived both with Henry the fewenth, Henry the eighth, Queene Mary, and Queene Elizabeth; Ferdinand of Arragon was the first: and the sirst that layd the foundation of the present Austrian greatnesse. For this King did not content him-selfe to hold Arragon by the cosmod for the same flow, and to fasten there-conto the Kingdome of Castille and Leon, which slabel his wise held by strong hand, and his a solistance, from her own Necesthe Daughter of the last Henry: but most cruelly and crastily, without all colour or pretence of right, H.e also cast his owne Neces out of the Kingdome of Nauarre; and, contravie to faith, and the promise that bee made to restore it, fortified the best places, and so was she telled, as there was no meanes left for any army to intende it.. This King I jay, that ber ayed also Ferdinand and Frederick

The Preface.

Kings of Naples, Princes of his owne bloud, and by double alliance tied onto him; fold them to the French: and with the same drmy, sent for their succour ounder Gonsaluo, cast them out; and shared their Kindgome with the French, whome afterwards he most shamefully betrayed.

This wife and politique King, who fold Heaven and his owne Honour, to make bis sonne, the Prince of Spaine, the greatest Monarch of the world: fam him die in the flower of his yeares; and his wife great with child, with her untimely birth, at once and together buried. His eldest daughter married runto Don Alphonso Prince of Portugall, beheld her first husband breake his neck in her presence; and being with child by her second, died with it. A iust indeement of GOD ropon the race of lohn, father to Alphonso, now wholly extinguished: who had not onely left many disconsolate Mothers in Portugall, by the flaughter of their children; but had formerly flaine, with his owne hand, the some and onely comforte of his Aunt the Lady Beatrix, Duchesse of Viseo. The second Daughter of Ferdinand, married to the Arch-Duke Philip, turned foole; and died mad and deprined. His third daughter, bestowed on King Henry the eight, Hee says cast off by the King: the mother of many troubles in England; and the mother of a Daughter, that in her unhappy zeale shed a world of innocent bloud; lost Callice to the French, and died heart-broken without increase. To conclude : all those Kingdomes of Ferdinand have maisters of a new name; and, by a strange familie are governed and poffest.

Charles the fift, some to the Arch-duke Philip, in whose vaine enterprises upon the French's upon the Almans, and other Princes and States, so many multitudes of Christian shouldiers, and renowned captaines, were consumed: who gave the while amost perilous entrance to the Turkes, and suffered Rhodes, the Key of Christian on the taken; was in conclusion chaced out of France, and in a fort out of Germany; and less to the French, Metz, Toule, and Verdun, places belonging to the Empire; shole away from Inspurg; and scaled the Aless by torch-light, pursued by Duke Maurice; having hoped to smallow up all those dominions, wherein hee concosted nothing save his owine disgraces. And having, after the stangener of so many Millions of men, no one foote of ground in either: Hee crept into a Cloyster, and made himselfe a Pensioner of an hundred Muba. His. thousand Duckets by the yeare to his some Philip; from whom he very slow. 1-1612313.

His Sonne againe King Philip the second, not satisfied to hold Holland and Zeland (wrested by his Ancestors from Iaqueline their lawfull Princesses) and to possesses accermance other Provinces of the Netherlands: perswaded by that mischeiuous Cardinall of Granuile, and other Romish Tyrants; not onely forgot the most remarkable services, done to his Father the Emperor by the Nobility of these countries, not onely forgot the present, made him woon his entrie, of forty millions of Florens, called the Nouale aide; nor onely forgot, that bee had twice most 18:10 : of the folemnly sworne to the Generall states, to maintaine and preserve their auncientrights, priviledges, and customes, which they had enjoyed onder their thirty and five Earles before him, Conditionall Princes of those Prouinces: but beginning first to constraine them, and enthrall them by the Spanish Inquifition, and then to impoweriff them by many new deviled and intollerable Impositions; He lastly, by strong hand and maine force, attempted to make him-felfe not onely an absolute Monarch over them, like onto the Kings and Soueraignes of England and France; but Turke-like, to tread onder his feete all their Nationall and fundamentall Lawes, priviledges, and ancient Rights. To effect which, after he had eafily obtained from the Pope a dispensation of his former Oathes (which dispensation was the true cause of all the warre and bloudshed fince then \ and after he had tried what hee could performe, by dividing of their owne Nobility, under the government of his base fifter Margaret of Austria, and the Cardinall Granuile; Hee employed that most mercilesse Spaniard Don Ferdinand Aluarez of Toledo Duke of Alua, followed with a powerfull army of strange Nations: by whom he first saughtered that renowned Captaine the Earle of Egmont, Prince of Gauare; and Philip Montmorency Earle of Horn: made away Montigue, and the Marquis of Bergues; and cut off in those fixe yeares (that Alua gouerned ) of Gentlemen and others, eighteene thousand and fixe hundred, by the hands of the Hangman, befides all his other barbarous murders and massacres. By whose ministery when he could not yet bring his affaires to their wished endes, having it in his hope to worke that by subtlety, which he had failed to perfourme by force: Hee (ent for gouernour his bastard brother Don Iohn of Austria; a Prince of great hope, and very gracious to those people. But hee, vsing the same papall advantage that his predecessors had done: made no scruple to take Oath wpon the Holy Euangelists, to observe the treaty made with the generall states; and to discharge the Low Countries of all Spaniards, and other strangers, therein garrifond. Towards whose Pay and Pasport, the Netherlands strained them-(elues to make payment of fixe hundred thou (and pounds. Which monies received, He suddenly surprised the Citadells of Antwerp and Nemeures: not doubting (being consuspected by the States) to have possest him-selfe of all the maistring places of those Provinces. For whatsoever hee overtly pretended: Hee held in secret a contrary councell with the Secretarie Escouedo, Rhodus, Barlemont, and others, Ministers of the Spanish tyranny; formerly practifed, and now againe intended. But let us now see the effect and end of this periurie, and of all other the Dukes cruelties. First for him-selfe; after hee had murdered so many of the Nobilitie; executed (as a forefaid) eighteene thousand fixe hundred in fixe yeares; and most cruelly slaine Man, Woman, and Childe, in Mecklin, Zurphen, Naerden, and other places: and after bee had confumed fixe and thirtie millions of treasure in sixe yeares; notwithst anding his Spanish vant, That hee would suffocate the Hollanders in their owne butter-barrells, and milke-tubbs: Hee departed the country no otherwise accompanied, than with the curse and detestation of the whole Nation 3 leaving his maisters affaires in a tenfold worse estate, than hee found them at his first arriuall. For Don John, whose haughty conceipt of him selfe ouer-came the greatest difficulties; though his judgement were over-weake to mannage the least: what wonders did his fearefull breach of faith bring forth, other than the King his brothers iealousie and distrust; with the ontimely death that seized him, even in the flowre of his youth. And for Escovedo his (harpe-witted Secretarie, who in his owne imagination had conquered for his Maister both England and the Netherlands; being sent into Spaine ropon some new project, He was at the first arrivall, and before any accesse to the King, by certaine Ruffians appointed by Anthony Peres (though by better warrant than his \ rudely murdered in his owne lodging. Lastly, if wee consider the King of Spaines carriage, his counsaile, and successe in this bufinesse; there is nothing left to the memorie of man more remarkeable. For hee hath paid aboue an hundred Millions, and the lives of aboue foure bundred thou and Christians, for the loffe of all those countries; which, for beauty, gaue place to none; and for revenue, did equall his West Indies; for the loffe of a Nation, which most willingly obeyed him; and who at this day, after forty yeares warre, are in despiable of all his forces become free Estates, and farre more rich and powerfull, than they were, when hee first began to impouer ifb and oppresse them.

Oh by what plots, by what for wearings, betrayings, oppressions, imprisoments, tortures, poylonings, and under what reasons of State, and politique subtelties, have these forenamed Kings, both strangers, and of our owne Nation, pulled the vengeance of GOD vponthem-feliues, vpontheirs, and expontheir prudent ministers! and in the end have brought those things to passe for their enemies, and seene an effect so directly contrarie to all their owne counsailes and cruelties; as the one could never have hoped for themselues; and the other neuer have succeeded; if no such opposition had ever beene made. GOD hath faid it and performed it ever : Perdam fapientiam sapientum, I will destroy the wisdome of the wife.

But what of all this? and to what end doe we lay before the eies of the liuing, the fal and fortunes of the dead: seeing the world is the same that it hath bin; and the children of the present time, wil still obey their parents? It is in the present time, that all the wits of the world are exercised. To hold the times we have, we hold all things lawfull: and either we bope to hold them for ever; or at least we hope , that there is nothing after them to bee hoped for.

For as wee are content to forget our owne experience, and to counterfeit the ignorance of our owne knowledge, in all things that concerne our selues; or prejuade our felues, that GOD hath einen vs letters patents to purfue all our irreligious affections, with a non obstante: so wee neither looke behind vs what hath beene, nor before vs what shall bee. It is true, that the quantitie which wee have, is of the body: wee are by it iogned to the earth: we are compounded of earth; and wee inhabitit. The Heavens are high, farr off and on lear cheable: wee have lense and feeling of corporal things; and of eternall grace, but by revelation. No meruaile then that our thoughts are also earthlie: and it is lesse to bee wondred at, that the words of worthlesemen cannot cleanse them; seeing their doctrine and instruction, whose understanding the Holy Ghost wouch safed to inhabite, haue not performed it. For as the Prophet Esai cryed out long agone, Lord, who hath beleeved our reports? And out of doubt, as Elai complained then for him selfe and others: so are they lesse beleeved, every day after other. For although Religion, and the truth thereof, bee in every mans mouth, yea in the discourse of every woman, who for the greatest num-PauletoThus ber are but Idolls of vanitie: what is it other than an oniver (all disimu-Estive. 10. lation? Wee professe that weeknow GOD: but by workes we deny him. For Beatitude doth not confift in the knowledge of divine things, but in a diuine life: for the Deuills know them better than men. Beatitudo non est divinorum cognitio, sed vita divina. And certainly there is nothing more to bee admired, and more to bee lamented, than the privat contention. the passionate dispute, the personal hatred, and the perpetual warre, masfacres, and murders, for Religion among Christians: the discourse whereof bath to occupied the World, as it bath well neare driven the practife thereof out of the world. Who would not soone resolve, that tooke knowledge but of the religious disputations among men, and not of their lives which dispute, that there were no other thing in their desires, than the purchase of Heauen; and that the World it selfe were but vsed as it ought, and as an Time or place, wherein to repose our selues in passing on towards our celestiall habitation? when on the contrary, befides the discourse & outward profession, the foule hath nothing but hypocrifie. Wee are all (in effect) become Comadians in religion: and while we act in gesture and voice, divine vertues, in all the course of our lines wee renounce our Persons, and the parts wee play. For Charitie, Iustice, and Truth, have but their being in termes, like the Philosophers Materia prima.

Neither is it that wisdome, which Salomon defineth to be the Schoole-Mistresse of the knowledge of God, that hath valuation in the world: it is enough that we give it our good word; but the same which is altogether exercised in the service of the World, as the gathering of riches cheifly, by which we purchase and obtaine honour, with the many respects which attend it. The Preface.

These indeed bee the markes, which ( when wee have bent our consciences to the highest ) wee all shoote at. For the obtaining whereof it is true, that the care is our owne; the care our owne in this life, the perill our owne in the future: and yet when we have gathered the greatest aboundance, wee our selves enjoy no more thereof, than so much as belongs to one man. For therest; Hee that had the greatest wisdome, and the greatest ability that euer man had, hath told we that this is the wfe: When goods increase (fath Salomon) they also increase that eat them; and what good com- Ecologis. 10. meth to the Owners, but the beholding thereof with their eyes ? As for those that devour the rest, and follow vs in faire weather: they againe for lake vs in the first tempest of misfortune, and steere away before the Sea and Winde; leaving vs to the malice of our destinies. Of these, among a thousand examples, I will take but one out of Maister Dannet, and wie his owne words: Whilest the Emperour Charles the fift, after the resignation of his Estates, stayed at Vlushing for winde, to carrie him his last iournie into Spaine; Hee conferred on a time with Seldius, his brother Ferdinands Embatladour, till the deepe of the night. And when Seldius should depart: the Emperour calling for some of his servants, and no bodie answering him (for those that attended upon him, were some gone to their lodgings, and all the rest a sleepe) the Emperour tooke vp the candle him-felfe, and went before Seldius to light him downe the staires; and so did, notwithstanding all the refistance that Seldius could make. And when Hee was come to the flaires foot, He said thus vnto him : Seldius, remember this of Charles the Emperour, when hee shalbe dead and gone, That Him, whome thou hast knowne in thy time enuironed with so many mighty Armies, and Guards of fouldiors, thou hast also seene alone, abandoned, and forfaken, yea euen of his owne domesticall servants. &c. I acknowledge this change of Fortune to proceed from the mighty hand of GOD; which I will by no meanes goe about to withstand.

But you will say that there are some things else, and of greater regard than the former. The first, is the reverend respect that is held of great men, and the Honour done vonto them by all forts of people. And it is true indeed: provided, that an inward love for their instice and piety, accompany the outward worship given to their places and power; without which what is the applause of the Multitude, but as the outcrie of an Heard of Animals, who without the knowledge of any true cause, please them-selves with the noyse they make? For seeing it is a thing exceeding rare, to distinguish Vertue and Fortune: the most impious (if prosperous) have ever beene applauded; the most vertuous (if conprosperous) have ever beene despised. For as Fortunes manrides the Horse, so Fortune her-selferides the Man. Who, when hee is descended and on foote: the Man taken from his Beast, and

The second, is the greatning of our posterity, and the contemplation of their glory whome wee leave behind vs. Certainly, of those which conceive that their (oules departed take any comfort therein, it may truly be (aid of them, which Lactantius spake of certaine Heathen Philosophers, quod sapientes funt in restulta. For when our spirits immortall shalbe once seperate from our mortall bodies, and disposed by GOD; there remaineth in them no other joy of their posterity which succeed, than there doth of pride in that stone, which sleepeth in the Wall of a Kings Palace; nor any other forrow for their pouertie, than there doth of shame in that, which beareth up a Beegars cotage. Nesciunt mortui, etiam sancti, quid agunt viui etiam 3. Aug. de cura eorum filij quia animæ mortuorum rebus viuentium non interfunt. The dead though holy, know nothing of the living, no, not of their owne children: for the foules of those departed, are not conversant with their affaires that remaine. And if wee doubt of Saint Augustine, wee cannot of lob; who tells vis, That wee know not if our fonnes fhalbe honorable: neither shall wee vnderstand concerning them, whether they shalbe of low degree. Which Ecclesiastes also confermeth: Man walketh in a shadow, and disquieteth him-selfe in vaine : hee heapeth vp riches, and cannot tell who thall gather them. The liuing (faith hee) know that they shall die, but the dead know nothing at all, for who can shew vinto man, what shalbe after him vinder the Eulosie 12. Sunne? Heetherefore accompted is among the rest of worldly vanities, to labour and trauaile in the sworld; not knowing after death, swhether a foole or a wife man should enjoy the fruits thereof: which made mee ( saith hee) endeauour euen to abhorre mine owne labour. And what can other menhope, whose blessed or sorrowfull estates after death GOD bathreserued? mans knowledge lying but in his hope; jeeing the Prophet Esai confes-(eth of the elect, That Abraham is ignorant of vs, and !frael knowes vs not. But hereof wee are affured, that the long and darke night of death: of whose following day we shall never behold the dawne, till his returne that hath triumphed oner it \ shall couer ws oner till the world bee no more. After which, and when wee shall againe receive Organs glorified and incorruptible, the feats of Angelicall affections: in so great admiration shall the soules of the bleffed bee exercised, as they cannot admit the mixture of any second or leffe joy nor any returne of foregone and mortall affection towards friends, kindred, or children. Of whome whether wee shall retaine any particular knowledge, or in any fort distinguish them: no man can assure ws; and the wifest men doubt. But on the contrary; If a divine life retaine any of those faculties, which the foule exercifed in amortall body; wee shall not at that of their felicities which remains in the World. No; beetheir estates greater than ever the World gave, wee shall (by the difference knowne vnto vs \ euen detest their consideration. And what soeuer comfort shall remaine of all forepast the same will consist in the charitie, which we exercised living: and in that Pietie, Iustice, and firme Faith, for which it pleased the infinite mercy of GOD to accept of rus, and receive rus. Shall we therefore value honour and riches at nothing? and neglect them, as winnecessarie and vaine? certainlie no. For that infinite wildome of GOD, which hath distinguished his Angells by degrees: which hath given greater and lesse light, and beautie, to Heauenly bodies: which hath made differences betweene beasts and birds: created the Eagle and the slie, the Cedar and the Shrub : and among flones, given the fairest tincture to the Rubie, and the quickest light to the Diamond; hath also ordained Kings, Dukes or Leaders of the people, Magistrates, Indees, and other degrees among men. And as honour is left to posteritie, for amarke and ensigne of the vertue and vnderstanding of their Ancestors: 6, seeing Siracides preferreth Death be-Sirac40, v. 28 fore Beggerie: and that titles, without proportionable estates, fall under the miserable succour of other mens pittie; I accompt it foolishnesse to condemne such a care : Provided, that worldly goods bee well gotten, and that wee raise not our owne buildings out of other mens ruines. For as Plato doth first preferrethe perfection of bodilie health; secondly, the forme and Pla. deleg.1.2. beautie; and thirdly, Diuitias nulla fraude quæsitas: fo Hieremie cries, Woe vnto them that erect their houses by vnrighteousnesse, and torning. their chambers without equitie: and Esai the same, Woeto those that spoyle and were not spoyled. And it was out of the true wildome of Salomon, that bee commandeth vs, not to drinke the wine of vio-Productions, of Oatomon, some community and not to swallow them vp aline, some states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states are states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states are states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states are states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states are states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states are states and states are states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states are states and not to swallow them vp aline, some states are states and not to swallow them vp aline, so the swallow them vp aline, so the swallow them vp aline, so the swallow the whose riches wee couet : for such are the wages ( faith hee ) of every one that is greedy of gaine.

And if wee could affoord our selves but so much leisure as to consider, That hee which hath most in the world, hath, in respect of the world, nothing init: and that he which hath the longest time lent him to live in it, hath yet no proportion at all therein, setting it either by that which is past when wee were not, or by that time which is to come in which wee shall abide for ever: Is ay, if both, to wit our proportion in the world, and our time in the world, differ not much from that which is nothing ; it is not out of any excellency of understanding, that wee so much prise the one, which hath (in effect ) no being: and so much neglect the other, which bath no ending: coueting those mortall things of the world, as if our soules were therein immortall, and neglecting those things which are immortall, as if our selves after the world were

Rich man thinke all fooles, that cannot equall his aboundance; the Reuenger esteeme all negligent, that have not troden downe their opposites; the Policician, all groffe, that cannot merchandize their faith: Tet when wee once come in light of the Port of death, to which all winds drive vs; and when by letting fall that fatall Anchor, which can never be weighed againe, the Nauigation of this life takes end : Then it is I say, that our owne cogitations (those sad and seuere cogitations, formerly beaten from vs by our Health and Felicitie) returne againe, and pay os to the ottermost for all the pleasing passages of our lives past. It is then that wee crie out to GO D for mercie; then, when our selues can no longer exercise cruelty towards others : and it is onely then, that wee are struckenthrough the soule with this terrible fentence, That GOD will not be mockt. For if according to Saint Peter, The righteous scarcely bee saued: and that GOD spared not his Angells : where shall those appeare, who, having ferued their appetites all their lives, presume to thinke, that the severe commandements of the All-powerfull GOD were given but in sport; and that the short breath, which wee draw when death presseth ws, if wee can but fashion it to the sound of Mercy ( without any kinde of satisfaction or amends) is sufficient? O quam multi, saith areuerend Father, Cum hac spe ad eternos labores & bella descendunt : I confesse that it is agreat comfort to our friends, to have it [aid, that wee ended well : for wee all defire (as Balaam did) to die the death of the righteous. But what [hall wee call a disesteeming, an apposing, or (indeed) a mocking of GOD; if those men doe not appole him, disesteeme him, and mocke him, that thinke it enough for GOD, to aske him for givenesse at leisure, with the remainder and last drawing of a malitious breath? For what doe they other-wife, that die this kinde of well-dying, but say onto GOD as followeth? Wee beseech thee O GOD, that all the fallboods, for swearings, and treacheries of our lines past, may be pleasing out thee; that thou wilt for our sakes ( that have had no leisure to doe any thing for thine ) change thy nature (though imposfible) and forget to bee a just GOD; that thou wilt love injuries and oppresions, call ambition wildome, and charity foolishnesse. For I shall prajudice my sonne (which I am resolved not to doe) if I make restitution; and confesse my selfe to have beene consust (which I am too proud to doe ) if I deliver the oppressed. Certainly, these wise worldlings have either found out anew GOD; or have made One: and in all likelihood such a Leaden One, as Lewis the eleuenth ware in his Cappe; which, when he had caused any that he feared or hated to be killed thee would take it from his head and kiffeit: befeeching it to pardon him this one euill act more, and it should be the last, which, (as at other times ) hee did; when by the practife of a Cardinall and a falfified Sacrament, he caused the Earle of Armagnack to bee stabbed to death mockeries indeed fit to be weed towards a Leaden, but not towards the euer-liuing GOD. But of this composition are all the deuous louers of the world, that they feare all that is durelesse and ridiculous: they feare the plots and practises of their opposites, and their pery whisperings: they seare the opinions of men which beat but upon shadowes: they state and or they feare the prosperous and unprosperous, be they friends or Kings yeathey dive under water, like Ducks, at every pebble stone, that is but throwne towards them by a powerfull hand: and on the contrary, they show an obstinate and Gant-like valour, against the terrible independents of the ship-powerfull GOD: yeathey show themselves gods against GOD, and shave towards men; towards men whose bodies and consciences are alike voten.

Now for the rest : If wee truly examine the difference of boch conditions; to wit of the rich and mighty, whome wee call fortunate; and of the poore and oppressed, whome we account wretched: wee shall finds the happinesse of the one, and the milerable estate of the other, so tied by GOD to the rery instant, and both so subject to interchange (wirnesse the suddaine downefall of the greatest Princes, and the speedy oprising of the meanest persons) as the one hath nothing so certaine, whereof to boast; nor the other so oncertaine, whereof to bewaile it selfe. For there is no man so assured of his honour, of his riches, health, or life; but that hee may be deprived of either or all, the very next houre or day to come. Quid vesper vehat, incertum est, What the cuening will bring with it, it is vncertaine. And yet yee cannot tell (faith Saint Iames) what shalbe to morrow. Jamas Is To day he is fet vp, and to morrow hee shall not bee found for hee is turned into dust, and his purpose perisheth. And although the aire which compasset adversitie, be very obscure: yet therein wes better discerne GOD, than in that shinning light which enuironeth worldly glorie; through which, for the clearenesse thereof, there is no vanitie, which efcapeth our fight. And let aduer sitie seeme what it will; to happie men, ridiculous, who make them-selues merrie at other mens misfortunes; and to those under the crosse greinous : yet this is true, That for all that is past, to the very instant, the portions remaining are equall to either. For see it that wee have lived many yeares, and (according to Salomon) in them all wee have reloyced; or bee it that wee baue measured the same length of daies, and therein have ever-more forrowed: yet looking backe from our prefent being, we find both the one and the other, to wit, the iou and the woe, ayled out of fight; and death, which doth pursue ws and hold ws in chace, from our infancie, hath gathered it. Quicquid atatis retro est, mors tenet: What-so-euer of our age is past, death holds it. So as whoso-euer hee bee, to whome Fortune hath beene a seruant, and the Time a friend: let him but take the accompt of his memory (for wee have no other keeper of our pleasures past) and truelie examine what it hath reserved, either of beauty and youth, or foregone delights; what it hath saued, that it might last, of his dearest affections, or of what ever else the amorous Spring-time gaue his thoughts of contentment, then unualuable; and hee (ball finde that all the art which his elder yeares have, can draw no other vapour out of these dissolutions, than heavie, sceret, and sad fighes. Hee Ib.ill finde nothing remaining, but those forrowes, which grow up after our falt-thringing youth; over-take it, when it is at a stand; and over-topit rutterly, when it beginnes to wither: in lo much as looking backe from the very instant time, and from our now being; the poore, diseased, and captive creature, but as little sence of all his former miseries and paines; as hee, that is most blest in common opinion, hath of his fore-passed pleasures and delights. For yohat-so-ener is cast behind us, is instnothing : and what is to come, decciptfull hope hath it. Omnia qua euentura funt, incerto iacent. Onely those few black Swannes I must except: who hauing had the grace to value worldly evanities at no more than their owne price; doe, by retayning the comfortable memorie of a well-acted life, behold death without dread, and the grave without feare; and embrace both, as necessary guides to endlesse glorie.

For my selfe, this is my consolation, and all that I can offer to others, that the forrowes of this life, are but of two forts; whereof the one hath respect to GOD; the other, to the World. In the first wee complaine to GOD against our selves, for our offences against bim; and confesse, Ettu iustus es in omnibus quæ venerunt super nos, And thou O'Lord art iust in all that hath befallen vs. In the second spee complaine to our felues against GOD: as if hee had done we wrong, either in not giving vs worldly goods and honours, answering our appetites: or for taking them againe from vs, having had them; forgetting that humble and just acknowledgment of lob, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken. To the first of which Saint Paul hath promised blessednesse; to the second, death. And out of doubt hee is either a foole or congratefull to GOD, or both, that doth not acknowledge, how meane so-euer his estate bee, that the Same is yet farre greater, than that which GOD oweth him; or doth not acknowledge, how sharpe so-euer his afflictions bee, that the same are yes farre lese, than those which are due onto him. And if an Heathen wife man call the advertities of the world but tributa vivendi, the tributes of living: a wife Christian man ought to know them, and beare them, but as the tributes of offending. He ought to beare them man-like, and resolvedly. not as those whining souldiors doe, qui gementes sequentur imperatore.

For feeing God, who is the Author of all our tragedies, hath written one for ws, and appointed w all the parts we are to play; and hath not, in their diftribution, beene partiall to the most might princes of the world; That gaue wino Datius the part of the greatest Emperour, and the part of the most missing water of an Enemie, to quench the great drought of death; That appointed Baiazet to play the Gran Signior of the Turkes in the morning, and in the same day the Footstoole of Tamerlane ( both which parts Valerian had also playd , beeeing taken by Sapores) that made Bellisarius play the most victorious Captaine, and lastly the part of a blinde beggar; of which examples many thousands may be produced: why should other men, who are but of the least wormes, complaine of wrongs? Certainly there is no other account to be made of this ridiculous world, than to resolue, That the change of fortune on the great Theater is but as the change of garments on the leffe. For when on the one and the other enery man weares but his owne skin; the Players are all alike. Now if any man, out of weaknes, prife the passages of this world other wise (for faish Petrarch, Magni ingenii est reuocare mentem a senfibus ) it is by reason of that conhappie fantase of ours, which forgeth in the braines of Man all the miseries (the corporall excepted) whereunto hee is subject: Thereinit is, that Misfortune and Advertitie worke all that they worke. For seeing Death, in the end of the Play, takes from all, what soener Fortune or Force takes from any one: it were a foolish madnes in the shipwracke of worldly things, where all finkes but the Sorrow, to faue it. That were, as Seneca (aith, Fortuna fuccumbere, quod triffius est omni fato, to fall vnder Fortune, of all other the most miserable destinie.

But it is now time to found a retrait; and to defire to be excused of this long pursuit: and withall, that the good intent, which hath moued me to draw the picture of time pass (which we call Historic) in so large a table, may also be accepted in place of a better reason.

The examples of divine providence, every where found (the first divine. Histories being nothing else hue a continuation of such examples) have personal and to fetch my beginning from the beginning of all things; to wit, Creation. For though the serve glorrous actions of the Almightie be so neare, and (as it were) linked together, that the one necessarily implyeth the other: Creation, inferring Providence: (for what Father for saketh the child that he hath begotten?) and Providence presupposing Creation) Tet many of those that have seemed to excell in worldy wisedome, have gone about to dissoyne this coherence; the Epicure denying both Creation & Providence, hue granting that the world had a beginning; the Aristotelian granting Providence, but denying both the Creation and the Beginning.

Now although this dollrine of Faith, southing the Creation in time, for by Faith we vnderstand, that the world was made by the word of Godyle too weighty a work for Artistoiles rotten ground to heare vop, whon which he hath snow with said mighounded the Defences & Fortresses of all his Verball Dollrine: Tet that the necessitie of instinct power, and the worlds beginning, and the impossibility of the contrary even in the independent of Naturals reason, wherein hee beleeved, had not better instormed him; it is greatly to be maruailed at. And it is no lesse strange, that those men which are desirous of knowledge ( leing Aristotle hath fayled in this maine poynt; and taught litle other than termes in the rest ) have so retrencht their mindes from the following and overtaking of truth, and so absolutely subjected them-selves to the law of those Philosophicall principles; as all contrary kinde of teaching. in the fearch of causes, they have condemned either for phantasticall. or curious. But doth it follow, that the positions of Heathen Philosophers, are rundoubted grounds and principles indeed, because so called? Or that ipfi dixerunt, doth make them to bee such ? certainly no. But this is true, That where naturall reason bath built any thing so strong against it selfe, as the same reason can hardly assaile it, much lesse batter it downe: the same in every question of Nature, and finite power, may bee approved for a fundamentall law of humane knowledg. For faith Charron in his Booke of wisdome, Tout proposition humaine a autant d'authorite que l'autre, fi la raison n'on fait la difference : Euery humane proposition hath equall authoritie, if reason make northe difference, the rest being but the fables of principles. But hereof how shall the wpright and conpartiall judgment of man give a sentence, where opposition and examination are not admitted to give in evidence? And to this purpose it was well said of Lastantius, Sapientiam sibi adimunt, qui sine vllo iudicio inuenta maiorum probant, & ab aliis pecudum more ducuntur: They negle& their owne wisdome, who without any judgment approue the invention of those that fore-went them; and suffer them-selves, after the manner of Beafts, to beeled by them. By the advantage of which flouth and dullnesse, ignorance is now become so powerfull a Tyrant: as it hath set true Philosophie, Phisick, and Divinity, in a Pillory; and written ouer the first, Contra negantem Principia; ouer the second, Vertus specifica; and over the third, Ecclefia Romana.

But for my felfe, I shall never bee perswaded, that GOD hath shut of all light of Learning within the lanthorne of Atistotles braines; or that it mas euer said vonto him, as vonto Esdras, Accendam in Corde tuo Lucernam intellectus: that GOD hath given invention but to the Heathen; and that they onely have invaded Nature, and found the strength and bottome thereof; the same nature having consumed all her store, and left nothing of price to after-ages. That thefe and thefe bee the causes of these and thefe effects, Time hath taught vs; and not reason: and so hath experience, without Art. The Cheefe-wife knoweth it as well as the Philosopher, that sowre Runnet doth coagulate her milke into a curde. But if wee aske a reason of this cause, why the sowrenesse doth it? whereby it doth it? and the manner how? I thinke that there is nothing to bee found in vulgar Philosophie, to satisfie this and many other like vulgar questions. But man to cover his ignorance in the least things, who cannot give a true reason The Preface.

for the Graffe winder his feete, sohvit should bee greenerather thenred, or of any other colour: that could never yet discover the may and reason of Natures working, in those which are farre lesse noble creatures than himlelfe; who is farre more Noble than the Heavens them (elves: Man ( (aith Salomon) that can hardly different the things that are youn the salomon, t.o. Earth, and with great labour finde out the things that are before vs; that hath so short a time in the world, as hee no sooner beginnes to learne, than to die; that hath in his memory but borrowed knowledge; in his onderstanding, nothing trulie; that is ignorant of the Essence of his owne soule, and which the wifest of the Naturalists (if Aristotle bee hee) could never To much as define, but by the Action and effect, telling we what it workes (which all men know as well as hee) but not what it is, which neither hee, nor any else, doth know, but GOD that created it; (for though I were perfect, yet I know not my foule, faith Iob. ) Man I fay, that is but an Idiot in the next cause of his owne life, and in the cause of all the actions of his life: will (notwithstanding) examine the art of GOD increating the World; of GOD who (faith Iob) is so excellent as weeknowe him not; and examine the beginning of the worke, which had end before Job. 26. Man-kind had a beginning of being. Hee will disable GODS power to make a world without matter to make it of. He will rather give the mothes of the Aire for a cause; cast the worke on necessity or chance; bestow the honour thereof on Nature; maket wo powers, the one to be the Author of the Matter, the other of the Forme; and lastly, for want of a worke-man, haue it Eternall: which latter opinion Aristotle, to make him-selfethe Author of a new Doctrine, brought into the World: and his Sectatours have mainetained it; paratiac conjurati, quos seguuntur, Philosophorum animis inuictis opiniones tueri. For Hermes, who lived at once with, or foone after, Moses, Zoroaster, Museus, Orpheus, Linus, Anaximenes, Anaxagoras, Empedocles, Meliflus, Pherecydes, Thales, Cle-Latt.5. anthes, Pythagoras, Plato, and many others (whose opinions are exaustitely gathered by Steuchius Eugubinus) found in the necessitie of invincible reason, One eternal and infinite Being, to be the Parent of the vniversall. Horum omnium sententia quamuis sit incerta, eodem tamen spectat, vt Prouidentiam vnam effe consentiant: fiue enim Natura, fiue Ather, fine Ratio, fine mens, fine fatalis necessitas, fine dinina Lex; idem elle quod a nobis dicitur Deus: All these mens opinions ( saith Lastantius ) though vncertaine, come to this; That they agree vpon one Prouidence; whether the same bee Nature, or light, or Reason, or understanding, or destinie, or divine ordinance; that it is the same which we call GOD. Certainely, as all the Rivers in the world, though they have divers rifings, and divers runnings; though they some times hide them-selves for a while under ground, and seeme to be lost in Sea-like

Lakes; doe at last finde, and fall into the great Ocean: so after all the searches that humaine capacitie hath; and after all Philosophicall contemplation and curiositie; in the necessitie of this infinite power, all the reason of man ends and dissolues it selfe.

As for others, and first touching those, which conceive the matter of the World to have been eternall, and that God did not create the world ex nihilo, but ex materia præexistente: the Supposition is so weake, as is hardly worth the answering. For (Jaith Eusebins) Mish videntur qui hoc die Euglis ideprop. cunt, fortunam quoque Deo annectere. They seeme unto me, which shape, been as if God had not found this first matter by chance, He had neither been Author, nor Father, nor Creator, nor Lord of the Vniversall. For were the Matter or Chaos, eternall: it then followes. That either this supposed Matter did sit is selfs to God; or God, accommodate himself exo the matter. For the first; it is impossible, that things without sense could proportion themselwes to the Workmans will. For the second; it were horrible to conceive of God, That as an Artisseer be applied himselfe, according to the proportion of Matter which he lighted copon.

Bue let it be Jupposed, That this matter had been made by any Power, not Omnipotent, and infinitely wise: I rosuld gladly learne bow it came to passe that the same to passe that the same to passe that mass omnipotent and infinitely wise: and no more, nor no less, than served to receive the forme of the Vniversall. For, had it wanted any thing of what was sufficient; then must it begranted, That God created out of nothing so much of new matter, as served to sinish the work of the World: Or had there beene more of this matter, than sufficiency than did God dissue & annihilate what-sower remained and was superstuous. And this must everyreas mable soule confesse, That it is the same worke of God alone, to create any thing out of nothing, And by the same are and power, and by none other, can those things, or any part of that eternall matter, bee againe changed into Nothing; by which these things, that once were nothing, obtained a beginning of beine.

Againe, to say that this matter was the cause of it selfe; this, of all other, were the greatest idiotisme. For if it were the cause of it selfe at any time; then there was also a time when it selfe was not: at which time of not being, it is eastic enough to conceive, that it could neither produce it selfe, wor any thing else. For so be, and not to be, at once, is impossible. Nihil autism selfus mercacit, neq; seipsum componit corpus. There is nothing that doth præcede it selfe, neither doe bodies compound themselves.

For the rest; Those that saine this matter to be eternall, must of necessities tonsels, that Infinite cannot be separate from Eternitie. And then had insi-

nite matter left no place for infinite forme, but that the first matter was finite, the forme which it received proves it. For conclusion of this part; who-so-euer will make choyce, rather to beleeve in eternall deformitie, or in eternall dead matter, than in eternall light and eternall life: let eternall death be his reward. For it is a madnesse of that kind, as wanteth tearmes to expresse it. For what reason of man (whome the curse of presumption hath not stupisted ) hath doubted, That infinite power ( of which wee can comprehend but a kind of shadow, quia comprehensio est intra terminos, qui infinito repugnant) bath anything wanting in it selfe, either for matter or forme; yea for as many worlds (if such had beene GODS will) as the Sea hath sands? For where the power is without limitation; the worke hath no other limitation, than the workmans will. Yea Reasonit selfe findes it more easie for infinite power, to deliver from it (elfe a finite world, without the helpe of matter prepared; than for a finite man, a foole and dust, to change the forme of matter made to his hands. They are Dionyfius his words, Deus in vna existentia omnia præhabet: and againe Esse omnium est ipsa Diuinitas, omne quod vides, & quod non vides, to wit, causaliter, or inbetter tearmes, non tamquam forma, sed tan. quam causa vniuersalis. Neither hath the world oniversall closed op all of GOD. For the most parts of his workes ( faith Stracides ) are hid. Neither can the depth of his wisdome be opened, by the glorious work car, 16.20, 21. of the world: which never brought to knowledge all it can; for then were his infinite power bounded, and made finite. And hereof it comes, That we feldome entitle GOD the all-shewing, or the all-willing; but the allmighty, that is, infinitely able.

But now for those, who from that ground, That out of nothing nothing is made, inferre the Worlds eternity; and yet not fo faluage therein, as those are, which give an eternall being to dead matter: It is true, if the mord (nothing) beetaken in the affirmative; and the making, imposed ropon Naturall Agents and finite power; That out of nothing, nothing is made. But seeing their great Doctour Aristotle him selfe confesseth, quod omnes antiqui decreuerunt quasi quoddam rerum principium, ipsum infinitum, That all the ancient decree a kind of beginning, and the same to bee infinite: and a little after, more largely and plainely, Principium eius est nullum, sed ipsum omnium cernitur esse princi-stem, Eng. 1.2. pium, ac omnia complecti ac regere: it is strange that this Philosopher, philosopher, philosopher, with his followers, should rather make choice out of falsbood, to conclude fally; than out of truth, to resolue truely. For if wee compare the world Vniuer [all, and all the vnmeasurable Orbes of Heaven, and those merueilous bodies of the Sunne, Moone, and Statres, with ipsum infinitum: it may truely bee said of them all, which him-selfe affirmeth of his imaginary Materia prima, That they are neither quid, quale, nor quantum; and there-ere-Love foreto bring finite (which hath no proportion with infinite) out of infinite ( qui destruit omnem proportionem ) is no wonder in GOD Spower. And therefore Anaximander, Meliffus, and Empedocles, call the world runiuersall, but particulam Vniuersitatis and infinitatis, aparcell of that which is the universalitie and the infinitie it selfe; and Plato, but a shadow of GOD. But the other, to proue the worlds eternitie, rurgeth this Maxime, That, A futbeient and effectuall cause being granted, an answerable effect thereof is also granted: inferring, that GOD being for ever a sufficient and effectuall cause of the world, the effect of the cause should also have beene for ever; to wit, the world oniversall. But what a strang mockerie is this in so great a Maister, to confesse a sufficient and effectuall cause of the world, (to wit an almight, GOD) in bis Anti cedent; and the same GOD to be aGOD restrained in his conclusion; to make GOD free in power, and bound in will; able to effect, vnable to determine; able to make all things, and yet mable to make chouse of the time when? For this were impiously to resolue of GOD, as of naturall neces. fitie; which hath neither choice, nor will, nor conderstanding; which cannot but work matter being present; as fire, to burne things combustible.

Againe he thus diffuteth, That every Agent which can worke, and doth not worke: if it after-ward worke, it is either thereto moved by it selfe, or by some-what else; and so it passeth from power to Act. But GOD (faith he ) is immouable, and is neither moved by him-selfe, nor by any other; but being alwaies the same doth alwaies worke : Whence he concludeth, if the world were caused by GOD, that he was for ever the cause thereof; and therefore eternall. The answer to this is very easie, For that GODS perfourming in due time that, which hee eucr determined at length to performe, doth not argue any alteration or change, but rather constancie in him. For the same action of his will, which made the world for ever, did also with-hold the effect to the time ordained. To this answere, init selfe sufficient, others adde further, that the patterne or Image of the World may be faid to be eternall : which the Platonicks call, spiritualem mundum; and doe in this fort distinguish the Idaa, and Creation in time. Spiritu. Mer. Ficin.de, alis ille mundus, mundi huius exemplar, primumque Dei opus, vica immori. Att. aquali est Architecto; suit semper cum illo, eritque sumper. Mundus autem corporalis, quod secundum opus est Dei, deceditiam ab opifice ex parte vna, quia non fuit semper; retinet alteram, quia sit femper futurus. That representative, or the intentionall world ((aythey) the fampler of this visible world, the first worke of GOD, was aqually ancient with the Architect; for it was for ever with him, and euer thalbe. This materiall world, the second worke or creature of GOD, doth differ from the worker in this, That it was not from euerlasting, and in this it doth agree, that it shall be for euer to come. The Preface.

The first point, That it was not for ever, all Christians confesse: The other they understand no other-wise, than that after the consummation of this World, there shalbe a new Heaven and a new Earth; without any new creation of matter. But of the ethings we need not here fland to a que: though such opinions bee not comportby the propounding; in this consideration, of an eternall and puchangeable cause, producing a changeable and temporall effect. Touching which point Proclus the Platonist disputeth, That the compounded effence of the World (and because compounded, therefore distipable ) is continued, and knit to the Divine Being, by an individual and inseperable power, flowing from divine unitie; and that the Worlds naturall appetite of GOD sheweth, that the same proceedeth from a goodnesse and understanding divine; and that this wereue, by which the World is continued and knit together, must be infinite, that it may infinitely and euerlastingly continue and preserve the same. Which infinite Vertue, the finite World ( (aith hee ) is not capable of , but receiveth it from the divine infinite, according to the temporall Nature it hath, successively every moment by little and little; even as the whole Materiall World is not altogether: but the abolished parts are departed by small degrees, and the parts yet to come, doe by the same small degrees succeed; as the shadow of a tree in a River, seemeth to have continued the same a long time in the mater, but it is perpetually renewed, in the continual ebbing and flowing thereof.

But to returne to them, which denying that ever the World had any beginning, withall denie that ever it shall have any end; and to this purpose affirme, That it was never heard, never read, never feene, no not by any reason perceiued, that the Heauens haue euer suffered corruption; or that they appeare any way the Elder by continuance; or in any fort other-wife than they were; which had they beene subject to finall corruption, some change would have beene discerned in so long a time : To this it is answered, That the little change as yet perceived, doth rather prove their newneffe, and that they have not continued so long; than that they will continue for ever as they are. And if coniecturall arguments may receive answer by coniectures: it then seemeth, that some alteration may be found. For either Aristotle, Plinie, Strabo, Beda, Aquinas, and others, were grossely Arist. Met. 2. mistaken : or else those parts of the world, lying within the burnt Zone, stabil 3. Beda were not in elder times habitable, by reason of the Sunnes heat; neither decarations tem. were the Seas, under the Equinoctiall, nauigable. But weeknow by 1. P. q. 102. experience, that those Regions, so situate, are filled with people, and exceeding temperate; and the Sea, over which wee Nauigate, passable enough. Wee read also many Histories of deluges: and how that in the time of Phaeton, divers places in the world were burnt out, by the Sunnes roiolent heat.

But in a Word, this observation is exceeding feeble. For we know it for certaine., That stone-walls, of matter moldring and friable, have stood, or threee thousand yeares: that many things have beene digged up out of the earth, of that depth, as supposed to have beene buried by the general stoud; without any alteration either of substance or figure, yea it is believed, and it is very probable, that the gold which is daily sound in Mynes, and Rocks, under ground, was created together with the Earth.

And if bodies elementarie, and compounded, the eldest times have not inuaded and corrupted: what great alteration should wee looke for in Celestiall and quintessential bodies? And yet wee have reason to thinke, that the Sunne, by whose helpe all Creatures are generate, doth not in these latter Ages assist Nature, as here-to-fore. We have neither Gyants, such as the eldest world had; but all things in generall are reputed of lesse wertue, which from the Heavens receive evertue. Whence, if the nature of a Presacc would permit a larger discourse; wee might easily setch store of proofe; as that this world shall at length have end, as that once it had beginning.

And I see no good aunswer that can be made to this objection: If the World were eternall; why not all thinges in the World Eternall? If there were no first, no cause, no Father, no Creator, no incomprehensible wisdome, but that every Nature had been a-like eternall; and Man more rationall than every other Nature: Why had not the éternall reason of Man, provided for his eternall beeing in the World? For if all were equall: why not equall conditions to all? why should heavenly bodies live for ever; and the bodies of Menrotte and die.?

Againe, who was it that appointed the Earth to keepe the center, and gane Order that it [hould hang in the Aire.: that the Sunne [hould trauaile betweene the Tropicks, and neuer exceed those boundes, nor faile to performe that Progresse once in eurry yeare.: the Moone to line by borrowed light.: the first shares (according to common opinion) to be fashned like Nailes in a Cart-wheele.; and the Planess to wander at their pleasure? Orthone of these bad power over other: was it out of Charity and Love., that the Sunne by his perpetual travaile within those two Circles, hath-wisted, given light who and are leived all parts of the Earth, and the Creatures therein, by turnes and times? Out of doube, if the Sunne have of his owne accord kept this course in all eternitie.: He may instly be called eternall charity, and everlassing Love. The same may be saide of all the Stars: who being all of them most large and cleare fountains.

The Preface.

of vertue and operation, may also bee called eternall vertues: the Earth may be called evernall patience; the Moone, an eternall borrower and begger; and Man of all other the most miserable, eternally mortall. And what were this, but to believe againe in the old Play of the gods? Tea in more gods by Millions, than ever Hestodus dreampt of. But in steed of this mad follie, wee see see it well enough with our feeble and mortall eyes: and the eyes of our reason descense it better; That the Sunne, Moone, Starres, and the Earth, are limited, bounded, and constrained: themselves they have not constrained, nor could. Omne determination causam habet aliquam efficientem, quæ illud determinauerir, Every thing bounded hath some efficient cause, by which it is bounded.

Now for Nature; As by the ambiguity of this name, the schoole of Aristotle hath both commended many errours winto ps, and sought also thereby to obscure the glory of the high Moderator of all things, shining in the Creation, and in the governing of the World: (oif the best definition bee taken out of the second of Aristotles phisicks, or primo de Calo, or out of the fifth of his Metaphyficks; I (ay that the best is but nominall, and seruing onely to difference the beginning of Naturall motion, from Artificiall: which yet the Academicks open better, when they call it A Seminary strength, infused into matter by the Soule of the World: who give the first place to Prouidence, the second to Fate, and but the third to Nature. Providentia (by which they wnd rstand GOD) dux & caput; Fatum, medium ex prouidentia prodiens; Natura postremum. But bee it what hee will, or bee it any of these (GOD excepted) or participating of all : yet that it hash choice or under struding ( both which are necessarily in the cause of all things) no man hash avowed. For this is con answerable of Lactantius: Is autem facit aliquid, qui aut voluntatem facier di tott de ra habet, aut scientiam; Hee onely can bee said to bee the doer of a Bollinete thing, that hath either will or knowledge in the doing it.

But the will and science of Nature, are in the sewords truely express by siminia. Ficinus: Potest volique Natura, vel per diuersa media, vel ex diuers sein. materis, diuersa facere: sublara vero mediorum materiarumque diuersitate, vel vnicum vel similimum operatur, neque potest quando adest materia non operari; It is the power of Nature by diuersity of meanes, or out of diuersity of meanes, and the diuersity of matter; it then workes but one or the like worke; neither can it but worke, matter beeing present. Now if Nature made choyce of diversity of matter, to worke all these variable workes of Heauen and Earth; it had then both vndersanding and will; it had counsale to beginne; teasions the surface of the surface of matter of Heauen; or all of the matter of Earth. And if we grant Nature test, drive whis will, and this winderstanding, this counsaile, reason, and power: Cur Natura potius, quā Deus nominetur? Why should we then call such a cause rather Nature, than God? God, of whom all men have notion, and give the wish. I de sies it and highest place to Divine power: Omnes homines notionen december 32. The should be should be nant. And this I fay in flort; that it is a true. effect of true reason in man (were there. no authority more binding than reason) to acknowledge and adore the first and most jublime power. Vera Philotophia, eit ascentus ab his que shunt, & oruntur, & occidunt, ad ea que veresunt, & semper cadem: True Philosophy, is an ascending from the things which slow,

For the rest; I do also account it not the meanest, but an impiety monstrous. to confound God and Nature ; be it but in tearmes. For it is God, that only disposeth of all things according to his owne will; and maketh of one Earth; Vellels of honor and dilhonor. It is Nature that can diffuse of nothing, but according to the will of the matter wherein it worketh. It is God, that commandeth all: It is Nature that is obedient to all. It is God that doth good conto all, knowing and louing the good he doth: It is Nature, that secondarily doth also good, but it neither knoweth nor loueth the good it doth. It is God, that hath all things in himselfe: Nature, nothing in it selfe. It is God, which is the Father, and hath begotten all things : It is Nature, which is begotten by all thinges; in which it lineth and laboureth; for by it lelfe it exilecth not. For shall we say, that it is out of affection to the earth, that heamy things fall towards it? Shall we call it Reason, which doth conduct every River into the falt Sea? Shall we tearme it knowledge in fire that makes it to consume combustible matter? If it be Affection, Reason, and Knowledge in thefe: by the same Affection, Reason, and knowledge it is that Nature worketh. And therfore feeing all things work as they do, (call it by form, by Nature, or by what you please) yet because they work by an impulsion, which they cannot refift; or by a faculty, infused by the supremest power: we are neither to wonder at, nor to worlhip, the faculty that worketh, nor the Creature wherein it worketh. But herein lies the wonder. & to him is the worship due, who hath created such a Nature in things, & such a faculty, as neither knowing it (elfe, the matter wherein it worketh, nor the vertue and power which it hath; doth yet work all things to their last and ottermost perfection. And therefore every reasonable man, taking to himselfe for a ground that which is granted by all Antiquity, and by al men truly learned that ever the world had; to wit; That there is a power infinit, and eternall, (which also necessity doth prone conto cos, without the helpe of Faith; and Reason, without the force of Authoritie) all things doe as easily follow which have beene delivered by divine letters, as the waters of arunning River doe successively pursue each other from the first fountaines.

The Preface.

This much I say it is , that Reason it selfe bath taught cos : and this is tall 1.4 ca. the beginning of knowledge. Sapientia pracedit, Religio sequitur: quia pienta. prius est Deum scire, consequens colere; Sapience goes before, Religion followes: because it is first to know God, and then to worship him. This Sapitience Plato calleth, absoluti boni scientiam, The science of the absolute good: and another, cientiam rerum primarum, sempiternarum, perpetuarum. For Faith ( faith Isidore ) is not extorted by piolence; but by reafon and examples per swaded; fides nequaquam viextorquetur; fed 1atione & exemplis fuadetur. I confesse it, That to inquire further, as of the essence of God, of his power, of his Art, and by what meane He created the world: Or of his secret judgment, and the causes; is not an effect of Reason: Sed cum ratione infaniunt, but they grow mad with reason, that inquire after it. For as it is no shame nor dishonor ( faith a French Author) de faire arrest au but qu'on nasceu surpasser, For a man to rest himselfe there, where he finds it impossible to passe on further: so what soener is beyond, and out of the reach of true reason, It acknowledgeth it to be so; as winder standing it (elfe not to be infinite, but according to the Name and Nature it hath, 200 to be a Teacher, that best knowes the end of his own Art. For seeing both Realectudurous fon and Necessity teach vs (Reason, which is pars divini spiritus in corpus national humanu merfi )that the world was made by a power infinite; and yet how ening with it was made, it cannot teach os : and feeing the fame Reason and Necessity softe. make vs know, that the same infinit power is every wher in the world, and yet how every where it canot informe vs:our beleefe hercof is not weakned, but greatly strengthned by our ignorance; because it is the same Reason that tels vs. That (uch a Nature cannot be faid to be God, that can be in all conceived by man.

I have been— aircady over long, to make any large discourse either of the parts of the following Story, or in mine owne excuse: especially in the excuse of this or that passes; seeing the whole is weekeding weake and desettive—. Among the grosest, the consutable division of the bookes. I could not know how to excuse, bad I not been directed to inlarge the building after the four-dation was laid, and the sirst part sinished. All men know that there is no great Art in the deviding ewelly of those things, which are subject to number and measure. For the rest, it suites well enough with a great many Bookes of this age, which speaked to much, and yet say little; Ipsi nobis sutto suddiction, we are shollen away from our selves, setting a high price on all that is our owne. But hereof, though a late good Writer, make complaint, yet shall it not lay hold on me, because I beleeve as he dooth sthat who so thinkes himself then wisest man, is but a poore—and miserable ignorant. Those that are the bess men of war, against all the runnities and sookries of the World, doe alwaies keepe the strongest guards against themselves, to defend them from themselves, from selfe love, selfe estimation, and selfe opinion.

Generally concerning the order of the worke, I have onely taken counsaile from the Argument. For of the Affyrians, which after the downefall of Babel take opthe first pare and were the first great Kings of the World, there came little to the view of posterity: some few enterprises, greater in fame than faith, of Ninus and Semiramis excepted.

It was the flory of the Hebrewes, of all before the Olympiads, that ouercame the confuming dilease of time; and preserved it selfe, from the every cradie and beginning to this day : and yet not so entire, but that the large discourses thereof ( to which in many Scriptures wee are referred ) are no sob, refound. The Fragments of other Stories, with the actions of those Kings and Princes which shot op here and there in the same time. I am druentorelite by way of digression: of which we may lay with Virgil.

Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto; They appeare here and there floting in the great gulfe of time.

To the same first Ages do belong the report of many Inventions therein found, and from them derived to ws; though most of the Authors Names, have perifibed in fo long a Nauigation. For those Ages had their Lawes; they had diverfity of Government; they had Kingly rule; Nobilitie, Pollicie in warre; Nauigation; and all, or the most of needfull Trades. To (peake therefore of these (seeing in a generall Historie we should have left a great deale of Nakednesse, by their onission ) it cannot properly bee called a diere fion. True it is that I have also made many others: which if they shall be layd to my charge, I must cast the fault into the great heare of humane error. For feeing wee digreffe in all the wayes of our line: yen feeing the life of man is nothing elfe but digression; I may the better bee excufed, in writing their lives and actions. I am not altogether ignorant in the Lappes of Hiltoric, and of the Kindes.

The same hash beene saught by many; but by no man better, and with greater breuity, then by that excellent learned Gentleman Sir Francis Bacon. Christian Lawes are also taught ous by the Prophets and Apostles; and eurry day preacht onto os. But wee still make large digressions : yea the teachers them selves do not (in all) keepe the path which they poynt out to others.

For the rest; after such time as the Persians bid wrested the Empire from the Chaldwans, and had raifed a great Monarchie, producing Actions of more importance than were elfe-where to be found: it was agreeable to the Order of Story, to attend this Empire; while tit (o florished, that the affaires of the nations adjoyning had reference there-outo. The like observance was to bee vsed towards the fortunes of Greece, when they apaine began to get ground poon the Persians, as also towards the affaires of The Preface.

As for the Medes, the Macedonians, the Sicilians, the Carthaginians and other Nations, who refifted the beginnings of the former Empires, and afterwards became but parts of their composition and enlargement : it seemed best to remember what was knowne of them from ther severall beginnings. in such times and places, as they in their flourishing estates opposed those Monarchies; which in the end wallowed them up. And herein I have followed the best Geographers: who seldome give names to those small brookes. whereof many, toyned together, make great Rivers; till such time as they become united, and runne in a maine streame to the Ocean Sea. If the Phrase be weake, and the Stile not every-where like it selfe: the first showes their legitimation and true Parent; the second, will excuse it selfe woon the Variety of Matter. For Virgill, who worte his Ecloques, gracili auena, weed stronger pipes when he sounded the warres of Acneas. It may also bee layd to my charge that I role divers Hebrew words in my first booke. and else where: in which lagunage others may thinke, and Imy-selfe acknowledge it., that I am altogether ignorant : but it is true, that some of them I finde in Montanus, others in lattaine Carecter in S. Senensis, and of the rest I have borrowed the interpretation of some of my learned friends. But say I had beene beholding to neither, yet were it not to bee wondred at hauing had a eleuen yeares leasure, to attaine the knowledge of that, or of any other tongue; How-fo-euer, I know that it will bee faid by many, That I might have beene more pleasing to the Reader, if I had written the Story of mine owne times; having beene permitted to draw water as neare the Well-head as another. To this I answere, that who-so ever in writing a moderne Historie, shall follow truth too neare the heeles, it may happily strike out his teeth. There is no Mistresse or Guide, that hath led her followers and feruants into greater miseries. Hethat goes after her too farre off, loosetb her fight, and loofeth him-felfe: and hee that walkes after her at a midle diftance; I know not whether I should call that kind of course Temper or Basenesse. It is true, that I never travailed after mens opinions, when I might have made the best wse of them : and I have now too few daies remayning to imitate those, that either out of extreame ambition, or extreame cowardise, or both, doe yet, (when death hath them on his shoulders) flatter the world, betweene the bed and the grave. It is enough for me(being in that state I am) to write of the eldest times: wherein also why may it not be said, that in speaking of the past, I point at the present, and taxe the vices of those that are yet lyuing, in their persons that are long since dead; and haus it laid to my charge. But this I cannot helpe, though innocent. And certainely if there be any, that finding themselues spotted like the Tigers of old time, shall finde fault with me for painting them over a new; they shall therein accuse themselves instly, and me fally.

The Preface.

For I protest before the Maiesty of GOD, That I malice no man onder the Sunne. Imposible I know it is to please all : seeing few or none are so pleased with themselves, or so assured of themselves, by reason of their subiestion to their private passions; but that they seeme diverse persons in one and the lame day. Seneca bath laid it, and lo doe I: Vnus mihi pro populo erat : and to the same effect Epicurus, Hoc ego non multis sed tibi : or ( as it hath fince lamentably fallen out ) I may borrow the resolution of an ancient Philosopher, Satis eft vnus, Satis eft nullus. For it was for the service of that inestimable Prince Henry the successive hope and one of the greatest of the Christian World, that I undertooke this Worke. It pleased him to per vse some part thereof, and to pardon what was amisse. It is now left to the world without a Maister from which all that is presented, hath received both blows & thanks, Eadem probamus, eadem reprehendimus, hic exitus est omnis iudicijan quo lis secundum plures datur. But thefe discourses are idle. I know that as the charitable will judge charitably; so against those, qui gloriantur in malitia, my present aduerfitie hath difarmed mee. I am on the ground already; and therefore have not farre to fall : and for ryling againe, as in the Naturall privation their is no recession to habit. : So is it seldome seene in the britation politiaue. I doe therefore for-beare to stile my Readers Gentle, Courteous, and Friendly, thereby to beg their good opinions, or to promife a second and third volume (which I also intend ) if the first receive grace and good acceptance. For that which is already done, may be thought enough; and too much; and it is certaine, let vs claw the Reader with never so many courteous phrases; yet shall we ever-more be thought fooles, that write foolifbly. For conclusion; all the hope I have lies in this, That I have already found more ongentle and oncurteous Readers of my Louetowards them, and well-deserving of them, than ever I shall doe againe. For had it beene otherwise, I should hardly have had this leisure, to have made my selfe a feele in print.

And wherein he truly, with St. Paul, casteth vpon God all power; confessing also, that the world was made by Gods almighty word, and not by hands : verbo, non manibus, fabricatus est mundus. ZOROASTER (whom Heraclitus followed in opinion) tooke the word fire to expresse God by (as in Deuteronomy Deut.4.14. and in St. Paulitis vied) Omnia ex uno igne genita funt, All things (faith he) are cau- Hebrita 191 fed or produced out of one fire.

For before tia) cannot be referred to fuccession of time, nor to order as some men haue conceived, both which are subsequent: but only to creation then. For before that beginning, there was neither primary matter to bee informed, nor forme to informe, nor any being, but the eternall. Nature was not, nor the next parent of time begotten, time properly and naturally taken; for if God had but disposed of matter already in being, then as the word beginning could not bee referred to all things, fo must it follow, that the institution of matter proceeded from a greater power then that of God. And by what name shall we then call such a one (faith Lactantius) as exceedeth God in potency: for it is an act of more excellency to make, then to dif-70 pose of things made: whereupon it may be concluded, that matter could not be before this beginning: except we faine a double creation, or allow of two powers, and

Of the meaning of the words Heanen and Earth. Genel. I. I.

He vniuerfall matter of the world (which Moyfes comprehendeth vnder the names of Heanen and Earth) is by diners dinertly vnderstood: for there are that conceine, that by those wordes, was meant the first matter, as the Peripatetikes understand it, to which St. Augustine and 10 Ilidore feeme to adhere. Fecilii mundum (faith St. Augustine) de materia informi, quam fecisli de nulla re, penè nullam rem : (that is) Thou hait made the world of a matter without forme : which matter thou madest of nothing , and being made , it was little other then nothing.

But this potentiall and imaginary materia prima cannot exist without forme. Peter Lombard, the Schoole-men, Beda, Lyranus, Comeftor, Toftatus and others, affirme, that it pleased God first of all to create the Empyrean Heauen: which at the succeeding Beds.Hex.Stra- instant (faith Beds and Strabo) hee filled with Angels. This Empyrean Heauen bo super Genel. Steuchius Eugubinus calleth Dinine claritie, and uncreated: an errour, for which he is sharply charged by Pererius, though (as I conceive) herather failed in the subsequent; 20 when he made it to be a place and the feate of Angels, and just Soules, then in the former affirmation : for of the first, That God liueth in eternall light, it is written; My Plat. 104. 12. ð. V.

That the substance of the waters, as mixt in the body of the earth, is by Moses underflood in the word Earth; and that the Earth, by the attributes of unformed and voide, is described as the Chaos of the ancient Heathen.

💥 🥍 O s E s first nameth Heauen and Earth (putting waters but in the third place) as comprehending waters in the word Earth, but afterwards hee nameth them apart, when God by his foirit beganne to distinguish the confused Masse, and (as Basil faith) preparare naturam aque ad fe-cunditatem vitalem; to prepare the nature of water to a vitall fruitfulneffe. For vnder the word Heaven, was the matter of all heavenly bodies, and natures exprest; and by the name of Earth and Waters, all was meant, what soeuer is vnder the Moone, and fubiect to alteration. Corrupt feedes bring forth corrupt plants; to which the pure heavens are not fubiect, though fubiect to perifling. 20 were the waters the matter of Earth : for it is written. Let the waters under the hea- Gen. verfg. uens be gathered into one place, and let the dry land appeare: which proueth that the dry land was mixt and couered with the waters, and not yet diffinguished; but no way, that the waters were the matter or feede of the Earth, much leffe of the Vniuerfall. Initio tu Domine terram fundastt, Thou,O Lord, in the beginning hast founded the Earth: and againe, The Earth was covered with the Deepe (meaning with waters) as with a gar- Pfal,104.6. ment, faith David. And if by naturall arguments it may be proved, that water by condensation may become earth, the same reason teacheth vs also, that earth rarified may become water; water, aire; aire, fire; and fo on the contrary, Deus ignis fub- zens. flantiam per aerem in aquam convertit, God turneth the substance of fire, by aire, into wa-30 ter. For the Heauens and the Earth remained in the fame state, in which they were created, as touching their substance, though there was afterwards added multiplicitie of perfection, in respect of beauty and ornament. Calum verò & terra in statu crea- Gul, Parisson. tionis remanserunt, quantum ad substantiam, licet multiplex perfectio decoris & ornatus eis postmodum superaddita est. And the word which the Hebrewes call Maim, is not to be understood according to the Latine translation simply, and as specificall water; but the fame more properly fignifieth liquor. For (according to Montanus ) Est autem A. Mont, denat Maim liquor geminus, & huic nomen propter verborum penuriam, Latina lingua plurale numero aquas fecit. For Maim (faith he) is a double liquor, (that is, of diners natures) and this name or word the Latines wanting a voice to expresse it, call it in the Plural, Aquas, AD Waters.

This Maffe, or indigefied matter, or Chaos created in the beginning was without forme, that is, without the proper forme, which it afterwards acquired, when the Spirit of God had separated the Earth, and digested it from the waters: And the earth Genefa. 34 was voide: that is, not producing any creatures, or adorned with any plants, fruits, or flowers. But after the Spirit of God had moved upon the waters, and wrought this indigested matter into that forme, which it now retayneth, then did the earth budde forth the hearbe, which feedeth feede, of the fruitfull tree according to his kinde, and God faw that it was good; which attribute was not given to the Earth, while it was confused, nor to the Heauens, before they had motion, and adornement. God faw that it was 50 good; that is, made perfect: for perfection is that, to which nothing is wanting. Es perfecti Dei perfecta funt opera, The workes of the perfect God, are perfect.

From this lumpe of imperfect matter had the ancient Poets their invention of Demogorgon: HESIODVS and ANAXAGORAS the knowledge of that Chaos, of which Ouid:

Ante mare, er terras, er ( quod tegit omnia ) calum, Vnus erat toto natura vultus in Orbe. Quem dexere Chaos, rudis indigeftan, moles.

Before the Sea and Land was made, and Heauen, that all doth hide, In all the world one only face of nature did abide: Which Chaoshight, a huge rude heape.

How it is to be understood that the Spirit of God moned upon the waters, and that this is not to be fearched curiously.

Fter the creation of Heauen and Earth, then voide and without forme, the Spirit of God moued vpon the waters. The Seventy Interpreters vie the word (uper-ferebatur, moued upon or ouer: incubabat, or fouebat (faith Hierome) out of Bafil; and Bafil out of a Syrian Doctor; Equidem non meam tibi, sed viri cuiusdam Syri sententiam recensebo (faith Basil)

Verbum translatum est ab authus pullitiei sue incubantibus, quamuis spiritualis of plane inenarrabili, non autem corporali modo; The word is taken of birds hatching their yong, not corporally, but in a spirituall and unexpressible manner.

Some of the Hebrewes convert it to this effect, Spiritus Dei volitabat, The Spirit of God did flutter : the Chaldwan Paraphrastin this sense, ventus à conspectu Dei sufflabat, or as other understand the Chaldwan, flabat, pellebat, remonebat: the winde from the face of God did blow under, drive, or remove, or did blow upon, according to the 147. But to eschew curiosity: this is true, that the English word (moued) is most proper and fignificant: for of motion proceedethall production, and all what focuer is effected. And this omnipotent Spirit of God, which may indeede bee truely called Principium motus, and with Mirandula, vis cause efficientis. The force of the efficient cause, St. Augustine sometimes taketh for the holy Ghost; sometime for a winde or breath, fub nomine (piritus, under the name of a (pirit, which is sometimes so taken: or for virtualis creatura, for a created virtuality: Tertullian and Theodoret call it also a breath or winde: Mercurius nameth it Spiritum tenuem intelligibilem, a pure or thinne intelligible (pirit : AN AXAGORAS, mentem : TOSTATUS, voluntatem of mentem

But as Cyprian wrote of the Incarnation of Christ our Saujour, Mens deficit, vox filet, co non mea tantum, sed etiam Angelorum: My minde faileth my voice is silent, and not mine only. but even the voice of Angels: fo may all men else fay in the understanding and utterance of the wayes and workes of the Creation; for to him (faith Nazianzenus) there is not one fubstance by which he is, and an other, by which he can, Sed consubstantiale illi Mazian, lib, 1, est quicquid eius est, & quicquid est, what sever attribute of him there is, and what sever Theel. he is, it is the very fame substance that himselfe is.

But the Spirit of God which moued vpon the waters cannot be taken for a breath or winde, nor for any other creature, separate from the infinite active power of God, which then formed and diftinguished, and which now fustaineth, and giveth continuance to the Vniuerfall. then the Spirit of God moued vpon the waters, and created in them their spirituality, and naturall motion; motion brought forth heat; and heat rarifaction, and fubtility of parts. By this Spirit, (which gaue heat and motion, and thereby, operation to energy nature, while it moued upon the waters, which were in one indigested lumpe, and Chaos, disposed to all formes alike) was begotten aire; an element, superior, as lighter then the waters, through whose vast, open, subtile, diaphanicke, or transparent body, the light afterwards created might easily transpierce; light, for the excellency thereof, being the first creature which God called good, whose creation immediately followed. This Spirit Chrylostome calleth a vitall Operation, aquis à Deo insitam, ex qua aque non solum motionem, sed & vim procreandi animalia ha- 10 buerint. He calleth it a vitall Operation given by God unto the waters, whereby the waters had not only motion, but also power to procreate or bring forth living creatures.

Hefe waters were afterwards congregated, and called the Sea : and this 20 light afterwards (in the fourth day) gathered and united, and called the Sunne, the Organ, and instrument of created light. For this first and dispersed light did not (as I conceive) distinguish the night from the day, but with a reference to the Sunnes creation, and the vniting of the dispersed light therein. This is proued by these wordes, Let there be lights in the firment, to separate the day from the night; which lights in the firmament of heaven were also made for signes, and for seasons, and for dayes, and for yeares, implying a motion instantly to follow, by which dayes and yeares are distinguished; after which fucceeded Time, or together with which, that Time (which was the measure of motion) began. For that space of the first three dayes which preceded the Suns crea- 30 tion, or formall perfection, when as yet there was not any motion to be measured, and the day named in the fift verse, was but such a space, as afterwards by the Sunnes motion made a civill or naturall day. And as Waters were the matter of aire, of the firmament, and of the lower and upper waters, and of the feas, and creatures therein: Earth, the matter of Beafts, plants, minerals, and mans body: fo may light (for expression sake) be called the Chaos, or materiall substance of the Sunne, and other lights of heaven. Howbeit neither the Sunne, nor any thing sensible, is that light it Lux dicitus, que selfe, que causa est lucidorum, which is the cause that things are light some (though it make 16. & command in the first and all things else visible) but a body most silightned, which illuminate that the finite fait. giue materiality to light it selfe, but improperly: for it passeth at an instant from the heauen to the earth, nor is it relifted by any hardneffe, because it pierceth through the folid body of glaffe, or other Criftalline matter; and whereas it is withflood by vncleane and vnpure earthy fubstances, leffe hard and more easie to inuade then the former, the fame is, Quod obstaculum natur a terreum atg, fordidum, non capit candidam Plotin, luminis puritatem: Because an obstacle, by nature, earthy and foule, doth not receive the pure clearneffe of light: alluding to that most divine light, which onely shineth on those mindes, which are purged from all worldly droffe, and humane vncleanneffe.

But of this created light, there is no agreement in opinion: neither doe I maruaile 10 at it, for it cannot be found either in the Fathers, Philosophers, or Schoole-men, or other ancient or latter Writers, that any of them vnderstood either it or themselves therein: all men (to cast off ignorance) have disputed hereof, but there is no man that hath beene taught thereby. Thomas Aquinas (not inferiour to any in wit) as he hath shewed little strength of argument in refuting the opinions of Beda, Hugo, Lom. bard, Lyranus, and others: so is his owne indgement herein, as weake as any mans; and most of the Schoole-men were rather curious in the nature of termes, and more fubtile in diftinguishing vpon the parts of doctrine already laid downe, then discouerers of any thing hidden, either in Philosophie or Dininity: of whome it may be truly faid, N ihil faptentie odiofius acumine nimio: Nothing is more odious to true wil dome.

Secondly, if light were proceeding from matter and forme, then line, alternity either, or both must be one of these, Lucideor bright, darke or opake, Diaphanous nebris imperia, or transparent; but darkenesse cannot be parent of light; and things Diaphanous Opaca semi ple-(being neither light, nor darkenesse, but capable of either) cannot be the cause of either, and therefore must the matter, or forme, or both, be Lucide and shining. But in my vnderstanding, lumen, (which may be Englished by the word Shine) is Scal, subt.ex. 7t. an intentionall Species of that, which may be Englished by Light, and so, this shining which proceedeth from the Sunne, or other lights of heaven, or from any other light, is an image, or intentionall Species thereof; and an intentionall Species may be understood by the example of aredde, or greene colour, occasioned by the shining of the Sunne through redde or greene glaffe: for then wee perceine the fame colour cast vpon any thing opposite; which reducffe or other colour we call the intentionall Species of the colour in that glaffe. And againe, as this light, touching his simple nature, is no way yet understood: so it is disputed, whether this light first created be the fame, which the Sunne inholdeth and cafteth forth, or whether it had continuance

50 any longer, then till the Sunnes creation. But by the most wise and vnchanged order, which God observed in the worke of Gong. 1. the world, I gather, that the light, in the first day created, was the substance of the Sunne : for Mofes repeateth twife the maine parts of the vniuerfall ; first, as they were Port 12. created in matter; fecondly, as they were adorned with forme : first, naming the 9.

Heauens, the Earth, the Waters, all confused, and afterward, the Waters congregated, the Earth made dry land, and the Heauens diftinguished from both, and beautified. And therefore the Earth, as it was earth, before it was vncouered, and before it was called, Arida, or dry land; and the Waters were waters, before they were congregated and called the Sca, though neither of them perfect, or inriched with their vertual formes: fo the Sunne, a though it had not his formall perfection, his circle. beauty, and bounded magnitude, till the fourth day, yet was the fubftance thereof in the first day (vnder the name of Light) created; and this light formerly dispersed, was in the fame fourth day united and fet in the firmament of Heauen: for to Light created in the first day God gaue no proper place or fixation, and therefore the cf- 10 feel's named by Anticipation, (which was to separate day from night) were precisely performed, after this light was congregated and had obtained life and motion. Neither did the wifedome of God finde cause why it should moue (by which motion dayes and nights are diffinguilhed) till then: because there was not yet any creature produced, to which, by mouing, the Sunne might giue light, heat, and ope-

But after the Earth (diffinguished from waters) beganne to budde forth the budde of the hearbe, &c. God caufed the Sunne to moue, and (by interchange of time) to visite energy part of the inferiour world; by his heate to stirre vp the fire of generati-Deconational on, and to give activity to the feedes of all natures: For as a King, which comman- 20 Rix ainquis ere. deth some goodly building to bee erected, doth accommodate the same to that vse and end, to which it was ordayned; fo it pleased God (faith Procopius) to command the light to be; which by his all-powerfull word he approued, and approuing it dif-

But in that it pleased God to aske of I o n, by what way is the light parted, and where is the way where light dwelleth; we thereby know, that the nature thereof falleth not under mans understanding; and therefore let it suffice, that by Gods grace we enjoy Ala. 6.6.40, the effects thereof. For this light is of the treasure of God (faith Es DR As.) And those which inhabite the heavens, doe only know the effence thereof. Nihil is notum in calo, nibil notum in terra. Nothing unknowne in heauen, nothing perfectly knowne on earth. 20 Res vera funt in mundo inuifibili, in mundo vifibili vmbra rerum : Things themselues are in the inuifible world, in the world vibble but their shadowes; Surely if this light be not (pirituall, yet it approcheth nearest vnto (pirituality); and if it have any corporality, then of all other the most subtile and pure; for how soeuer, it is of all things seen. the most beautifull, and of the swiftest motion, of all other the most necessary and beneficiall. For it ministreth to men and other creatures all celestiall influences; it diffipateth those sadde thoughts and forrowes, which the darkenesse both begetteth and maintaineth; it discoucreth vnto vs the glorious workes of God, and carrieth vp with an Angelicall fwiftneffe our eyes vnto heauen, that by the fight thereof, our

mindes being informed of his visible meruailes, may continually trauaile to fur- 40 mount these perceived heavens, and to finde out their omnipotent cause and Creatour. Laftly, if we may behold in any creature any one sparke of that eternall fire, or any farre-off-dawning of Gods glorious brightnesse, the same in the beauty, motion, and vertue of this light may be perceived. Therefore was God called lux ipfa, and the light by Hermes named lux fantla, and Chrift our Sauiour faid to bee that light 160, 100 14. which lighteneth every man that commeth into the world. Yet in respect of Gods incom- 46. prehentible fublimitie, and puritie, this is also true, that God is neither a minde, nor a Spirit of the nature of other Spirits, nor a light, fuch as can be differred. Deus profecto non mens est, at verò vt fit mens caufa est; nec spiritus, sed caufa qua spiritus extat; nec lumen, sed causa qua lumen existit. God (saith HERMES in Pomandro) certaine-10 by is not a minde, but the easife, that the minde hath his being; nor shirit, but the easife by which enery spirit is; nor light, but the easife by which the light existeth.

So then the Maffe and Chaos being first created, void, darke, and imformed, was by the operative Spirit of God pierced and quickned, and the Waters having now receiued Spirit and motion, resolued their thinner parts into aire, which God illightned the Earth also by being contignat, and mixt with waters (participating the same Gentary dinine vertue) brought forth the budde of the hearbe that feedeth feede, &c. and for a meane and organ, by which this operative vertue might be continued, God appointed the light to be vnited, and gaue it also motion and heat, which heat caused a continuance of those severall species, which the Earth (being made fruitfull by the Spir 20 rit) produced, and with motion begat the time, and times succeeding.

Of the firmament, and of the waters about the firmament: and whether there be any cristalline heaven, or any primum

Fter that the Spirit of God had moued vpon the waters, and light was created, God said, Let there be a firmament in the middest of the waters, andlet it separate the waters from the waters: that is, those waters which by rarifaction and enaporation were afcended, and those of the Earth

But these waters separate about this extension, which the Latine translation calleth firmamentum, for expansum (for so Vatablus, Pagninus, and Iunius turne it) are not the cristalline Heavens, created in the imaginations of men, which opinion Basslius Magnus calleth a childish supposition, making in the same place many learned arguments against this fancie. For the waters aboue the firmament, are the waters in the aire aboue vs, where the same is more solid and condense, which God separated 40 from the neather waters by a firmament, that is, by an extended distance and vast space: the wordes Raquia, which Montanus writeth Rakragh, and Shamaijm, being indifferently taken for the heaven and for aire, and more properly for the aire and ether then for the Heauens, as the best Hebricians understand them, quo suprema ac tenuia non, nat bis. ab infimis crass diducta interfectag, diflarent, for that whereby the supreme and thinne bo- fal.15-. dies were placed in distance being seuered and cut off from low and grosse matters : and the waters about the firmament express in the word Maym, are in that tongue taken properly for the waters about the aire, or in the vppermost Region of the same. And that the word Heauen is vied for the aire, the Scriptures enery where wit-nesse, as in the bleffings of Toseph, and in the 104. Plalme. * By these springs shall the Gen. 49. 25. beauen; and in Deuteronomy the 11. But the land, whither you goe to poffeffe it, is a land, Deut. 11.11. that drinketh water of the raine of heauen; and in Ion, Who hath ingenered the frosts of 100 38. 29. beauen; and in St. MATTHEW, Behold the fowles of beauen, for they fow not. Manto 36,

So as in all the Scriptures of the old Testament throughout, is the word Heatien very often vsed for aire, and taken also hyperbolically for any great heighth, as, Let vs build us a Tower, whose toppe may reach to heaven, Go. and in this very place Basil anoucheth that this appellation of heaven for the firmament, is but by way of similitude : his owne wordes be these, Et vocanit Deus sirmamentum calum. Hac appellatio aly quidem proprie accommodatur, huic autem nunc ad similitudinem; And God called the firmament heaven: This appellation (faith Basil) is properly applyed to another (that is, to the Starry Heauen) but to this (that is, to the Firmament deciding the waters) it is imposed by similitude : and if there were no other proofe, that by the firmament was meant the aire, and not the Heauen, the wordes of Moses 10 in the eighth Verse conferred with the same word Firmament in the twentieth Verse makes it manifest: for in the eight Verse it is written, that God called the firmament, which deuided waters from waters, Heauen; and in the 20. Verse hee calleth the firmament of Heauen, aire, in these wordes: And let the fowle flie wpon the earth in the open firmament of heaven : and what vie there should be of this icye, or criftalline, or waterie heauen, I conceiue not, except it be to moderate and temper the heat, which the Primum mobile would otherwise gather and increase: though in very truth, in stead of this helpe, it would adde an vnmeasurable greatnesse of circle, whereby the swiftnesse of that first Moucable would exceede all possibilitie of beleefe. Sed nemotenetur ad imposibilia, but no man ought to be held to imposibilities; and faith 20 it felfe (which furmounteth the heighth of all humane reason) hath for a forcible conducter the word of truth, which also may be called lumen omnis rationis, & intellettus, the light of all reason and understanding. Now that this supposed first Moueable turneth it selfe so many hundreth thousand miles in an instant (seeing the Scriptures teach it not) let those that can beleeue mens imaginations, apprehend it, for I can not : but of these many heavens, let the Reader, that desireth satisfaction, search Orontius, and of this waterie Heaven, Basilius Magnus in his Hexam. fol. 40. 41. 60. and Matth. Beroaldus his second Booke and fixt Chapter. For my selfe I am perswaded, that the waters called the waters about the heavens, are but the clowdes and waters ingendred in the vppermost aire.

A conclusion repeating the fumme of the workes in the Creation, which are reduced to three heads : The creation of matter, The forming of it, The finishing of it.

O conclude, it may bee gathered out of the first Chapter of Genesis, that this was the order of the most wise Gop in the beginning, and 49 when there was no other nature, or being, but Gods incomprehenfible eternitie. First, he created the matter of all things : and in the first three daies he diftinguished and gaue to euery nature his proper forme; the forme of legitie to that which ascended, to that which descended, the forme of granitie: for he separated light from darkenesse, deuided waters from waters, and gathered the waters under the firmament into one place. In the last three dayes, God adorned, beautified, and replenished the world : he fet in the firmament of Heauen, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres; filled the Earth with Beafts, the Aire with Fowle, and the Sea with Filh, giving to all, that have life, a power generative, thereby to continue their Species and kindes; to creatures vegetative and growing, their feedes 50 will Salaria, in themselves; for he created all things, that they might have their being : and the generations of the world are preserved.

Nd for this working power, which we call Nature, the beginning of motion and reft, according to Ariftotle, the fame is nothing elfe, but the ftrength and faculty, which God hath infused into enery creature, ha-uing no other selfe-ability, then a Clocke; after it is wound vp by a mans hand, hath. These therefore that attribute vnto this facultie, any first or sole power, have therein no other understanding, then such a one hath, who looking into the sterne of a shippe, and finding it guided by the helme and rudder, doth ascribe some absolute vertue to the pecce of wood, without all consideration of the hand, that guides it, or of the judgement, which also directeth and commandeth that hand; forgetting in this and in all else, that by the vertue of the first act, all Agents worke what socuer they worke: Virtute primi allus agunt agentia omnia quicquid agunt : for as the minde of man feeth by the Organ of the eye, heareth by the cares, and maketh choife by the will: and therefore we attribute fight to the eye, and hea-20 ring to the eares, &c. and yet it is the minde only, that giveth abilitie, life, and motion to all these his instruments and Organs; so God worketh by Angels, by the Sunne, by the Starres, by Nature, or infused properties, and by men, as by severall organs, seuerall effects; all second causes what soeuer being but instruments, conduits, and pipes, which carry and difperfe what they have received from the head and fountaine of the Vniuerfall. For asit is Gods infinite power, and euery-where-prefence (compassing, embracing, and piercing all things) that giveth to the Sunne power to draw vp vapours, to vapours to be made cloudes, cloudes to contayne raine, and raine to fall: fo all fecond and instrumentall causes, together with Nature it selfe, without that operative facultie which God gaue them, would become alto-

30 gether filent, vertueleffe, and dead: of which excellently ORPHEVS; Per te wiref Natura chini. cuntomia, Allthings by thee spring forth in youthfull greene. I enforce not these transpositions, thereby to annihilate those variable vertues, which God hath given to his spread transpositions, animate and inanimate, to heatenly and earthly bodies, &c. for all his producible of the street of th workes in their vertues praise him; but of the manner how God worketh in them, or **Latt.defail; sattley in or with each other, which the Heathen Philosopher's , and those that follow them, have taken on them to teach: I say there is not any one among them, nor any one among vs, that could euer yet conceiue it, or expresse it, euer enrich his owne vnderstanding with any certaine truth, or euer edific others (not foolish by selfe-flatterie) therein. For (faith Lactantius, speaking of the wisedome of the Philosophers)

40 si facultas inueniende veritatis huic studio subiaceret; aliquando esfet innenta; cum verò tot temporibus, tot ingenys in eius inquisitione contritis, non sit comprehensa, apparet nullamibi effe sapientiam, If in this studie (saith he) were meanes to finde out the truth, it had ere this beene foundout but feeing it is not yet comprehended, after that so much time, and so many wits have beene worne out in the inquirie of it, it appeareth, that there is no wisedome there to be had. Nam si de unare pracisa scientia haberetur, omnium rerum sci- cypriandemetentia necessario haberetur, If the precise knowledge of any one thing were to be had, it should to.13. necessarily follow, that the knowledge of all things were to be had. And as the Philosophers were ignorant in nature, and the wayes ofher working: so were they more curious, then knowing, in their first matter and Physicall forme. For if their first mat-50 ter had any being, it were not then the first matter: for, as it is the first matter, it hath only a power of being, which it altogether leaueth, when it doth subsist. And seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor a substance inchoate, or in the way of perfection, how any other substance should thence take concrescence, it hath not been taught; neither are these formes (saith a learned Authour) any thing, si ex ea exprimantur

potentia, que nihil est. Againe, how this first matter should be fubicitum formarum. and paffine, which is vnderstood to precede the forme, it is hard to conceine: for to make forme which is the cause, to be subsequent to the thing caused (to wit, to the first matter) is contrary to all reason, dinine and humane; only it may be said that originally there is no other difference betweene matter and forme, then betweene heat and fire, of which the one cannot fublift without the other, but in a kind of rationall confideration. Leaning therefore these riddles to their louers, who by certaine scholafticall diffinctions wrest and peruert the truth of all things, and by which Aristotle harh laboured to proue a falle eternitie of the world, I thinke it farre fafer to affirme with St. AVGVSTINE, That all species and kinds are from God, from whom, what soener 10 is naturall proceedeth, of what kinde or estimation focuer, from whence are the feedes of all formes, and the formes of all seedes and their motions; A quo est omnis species, a quo est anicanid naturaliter ell, cuinfound, generis ell, cuinfound, estimationis ell, à quo funt semina formarum, forma feminum, motus feminum atq, formarum. And thus much Auerrois is forced to confesse. For all formes (saithhe) are in primo motore; which is also the opinion of Arestotle in the twelfth of his Metaph. and of Albertus vpon

Of Fate; and that the Starres have great influence: and that their operations may diversity be prevented or furthered.

Nd, as of Nature, fuch is the difpute and contention concerning Fate or Destinie, of which the opinions of those learned men that have written thereof, may be fafely received, had they not thereunto annexed and A fastened an ineuitable necessity, and made it more generall, and vniuerfally powerfull then it is, by giuing it dominion ouer the minde of man, and ouer his will; of which Ouid and Innenal.

Ang. de heref. 70. 6.25. Tho.cont.Gent. 3. c.83. Ficin. in 12.de Cic.de fat.

An errour of the Chaldeans, and after them of the Stoicks, the Pharifees, Prifeillianists, the Bardisanists, and others, as Basil, Augustine, and Thomas have observed: 40 but, that Fate is an obedience of fecond causes to the first, was well conceiued of Hermes, and Apuleius the Platonist. Piotinus out of the Astronomers calleth it a disposition from the acts of celestiall Orbes, vnchangeably working in inferiour bodies, the fame being also true enough, in respect of all those things, which a rationall minde doth not order nor direct. Ptolomie, Seneca, Democritus, Epicurus, Chrysippus, Empedocles, and the Stoicks, some of them more largely, others more strictly, ascribe to Fate a binding and ineutrable necessity; and that it is the same which is spoken and determined by God (quod de vnoquoq, nostrûm fatus est Deus) and the definite lot of all living. And certainely it cannot be doubted, but the Starres are instruments of farre greater vse, then to give an obscure light, and for men to gaze on after Sunne fet: it being manifest, that the diversity of seasons, the Winters, and Sommers, more hot and cold are not fo vicertained by the Sunne and Moone alone, who alway keep one and the fame courfe, but that the Starres have also their working therein.

And if we cannot deny, but that God hath given vertues to fprings, and foun-

taines, to cold earth, to plants and ftones, Minerals, and to the excrementall parts of the bases lining creatures, why should wee robbe the beautifull Starres of their working powers? for feeing they are many in number and of eminent beauty and magnitude, we may not thinke, that in the treasury of his wisedome who is infinite, there can be wanting (cuen for euery flarre) a peculiar vertue and operation; as euery bearbe, plant, fruit, and flower, adorning the face of the Earth hath the like. For as these were not created to beautific the earth alone, and to couer and shadow her dufty face, but otherwise for the vse of man and beast, to feede them and cure them; so were not those vincountable glorious bodies set in the firmament, to no other end, to then to adorne it, but for instruments and organs of his divine providence, so farre as it hath pleased his inst will to determine. Origen upon this place of Geness, Let there Gen. 152 belight in the firmament, &c. affirmeth that the Starres are not causes (meaning perchance binding causes) but are as open bookes, wherein are contained and fet downe all things what focuer to come; but not to be read by the eyes of humane wifedome: which latter part I beleene well, and this faying of Syracides withall. That there are Ecology Care hidde yet greater things then these be, and we have seene but a few of his workes. And though, for the capacitie of men, we know somewhat, yet in the true and yttermost vertues of hearbs and plants, which our selues sow and set, and which grow under our feete, we are in effect ignorant; much more in the powers and working of cele-

20 stiall bodies: for hardly (faith SALOMON) can we different the things that are upon the 11419.16, earth, and with great labour finde we out those things that are before vs: who can then inuestigate the things that are in beauen? Multum est de rebus cælestibus aliquid cognescere: Aistoile. It is much to know a little of heavenly things. But in this question of Fate, the middle course is to be followed, that as with the Heathen we doe not binde God to his creatures, in this supposed necessity of destinie, so on the contrary we doe not robbe those beautifull creatures of their powers and offices. For had any of these second causes despoiled God of his prerogatine, or had God himselfe constrained the minde and will of man to impious acts by any celeftiall inforcements, then fure the impious excuse of some were instifiable; of whom St. AVGVSTINE. Impia peruer sitate in ma Augan Super

30 lis factis rectifimè reprehendendis ingerunt accufandum potius auctorem fylerum, quam God adia. commissiorem scelerum. Where we reprehend them of euill deedes, they againe with wicked peruer senesse verge, that rather the Authour and Creatour of the Starres, then the door of the enill is to be accused.

But that the Starres and other celeftiall bodies incline the will by mediation of the fensitine appetite, which is also farred by the constitution and complexion, it cannot be doubted. Corpora celestia (faith DAMASCENE) constituent in nobis habitus, complexiones, & dispositiones, The heavenly bodies (faith he) make in us habits, complexions, and dispositions : for the body (though Galen inforce it further) hath vindoubtedly a Gal. Lino as, kinde of drawing after it the affections of the minde, especially bodies strong in hu-feguene, 40 mour, and mindes weake in vertues : for those of cholericke complexion are fubicat to anger, and the furious effects thereof; by which they fuffer themselves to be transported, where the minde hath not reason to remember, that passions ought to be her vaffailes, not her Mafters. And that they wholly direct the reasonlesse minde I am refolued: For all those which were created mortall, as birds, beafts, and the like are left to their naturall appetites, ouer all which, celeftiall bodies (as inflruments and executioners of Gods providence) have absolute dominion. What we should judge of men, who little differ from beafts, I cannot tell: for as he that contende th against those inforcements, may easily master or relift them : so who so ever shall neglect the remedies by vertue and pictic prepared, putteth himselfe altogether under the power 50 of his sensuall appetite; Vincitur fatum stresistus, vincit scontempseris : Fate will beo Quint. uercome, if thou refift it, if thou neglect, it conquereth.

But that either the Starres or the Sunne haue any power ouer the mindes of men immediately, it is abfurd to thinke, other then as aforefaid, as the same by the bodies temper may be effected. Lumen folis ad generationem fensibilium corporum confert, & Aug de cisio,

But howfocuer we are by the Starres inclined at our birth, yet there are many things both in nature and art, that encounter the fune, and weaken their operation: and artifath himfelfe confelfeth, that the heauens doe not alwaise worke their cf-for feets in inferiour bodies, no more then the fignes of raine and wind doe alwaise some to padie. And it is diuters times feene, that paternall vertue and vice hath his counter-working to the fei inclinations. Et in luneusis patrum virtus; In the young off fring the fathers vertue is, and fo the contrary, patrum virtus; and herein also there is often found an enterchange; the Sonnes of vertuous men, by an ill constellation become inclinable to vice, and of virious men, to vertue.

A worthy fonne is borne of a wicked father.

But there is nothing (after Gods referued power) that fo much fetteth this art of influence out of fquare and rule, as education doth : for there are none in the world fo wickedly inclined, but that a religious instruction and bringing up may fashion anew, and reforme them; nor any fo well disposed, whom (the raines being let loose) the continual fellowship and familiaritie, and the examples of dissolute men may not corrupt and deforme. Veffels will euer retaine a fauour of their first liquor : it being equally difficult either to cleanle the minde once corrupted, or to extinguish the fweet fauour of vertue first received, when the minde was yet tender, open, and casily feafoned; but where a fanourable constellation (allowing that the Starres incline 39 the will) and a vertuous education doe happily arrive, or the contrarie in both, thereby it is that men are found to exceeding vertuous or vitious, heaven and earth (as it were) running together, and agreeing in one : for as the feedes of vertue may by the art and husbandry of Christian counsaile produce better and more beautifull fruit, then the ftrength of felfe nature and kinde could have yeelded them; fo the plants apt to grow wild, and to change themselues into weedes, by being set in a soile sutable, and like themselues, are made more vnsauoury and filled with poyson. It was therefore truly affirmed, Sapiens adjuvabit opus astrorum, quemadmodum agricola terra naturam; Awife man afifieth the worke of the Starres, as the husbandman helpeth the nature of the foile. And Ptolomie himselfe confesseth thus much, Sapiens, & omnta fa- 40 pientis medici dominabuntur astris . A wife man , and the ominous art of a wife Phylitian shall premaile against the starres. Lastly, we ought all to know, that God created the flarres, as he did the reft of the Vniuerfall, whose influences may be called his referued and vnwritten lawes. But let vs confider how they binde: euen as the lawes of mendoe; for although the Kings and Princes of the world haue by their lawes decreed, that a theefe and a murderer shall suffer death; and though their ordinances are daylie by Judges and Magistrates (the Starres of Kings) executed accordingly, yet these lawes doe not depriue Kings of their naturall or religious compassion, or binde them without prerogative, to fuch a feuere execution, as that there should be nothing left of libertie to judgement, power, or conscience: the Law in his owne na- 50 ture being no other then a deafe T yrant. But feeing that it is otherwise, and that Princes (who ought to imitate God in all they can) doe formetimes for causes to themselues knowne, and by mediation, pardon offences both against others and themselues, it were then impious to take that power and libertie from God himselfe, which his Subflitutes enjoy; God being mercy, goodnesse, and charitie it selfe. Otherwise that example of prayer by our Sauiour raught. And ever not less that example of prayer by our Sauiour raught. And even no there has no expense of worder and time; but that God (which only knoweth the operation of his owne creatures truly) hath assured with the reis no inclination or temptation so forcible, which our humble prayers and desires may not make frustrate, and breake assured: for were it (as the Stoicks concciue) that Fate or Destinie, though depending upon eternall power, yet being once ordered and disposed, had such a contexion and immutable dependencie, that God himselfe should in a kinde haue shut up himselfe therein.

10 How misserbet the were the condition of men (saith St. Augustine) less allogether without hore.

And if this strength of the Starres were so transfer d, as that God had quitted vnto them all dominion ouer his creatures; be he Pagan or Christian that so beleeneth, the only true God of the one, and the imaginarie Gods of the other would thereby be despoiled of all worlhip, reserence, or refixes.

And certainely, God which hath promised vs the reward of well-doing, which Christ himselfe claimed at the hands of the Father (I have fairlibed the worke which thou to hather the father of the father of the father worke which thou to hather gaues me to doe.) And the same God, who hath threatned wnto vs the forrow and to wincutably to the destinite, os influences of the Starres; or fibilect our foules to any imposed necessitie. But it was well said of Platine, that the starres were significant, but not efficient, giving them yet something less then their due: and therefore as I doe not consent with those, who would make those golorious creatures of God vertuelesse. It is thinke that we devogate from his eternal and absolute power and proudence, to a scrobe to them the same dominion ouer our immortal soules, which they have over all bodily substances, and perishable natures: for the folus of men, soung and fearing God, receive influence from that duine light it selfs, whereof the Sunness clarite, and that of the Starres is by Plato called but a shadow. #### d. XIII. Of Providence.

annew Ow Prouidence (which the Greekes call Pronoia) is an intellectuall knowledge, both fore-feeing, caring for, and ordering all things, and doth not only behold all paft, all prefent, and all to come, but is the cause of their so being, which Prescience (simply taken) is not: and therefore Prouidence by the Philosophers (saith St. Augustine) is deuided into Memorie, Knowledge, and Care: Memorie of the past, Knowledge of the present, and Care of the future; and we our selues account such a man for provident, 20 as, remembring things past, and observing things present, can by judgement, and comparing the one with the other, prouide for the future, and times fucceeding. That fuch a thing there is as Prouidence, the Scriptures enerywhere teach vs, Mofes in many places, the Prophets in their prædictions; Christ himselfe and his Apostles affure vs hereof; and, belides the Scriptures, Hermes, Orpheus, Europides, Pathagoras. Plato, Plotimus, and (in effect) all learned men acknowledge the Providence of God: yea the Turks themselves are so consident therein, as they refuse not to accompanie and vilit each other, in the most postilent diseases, nor shunne any perill whatsoener, though death therein doe manifestly present it selfe.

The places of Scripture prouing Prouidence, are so many, both in generall and 20 particular, as I shall neede to repeate but a few of them in this place. Sing vnto God (faith DAVID) which concrete the heavens with cloudes, and prepareth raine for the earth, Tfal.147.8. and maketh the graffe to grow upon the mountaines, which giveth to beasts their foode, and feedeth the young Rauen that cries : all these waite voon thee, that thou maiest give them foode in due feafon. God therefore, who is every where present, who filleth the heavens and the earth, whose eyes are upon the righteous, and his countenance against them that doe cuill, was therefore by Orpheus called oculus infinitus, an infinite eye, beholding all things, and cannot therefore be efteemed as an idle looker on, as if he had transferred his power to any other: for it is contrary to his owne word. Gloriam meam alteri non dabo: I will not give my glorieto another. No man commandeth in the Kings presence, but by the Kings direction; but God is enery where prefent, and King of Kings. The example of Gods vniuerfall providence is feene in his creatures. The Father provideth for his children: beafts and birds and all liuings for their young ones. If prouidence be found in fecond Fathers, much more in the first and Vniuerfall; and if there so be a natural llouing care in men, and beafts, much more in God, who hath formed this nature, and whose divine love was the beginning and is the bond of the Vniverfall. Who so ener therefore will set beforchim Machiauels two markes to shoote at (to wit) riches, and glorie, must set on and take off a backe of yron to a weake wooden bow, that it may fit both the strong and the feeble: for as he, that first deuised to adde failes to rowing vessels, did either so proportion them, as being fastened aloft, and towards the head of his Mast, he might to abide all windes and stormes, or else he sometime or other perished by his owne inuention: fo that man which prizeth vertue for it felfe, and cannot endure to hoife and strike his failes, as the diners natures of calmes and stormes require, must cut his failes, and his cloth, of meane length and breadth, and content himfelfe with a flow and fure nauigation, (to wit) a meane and free efface. For who foeuer shall tell any great man or Magistrate, that he is not just, the Generall of an Armie, that he is not valiant, and great Ladies that they are not faire, shall neuer be made a Counfeller, a Captaine, or a Courtier. Neither is it sufficient to be wife with a wife Prince, valiant with a valiant, and just with him that is just, for such a one hath no effate in his prosperitie; but he must also change with the successour, if he be of contrary qualities, faile with the tide of the time, and alter forme and condition, as the Estate or the Estates Master changeth: Otherwise how were it possible, that the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, could so often attaine to honour and riches, but by fuch an observant slauish course? These men ha-20 uing nothing elfe to value themselues by, but a counterfait kinde of wondring at other men, and by making them beleeve that all their vices are vertues, and all their dustie actions cristalline, haue yet in all ages prospered equally with the most verthous, if not exceeded them. It is also a token of a worldly wife man, not to warre or contend 20 in vaine against the nature of times wherein he liueth; for such a one is often the au-

Of this Image and fimilitude of God, there is much dispute among the Fathers. Schoole-men, and late Writers: Some of the Fathers conceine, that man was made after the Image of God, in respect chiefly of Empire and dominion, as St. Chryfostome, Ambrofe, and some others: which St. Ambrofe denyeth to the woman in these wordes, Vt ficut Deus unus, ab eo fieret homo unus, & quomodò ex Deo uno omnia, ità ex vno homine omne genus effet super faciem totius terra: Vnus igitur vnum fecit, qui to unitatis eius haberet imaginem, That as Godis one, one man might be made by him, and t. at in what manner all things are of one God, likewife of one man the whole kinde flould be upon the face of the whole earth: Therefore he being one made one, that should have the Image of his unitie. But whereas it is gathered out of the following wordes of the fame Verse, that man was after the image of God in respect of rule and power, it is written Dominamini in the plurall number, and let them rule ouer the fifth of the Sea dre. and therefore cannot the woman be excluded. Others conceine, that man is faid to be after the image of God in respect of his immortall soule only, because as God is inuifible, fo the foule of man is insufible, as God is immortall and incorporall, fo is the foule of manimmortall and incorporall; and as there is but one God which gouerneth the world, so but one soule which gouerneth the body of man; and as God is wholly in enery part of the world, fo is the foule of man wholly in enery part of the body : Animaest tota in toto, & tota in qualibet parte , The Soule is wholly in the whole ho-10 dv. and wholly in every part thereof, according to Ariflotle; though Chalcidius, and other learned men denie that doctrine; which that it is otherwise then potentially true, all the Arillotelians in the world shall neuer proue. These and the like arguments doe the Iewes make (faith Toflatus ) and thefe refemblances, betweene the infinite God, and the finite Man. The Schoole-men refemble the Minde or Soule of Man to God, in this respect especially; because that as in the Minde there are three distinct powers, or faculties (to wit) Memorie, Vnderstanding, and Will, and yet all these, being of reall differences, are but one minde : fo in God there are three distinct persons, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, and yet but one God. They also make the Image and Sj-20 militude divers; and againe, they diftinguish betweene imaginem Dei, and ad imaginem Dei, and spinne into small threds, with subtile distinctions, many times the plaineneffe, and linceritie of the Scriptures: their wits being like that firong water, that cateth through and diffolueth the pureft gold. Victorinus also maketh the image of God to be substantiall, but not the similitude: sed in substantia nomen qualitatis declaratinum, A word-declaring qualitie in the substance. Out of which wordes, and that which followeth, it is infer'd, that as the image and similitude doe greatly differ : fo the finnefull foule doth not therefore leaue to be the image of God; but it bath not his similitude, except it be holy and righteous. St. Augustine also against Admantiss the Manichee affirmeth, that by sinne, the perfection of this image is lost in man, and litude is more largely taken, then the Image. But howfocuer the Schoole-men and others diffinguish, or whatfocuer the Fathers conceine, fure I am that St. Paul maketh the same sense of the image, which Vi-Horinus doth of the similitude, who faith: As we have borne the image of the earthly, 1,0,1,15,49, fo shall we beare the image of the heavenly; and it cannot bee gathered out of the Scriptures, that the wordes image and similitude were yied but in one sense, and in this place the better to expresse each other; what so ener Lombard hath said to the contrarie. For God knowes, what a multitude of meanings the wit of man imagineth to himselfe in the Scriptures, which neither Moses, the Prophets, or Aposlles, euer con-40 ceiued. Now as St. Paul vseth the word (image) for both: so St. James vseth the word

Quast verò posit esse imago aliqua in qua similitudo non sit: si Ang. vt sip. enim omnino similis non est, procul dubio nec imago est, As if (faith he) there could be any image, where the similitude is not : no, out of doubt, where there is no likenesse, there is no

50 image. The verie wordes of the Text make this most manifest, as Let vs make man in our image, according to our likenesse: which is, Let vs make man in our image, that he may bee like vs; and in the next Verse following God himselfe maketh it plaine, for there he vseth the word (image) only, as thus. God created the man in his image, 'n the image of God created he him. And to take away all dispute or ambiguitie, in the first Verse of the fift Chapter, the word (similitude) is vsed againe by it selfe, as, in the darthat God created A D AM, in the likeneffe of God made he him. And this fimilitude S. Paul Colof, the third, calleth the image. Put on (faith he) the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him, that created him. And in Siracides it is written, he made them according to his image. Now if we may beleeue S. Paul before Peter Lombard and other Schoole-men, then it is as manifest as wordes can make it. that the image and fimilitude is but the fame, for S. Paul vieth both the words directly in one fenfe. For they turned the glorie of the incorruptible God to the similitude of the image of a corruptible man.

Zanchius laboureth to proue, that man was formed after the image of God, both 10 Tank de no Dei in body and minde: Nulla pars in homine que non fuerit huiusce imaginis particeps. No part in a man (faith he) which was not participating Gods image : for God (aid, Let vs make man according to our owne image. But the foule alone is not man, but the Hypoflasis or whole man compounded of body and foule. The body of man (faith he) is the Image of the world, and called therefore Microcolmus; but the Idea and exemplar of the world was first in God, so that man, according to his body must needes be the image of God. Against which opinion of this learned man, his owne objection feemeth to me fufficient, where he alleageth, that it may be faid that Mofes spake by the figure Synedoche, as when a man is called a mortall man, yet is not the whole man mortall, but the body only : fo when God faid, Let vs make man after our image, hee meant 20 the foule of man, and not the bodie of earth and dust : Maleditive qui deitatem ad hominis lineamenta refert (faith S. AVGVSTINE,) Curfed is he that referreth the Deitie of Godto the lineaments of mans body. Deus enim non est humana forma particeps, neque corpus humanum diuine (faith PHILO,) God is not partaker of humane forme, nor humane body of the forme divine: The Hebrew word for image is T (elem, which fignifieth a shadow or obscure resemblance: In imagine pertransit homo, Man passeth away in a (badow: Let vs then know and confider, that God, who is eternall and infinite, hath not any bodily shape or composition, for it is both against his nature and his word;

an errour of the Anthropomorphite, against the very effence and Maiestie of God. Surely Cicero, who was but a Heathen, had yet a more divine understanding then 20 these grosse Heretikes: ad smilitudinem Dei propiùs accedebat humana virtus, quam sigura, Thevertue which is in man (faith he) came nearer the similitude of God, then the figure. For God is a spiritual! substance, inuisible, and most simple; God is a just God: God is mercifull: God is charitie it felfe, and (in a word) goodnesse it felfe, and none elfe fimply good. And thus much it hath pleafed God himfelfe to teach vs. and to make vs know of himfelfe. What then can be the shadow of such a substance, the image of fuch a nature, or wherein can man be faid to refemble his vnex cogitable power and perfectnesse? certainely, not in dominion alone; for the Deuill is faid to be the Prince of this world, and the Kingdome of Christ was not thereof, who was the true and perfect image of his Father; neither, because man hath an immortall 40 foule, and therein the faculties of Memorie, Vnderstanding, and Will, for the Deuils Platin crays, are also immortall, and participate those faculties, being called Demones, because fcientes of Knowledge, and fubtility; neither because we are reasonable creatures, by which we are diftinguished from beafts : for who have rebelled against God ? who haue made Gods of the vileft beafts, of Serpents, of Cats, of Owles, yea euen of shamefull parts, of lusts and pleasures, but reasonable men? Yet doe I not condemne obinidated the opinion of Sv. Chrysfopor and Ambrofe, as touching dominion, but that, in refpect thereof, man was in fome fort after the image of God, if we take Dominion, fuch as it ought to bee, that is, accompanied with inflice and pietie: for God did not only make man a ruler and Gouernour ouer the Fishes of the Sea, the Fowles of Heauen 50 (or of the aire) and ouer the Beafts of the field; but God gaue vnto man a dominion ouer men, he appointed Kings to gouerne them, and Judges, to judge them in equitic. Neither doe I exclude reason, as it is the abilitie of understanding. For I doe not conceine, that Ireness did therefore call man, the image of God, because hee was animal rationale only; but that he understood it better, with SYBILLA: Image mea eft homo, rectam rationem habens, Man, that is endued with right reason, is said to refemble God, (that is) by right reason to know and confesse God his Creatour, and the fame God to ferue, loue, and obey : and therefore faid St. Augustine (who herein came nearer the truth) fecit Deus hominem ad imaginem & similitudinem suam in mente, God made man, in respect of the intellect, after his owne image and similitude; and REYNERIUS; Homo, quod habet mentem, factus est ad imaginem Det, Man was made Reyndemont, after the image of God, in minde, or in that he had a minde.

30 Mercurius) est Deus in bominibus, Is Godin men, or rather (and which I take to be his sen. Ep. 65. f. meaning) is the image of God in man. For as the Sunne is not of the same effence or $31.5. nature with the dinine light, but a body illightned, and an illumination created; fo is this Mens or understanding in men, not of the essence of Gods infinite understanding, but a power and facultie of our foules the pureft; or the lumen anime rationalis, by the true and eternall light illightned. And this Mens others call animam anime, The foule of the foule, or with St. Augustine, the eye of the foule, or receptacle of Sapience and divine knowledge, que amorem sapientie tanquam ducem sequitur, which followeth after the lone of fapience as her guide (faith Philo) between which and reason, between which and the minde, called anima, betweene which and that power which the La-40 tines call animas, there is this difference. Reafon is that facultie by which we judge and discourse; Anima, by which we line. Hereof it is faid, Anima corpus animat, id eft, vinificat; anima, or the foule is that which doth animate the body, that is, gineth it life: for death is the separation of body and soule; and the same strength (faith Philo) which God the great direct our hath in the world, the fame hath this Anima, or mind, or foule in man. Animus, is that, by which we will and make election; and to this Bafil agreeth, which calleth this Mens, or divine understanding, perspicacem anime partem, the perceiuin o part of the minde, or the light, by which the Soule differenth; dormientium mens, non anima, sopitur, & in furiosis mens extinguitur, anima manet, 14 men that fleepe it is this (mens) or understanding, and not the minde or foule, which refleth, 50 during which time it is but habituall in wife men, and in madde men this (mens) is extinguished, and not the Soule: for madde men doe line, though distract.

Therefore this word being often yfed for the Soule giving life, is attributed abufinely to madde men, when we fay that they are of a distract minde, in stead of a broken vnderstanding, which word (mind) we vsealso for opinion, as, I am of this mind, Hereof excellently Mercurius: Anima est imago mentis, mens imago Dei. Deus menti praest, mens anime, anima corpori, The Soule (meaning that which giucth life) is the image of this under-Marsilius Ficinus in his ninth booke of the Soules immortalitie laboureth to proue.

standing, or Mens, and this (Mens) or understanding is the image of God, God is President or ruler over this understanding, this understanding over the Soule, and this Soule ouer the body. This division and distinction out of the Platonikes and Peripatetikes, I Icaue to the Reader to judge of. That Mens humana hath no neede of any organ. Zaneb. de oper. Zanebius doth not differ from Ficinus in wordes, for (faith he) ad facultatem intelli-Dei.part.3, lib. gentem exercendam non eget Mens organo, tanqu'am medio, per quod intelligat, quanqu'am 20 eget obiecto in quod intucatur, & ex quo intellectionem concipiat; hoc autem obiectum (unt phantasmata, seù rerum à sensibus perceptarum simulachra ad phantasiam prolata. To exercise the facultie of understanding, the minde of man (faith he) needeth no instrument, as a meane, by which it may under stand; but it needeth an object, whereon to looke, and whence to conceine the act of understanding. This object are the phantasmes, or the resemblances of things received from the fenfe, and carried to the phantafie: But in effect his conclusion feemeth to carry a contrarie fenfe, when he maketh the Phantafie, in representing the object to the vinderstanding, to be a corporall Organism; neither can it be vinderstood to be an Organum of any thing; but of the understanding. And hee addeth that the resemblance of things in mans imagination, are to his understanding and minde, as 20 colours are to the fight; whence it to followeth, that the imagination or phantalic it felfe is to the facultie of vnderstanding, as the eye is to the facultie of seeing, and as this is an Organum: fo that. Of this question, How the Minde in all her actions maketh vse of the body, and hath communion with the body, I referre the Reader to P. 185. 6- a most grave and learned discourse in the last Replic of Mr. Dr. Bilson, now Bilhop of Winchester, vnto Henrie Iscob. Howsoeuer the truth bee determined, wee must conclude, that it is neither in respect of reason alone, by which we discourse, nor in respect of the minde it selfe, by which we live, nor in respect of our soules simply, by which we are immortall, that we are made after the image of God. But most fafely may wee refemble our felues to God in mente, and in respect of that pure facultie 40 which is neuer separate from the contemplation and loue of God. Yet this is not all. For St. Bernard maketh a true difference betweene the nature and faculties of the minde or Soule, and betweenethe infusion of qualities, endowments and gifts of grace, wherewith it is adorned and enriched, which, being added to the nature, ef-Sence, and faculties, maketh it altogether to be after the image of God, whose words muitus creato- are thele: Non proptered imago Det est, quià sui meminit Mens, se q, intelligit & diligit (which was also the opinion of S. A v G v s T I N E) fed quia potesti meminisse, intellijuam,aique imi-tari, prass inge- gere ac diligere eum à quo facta est, (that is) The minde (or Mens) was not therefore the nggrig, authir: mage of God, becaufe it remembreth, wnderstandeth, and touch it selfe, but because it can tait, spic cones remember, wnderstand, and love God, who ereated it. For the value minde cannot bee after the image of God, feeing God is inflice it felfe; The bloud-thirstie hath it not; for God is charitie, and mercie it felfe: Fallhood, cunning practife, and ambition, are properties of Sathan; and therefore cannot dwell in one foule, together with God; and to be short, there is no likelihood betweene pure light and blacke darkenesse, be- 2/01.6.14 tweene beautic and deformitie, or betweene righteoushesse and reprobation. And though Nature, according to common understanding, have made vs capable by the power of reason, and apt enough to receive this image of Gods goodnesse, which the fenfuall foules of beafts cannot perceive; yet were that aptitude naturall more inclinable to follow and imbrace the false and durclesse pleasures of this stage-play world. then to become the shadow of God by walking after him, had not the exceeding workemanship of Gods wisedome, and the liberalitie of his mercy, formed eyes to our foules, as to our bodies, which, piercing through the impuritie of our flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge and Obiest to the minde and Soule, to contemplate the cuer-during glorie, and termeleffe joy, prepared for those, which retaine the image and fimilitude of their Creatour, preferuing vndefiled and vnrent the garment of the new man, which, after the image of God, is created in according righteousnesse, and true holinesse, as faith St. Paul. Now whereas it is thought by fome of the Fathers, as by St. Augustine with whom S. Ambrofe iovneth, that, by finne, the perfection of the image is lost, and not the image it selfe; both opinions by 40 this distinction may be well reconciled (to wit) that the image of God, in man, may be taken two waies; for either it is confidered, according to naturall gifts, and confifleth therein; namely, to have a reasonable and understanding nature, &c. and in this sense, the image of God is no more lost by sinne, then the very reasonable or understanding nature, &c. is lost: (for sinne doth not abolish and take away these natural) gifts) or, the image of God is considered, according to supernaturall gifts, namely, of

That Man was formed of earth and dust, did Abraham acknowledge, when in humble feare he called vnto God, to faue Sodome. Let not my Lord now be angrie, if I Beake, I, that am but duft and after: And in thefe houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, doe our soules inhabite, according to sob; and though our owne eyes doe enery where behold the fudden and reliftleffe affaults of death, and Nature affureth vs by neuer-failing experience, and Reason by infallible demonstration, that our times vpon the earth have neither certainetic nor durabilitie, that our bodies are but the Anduiles of paine and diseases, and our Mindes the Hines of vinnumbred cares, sorrowes, and pathons; and that (when we are most glorified) we are but those painted posts, 20 against which Enuie and Fortune direct their darts; yet such is the true vnhappinesse of our condition, and the darke ignorance, which coucreth the eyes of our vnderstanding, that we only prize, pamper, and exalt this vaffall and flaue of death, and forget altogether (or only remember at our cast-away leifure) the imprisoned immortall Soule, which can neither die with the reprobate, nor perifh with the mortall parts of vertuous men: feeing Gods inflice in the one, and his goodnesse in the other is excreifed for cuermore, as the cuer-living subjects of his reward and punishment. But when is it that we examine this great accompt? neuer while we have one vanitie left vs to found : we pleade for titles, till our breath faile vs; digge for riches, while our ftrength enableth vs; exercise malice, while we can reuenge; and then, when Time 30 hath beaten from vs both youth, pleasure, and health, and that nature it selfe hateth Job 10.21.17. the house of old age, we remember with lob, that we must goe the way, from whence we (ball not returne, and that our bedde is made ready for vs in the darke; And then I fay, looking ouer late into the bottome of our conscience (which Pleasure and Ambition had locked up from vs all our lines, we behold therein the fearefull images of our actions past, and withall, this terrible inscription : That God will bring every worke into judgement, that man hath done under the Sunne. But what examples have euer moved vs? what perfivations reformed vs? or what threatnings made vs afraide? we behold other mens Tragedies plaid before vs, we heare what is promifed and threatned; but the worlds bright glorie hath put out the 40 eyes of our minds; and these betraying lights, (with which we only see) doe neither looke up towards termeleffe ioyes, nor downe towards endleffe forrowes, till we neither know, nor can looke for any thing elfe, at the worlds hands. Of which excellently Marius Victor:

Difeafes, famine, enemies, in vs no change haue wrought, What erft we were, we are; still in the same snare caught: No time can our corrupted manners mend, In Vice we dwell, in Sinne that hath no end.

But let vs not flatter our immortall foules herein: for to neglect God all our lives. and know that we neglect him, to offend God voluntarily, and know that we offend him, cashing our hopes on the Peace, which we trust to make at parting, is no other then a rebellious prefumption, and (that which is the worst of all) euen a contemptuous laughing to scorne, and deriding of God, his lawes and precepts. Frustra sperant, qui sic de misericordia Dei sibi blandiuntur, They hope in vaine, saith BERNARD, Bernings, Osi which in this fort flatter them felues with Gods mercy.

Of the Spirit of life, which God breathed into man, in his Creation.

N this frame and carcafe God breathed the breath of life; and the man was a lining foule: (that is) God gaue to a Bodie of earth and of corrup-tible matter, a Soule spirituall and incorruptible; nor that God had any fuch bodilie inftruments as men vel, but God breathed the Spirit of life and immortalitie into man, as he breatheth his grace daily into fuch as loue and feare him. The Spirit of God (faith ELIHV in IOB) hath made me, and Isb 33.4. 20 the breath of the Almightie bath given melife: In qua sententia (saith R AB ANVS) vitanda est paupertas sensus carnalis, ne sorte putemus Deum, vel manibus corporeis de limo formasse corpus hominis, vel faucibus aut labijs suis inspirasse in faciem formati, vi viuere possit, & spiraculum vita babere: Nam & Propheta cum ait, Manus tua fecerunt me, &c. tropica hac locutione magis quam propria, (idefl) iuxta consuctudinem, qua solent homines operari, loquutus est. In which sentence (saith he) the beggerlinesse of carnall sense is to be auoided, lest perhaps we bould thinke , either that God with bodily hands made mans boay of slime, or breathed with lawes or lips upon his face (being formed) that he might line, and have the spirit of life : for the Prophet also when he faith, Thy handes have made me, fake this tropically, rather then properly (that is) according to the custome which men ase in wor-

By this breath was infused into man both life and foule; and therefore this (Soule) the Philosophers call Animam, and vinificat corpus, & animat, Which doth animate, and give life to the body. The inspiration of the Almightie giveth understanding, faith Iob; and this spirit, which God breathed into man, which is the reasonable soule of man, returneth againe to God that gaue it, as the body returneth vnto the earth, out of which it was taken, according to Ecclestastes : And dust shall returne to the earth, out of which it was taken, and the spirit shall eady, 12.7. returne to God that gaue it. Neither is this word (spirit) vsually otherwise taken in the Scriptures, then for the foule; as when Stephen cryed vnto God: Domine Suscipe Ad. 1.59. 40 fpiritum meum, Lord lfur recenue my firit and in St. 10 a w., and tofu bowed his bead, Juliu 30, and gene vy the Ghoff, or fpirit, (which was) that his life and foule left his body cleat. And that the immortall foule of man differeth from the foules of beafts, the manner of the creation maketh it manifest: for it is written, Let the waters bring forth in abun- Gunt. 20, dance energy creeping thing, and let the earth bring forth the lining thing, according to his kinde, the beast of the earth, &c. But of Man it is written, Let vs make man in our owne 26, image, &c. and further, that the Lordbreathed in his face breath of life. Wherefore, as Gon. 7. from the water and earth were those creatures brought forth, and thence received life: fo shall they againe be diffolued into the same first matter, whence they were taken: but the life of breath euerlasting, which God breathed into man, shall, accor-50 ding to Ecclefiafles, returne agains to God that gaue it.

That Man is (as it were) a little world : with a digression touching our mortalitie.

An, thus compounded and formed by God, was an abstract or modell, or briefe Storie of the Univerfall: in whom God concluded the creation, and worke of the world, and whom he made the laft and most excellent of his creatures, being internally endued with a diuine vnderflanding, by which he might contemplate and ferue his Creatour, after whose image he was formed, and endued with the powers and faculties of reason and 10 other abilities, that thereby also he might gouerne and rule the world, and all other Gods creatures therein. And whereas God effeated three forts of living natures, (to wir) Angelicall, Rationall, and Brutall; gluing to Angelsan intellectuall, and to Beafts a fenfuall nature, he vouchfafed vnto man, both the intellectuall of Angels, the sensitive of Beasts, and the proper rationall belonging vnto man; and therefore (faith GREGORIE NAZIANZENE: ) Homoest virialg, nature vinculum, Man is the bond and chaine which tieth together both natures: and because in the little frame of Asia, Phy. lib. mans body there is a representation of the Vniuerfall, and (by allulion) a kind of participation of all the parts thereof, therefore was man called Microcofmos, or the little 1.17.f. world. In this also is the little world of man compared, and made more like the Viduor fall (man being the measure of all things; Homo ell mensura omnium rerum, faith Arillotle, Aid to Mor and Pythagoras) that the foure complexions refemble the foure Elements, and the tapacity. feuen Ages of man the feuen Planets: Whereof our Infancie is compared to the Moone, in which we feeme onely to line and growe, as Plants; the fecond age to Mercurie, wherein we are taught and instructed; our third age to Venus, the dayes of loue, defire, and vanitie; the fourth to the Sunne, the ftrong, flourishing, and beautifull age of mans life; the fifth to Mars, in which we feeke honour and victorie, and in which our thoughts trauaile to ambitious ends; the fixth age is afcribed to Inpiter, 10 in which we begin to take accompt of our times, judge of our felues, and grow to the perfection of our vinderstanding; the last and seventh to Saturne, wherein our dayes are fad and ouer-caft, and in which wee finde by deere and lamentable experience, and by the loffe which can neuer be repaired, that of all our vaine passions and affections past, the forrow onely abideth. Our attendants are licknesses, and variable infirmities; and by how much the more we are accompanied with plentie, by fo much the more greedily is our end delired, whome when Time hath made vnfociable to others, we become a burthen to our felues; being of no other yee, then to hold the riches we have, from our fucceffours. God fet before him, a mortall and immortall life, a nature celefiall and terrene, and (indeed)

God gaue man to himfelfe, to be his owneguide, his owne workeman, and his owne painter, that he might frame or describe vnto himselfe what hee pleased, and make election of his owne forme. God made man in the beginning (laith SIRACIDES) and left him in the hands of his own exanfaile. Such was the liberalitie of God, and mans felicitie; whereas beatls, and all other creatures reasonlesse brought with them into the world (faith Lucilius) and that even when they first fell from the bodies of their Dammes, the nature, which they could not change; and the fupernall fpirits or Angels were from the beginning, or foone after, of that condition, in which they remaine in perpetuall eternitie. But (as aforefaid) God gaue vnto man all kinde of feedes and grafts of life, (to wit) the vegetatine life of Plants, the fenfuall of beaftes, the rationall of man, and the intellectuall of Angels, whereof which foeuer hetooke pleasure to plant and cultiue, the same should futurely grow in him, and bring forth fruit, agreable to his owne choyce and plantation. This freedome of the first man Adam, and our first Father, was anigmatically described by Afelepius Atheniensis 30 (faith Mirandula) in the person and table of Protess, who was faid, as often as hee pleafed, to change his shape. Gen 1.28, and fill the earth, and the earth and Sea to bring forth creatures according to their feuerall kinds: all which being finished, God faw that his workes were good; not that he fore-knew not, and comprehended not the beginning and end before they were; for God made enery Plant of the field before it was in the earth, but he gaue to all things which he had created the name of good, thereby to teach men, that from fo good a God there was nothing made, but that which was perfect good and 10 from whose simple puritie and from so excellent a cause, there could proceede no impure or imperfect effect. For man hauing a free will and liberall choyce, purchased by disobedience his owne death and mortalitie, and for the crueltie of mans heart, was the earth afterward curfed, and all creatures of the first age destroied; but the righteous man Nosh, and his familie, with those creatures which the Arke contained, referued by God to replenish the earth.

CHAP. III. Of the place of Paradise.

That the feate of Paradife is greatly mislaken : and that it is no maruaile that men (bould erre.

ONCERNING the first habitation of man we reade. that the Lord God planted a garden, Eastward, in Eden, and there he put the man whom he made, GEN. 2.6. Of this feate and place of Paradife, all ages have held dispute; and the opinions and judgements have been in effect, as divers, among those that have written vppon this part of Genesis, as vpon any one place therein, feeming most obscure : some there are, that have conceined the being of the terrestrial Paradife, without all regard of the worlds Geographie, and without any respect of East and West, or any consideration of the place where Moses wrote, and from whence he directed (by the quarters of the heauens) the way how to finde out and judge, in what region of the world this garden was by God planted, wherein he was exceeding respective and precise. Others, by being themselues ignorant in the Hebrew, followed the first interpretation, or trufting to their owne indgements, understood one place for another; and one errour is so fruitfull, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousnesse thereof be not timely reftrained. And thirdly, those writers which gaue themselves to follow and imitate others, were in all things to observant sectatours of those Masters, whom they admired and beleeued in, as they thought it fafer to condemne their owne vn-50 derstanding, then to examine theirs. For (faith Vadianus in his Epistle of Paradise) magnos errores (magnorum virorum auctoritate perfuali) transmittimus, we passe ouer many groffe errours, by the authoritie of great men ledde and perswaded. And it is true, that many of the Fathers were farre wide from the understanding of this place. I speake it not, that I my selfe dare presume to censure them, for I renerence both their

That there was a true locall Paradife Eastward, in the Countrie of Eden.

O the first therefore, that such a placethere was upon the earth, the words of Mose make it manifest, where it is written. And the Lord God Gus. 2. planted a gardon Eastward in Edon, and there he put the man whom he had made. And how source the vulgar translation, called Hieromes translation, hath converted this place thus. Plantaneral Dominus Deus Paradifam voluptatis à principio ; The Lord God planted a Paradit of Plesfare from the beginning ; putting the word [plesfare] for Eden, and (from the beginning) for Editward: It is manifet, that in this place Eden is the proper name of a Region. For what fense hath this translation (faith our Hopkins, in his Treatife of Paradife) that he planted a garden in pleasare, or that a River went out of pleasare to water the garden! But the sevent in the temperature of the planted a garden in pleasare, or that a River went out of pleasare to water the garden! But the sevent in the paradit of Eden, and so do the the Chaldean Paraphrast truly take it for the proper name of a place, and for a Nowne appellative; which Region, in effect of the fretilitie of the solic, of the many beautifull rivers, and goodly woods, and that the trees (as in the Indies) does alwaics keep their leaves, was called Eden, which signifiesth in the Hothers, pleasarents or cities as the Spaniards call the Countrie, opposite to the 18th of Caba, Florida: and this is the militaking, which may end the dispute, as touching the double soft of the word, that as Florida was a Countrie, so called for the flourithing beautic thereof, so was Edon a Region called pleasure, or delicacie, for the pleasure, or delicacie: and as Florida sincheth flourithing: so Eden significant pleasare, and sy yet both are the proper names of Countries; for Edenbeing the proper name of a Region (called Pleasure in the Hebren) and Paradife being the choice feat of all that Region, Paradife was truly the Garden of Eden, and truly the Garden of pleasure.

Now, for Ealtward, to translate it, from the beginning, it is also contrarie to the translation of the Seuentie; to the ancient Greeke Fathers, as Buff, Chryfofome, Theodora, Gregorie; and to the Rabbines, as Ramban, Rabbi Saloman, R. Arbaham, and Chimehis; and of the Latines, Seurinus, Damafeenus, Gre. who plainely take Eden for the proper name of a Region, and set the word (Eastward) to a bintie it for Damafeenus owne words are these, Paradijus of seuron Demanhain in Eden ad Orientem mirabitites constitus; Paradife is a place, meruailonfly planted by the hands of God, in Eden, toward 10

And after all these Fathers, Guilhelmus Parisiensis, a great learned man, and Sixtus Senensis, of latter times, doe both understand these words of Eden, and of the East. contrarie to the vulgar translation; Parifien is, as indifferent to both, and Sixtus Senenfis, directly against the vulgar: of which these are their owne words. After this I will beginne to speake of Paradise terrestriall, which that God planted from the beginning, or Eastward. &c. Posthac incipiam loqui de Paradiso terrestri, quem plantasse Deum ab initio vel ad Orientem, oc. And then Senensis; Mos Es enim clarissime prodit, Paradisum à Deo consitum in regione terra Orientalis , que dicitur Heden : Heden autem esse proprium nomen apparet ex quarto capite Gen. vbi legimus CH AM habitaffe ad Orientalem plagam 20 Heden; For Moses (laith he) doth shew most clearly, that Paradise was planted of God in a Region of the East Countrie, which is called Heden : but that Heden is a proper name, it appeareth by the fourth Chapter of Genesis, where we reade, that CHAM dwelt on the East border of Heden. PERERIVS endeuoureth to qualifie this translation : for this particle (faith he) ab initio, is referred to all the time of the creation, and not to the very first day; alleaging this place of Christ, that although the Deuill was faid to be a man-flaier from the beginning, yet that was meant but after the fixth day. But furely, as I thinke (referring my felfe to better judgement) the Deuill was from the inflant of his fall a man-flaier in disposition, though he had not whereon to practife till mans creation. And for conclusion, S. Hierome (if that be his translation) adui- 30 feth himfelfe better in the end of the third Chapter of Genesis, converting the word (Eden) by (ante) and not (a principio) as, God did fet a Cherubin before the Garden of Eden , Collocaust Deus ante Paradifum voluptatis Cherubin; and Pererius himfelfeacknowledgeth, that this is the true fenfe of this place, precifely taken, according to the Hebrew. Posuit à parte Orientalihorti Heden, Cherubin; Hee set on the East side of the Garden of Heden, Cherubin. BECANVs affirmeth that the Hebrew word (Be) fignilieth (with) aswell as (in) and so the Text beareth this sense; That God planted a Garden with pleasure (that is to say) full of pleasure. But Becanss followeth this construction, only to the end, to finde Paradife vpon the river of Acesimes : for there he bath heard of the Indian Fig-tree in great abundance, which he supposeth to bee 40 thetree of knowledge, of good, and euill, and would therefore draw Paradife to the Fig. tree: which conceit of his I will answere hereafter.

Now, because Peradife was feated by Mofes toward the East, thence came the culome of praying toward the East, and not by imitation of the Choldsams; and therefore all our Churches are built East and West, as to the point where the funner is the in March, which is directly our Peradife (faith Demofesmus) affirming, that we alwaise spray towards the East, as looking towards Peradife, whence we were cast out; and yet the Temple of Saloman had their Priests and Sacrifices, which turned themfelues in their service and divine ceremonies, alwaies toward the West, thereby to avoid the Superstition of the Experimen and Childsams.

But because East and West are but in respect of places; (for although Paradise were East from India, yet it was West from Persia) and the seruing of God is euery where in the world, the matter is not great which way were turne our faces, so our hearts shand right, other than this, that we who dwell West from Paradise, and pray turning our felues towards the Eaft, may remember thereby to befeech God, that as by Adams fall we haue loft the Paradife on earth: fo by Chrifts death and pailion we may be made partakers of the Paradife calchiall, and the Kingdome of heauen. To conclude, I conceive, that there was no other mylteric in adding the word (Eaft) to Eden by Mofes, then to flew, that the Region of Edn., in which Paradife was, lay Eaftward from Indea and Canaan: for the Scriptures alwaies called the people of thole Nations, the Sonnes of the Eaft, which inhabited Arabis, Mefopotamia, Chaldea, and Perfix: of whith Onid:

The East winde with Aurora hath abiding Among th Arabian, and the Persian hils, Whom Phoebus first falutes at his vo-rising.

And if it be objected, that Hieremie the Prophet threatning the destruction of Hierafalms, doth often make mention of Northern Nations, it is to be noted, that the North is there named, in respect of those Nations that followed Naturalandons of and of whom the greatest part of his Armie was compounded; not that Babylan it else thoode North from Hierafalm, though inclining from the East toward the North.

Now to the difference of this Translation, Peter Comestor gueth best satisfies on to be fesh the word, From the beginning, that is, from the surfle part of the world, (it principle) id est (suith he) a prima or bis parte, and afterward he assimment, that (it principle) and advientes haue the same signification; From the beginning and Eastward it allows, a principle idense if you good and the same significant on.

But to returne to the proofe of this place, and that this Storie of mankind was not allegoricall, it followeth in the T ext of the fectond Chapter and ninth Verfe, in thefe 50 wordes. For ent of the ground made the Lord Gold to grow enerty tree placed to the fight, and goad for meate, etc. To as firth it appeared that God created Adam elfewhere, as in the world at large, and then, put him into the garden: and the end why, is express: that he might dressed in the standards being a Garden or Orchard filled with vursal, Plants, and T rees, of the most excellent kindes, pleasant to behold, and (withall) good for meate: which prouch that Paradss was allowed with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste. And to make it more plaine, and to take away all opinion of Allegorical construction, he affirment that it was watered and beautified with a River; expressing also the Region, out of which this River | Versal, figuring, which he calleth Heden; and that Heden is also a Countrie necre vnto Charan | Excels extrass; do in Mesopatimis, Excels legiting | Section | Response | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Regulation | Reg

But to all these Cabalist, which draw the truth and Storic of the Scriptures into Alegories, Epiphania: answereth in these wordes: $i Farashia to not if son is son in the son and story in points, non estatum or principle, non Psicon, son the son, son of that or principle, non Psicon, non Gehon, non Tigris, nee Euphrates, nonest faus, non solid, non come it Eua de abore, non est Adam, non sun bomines, sea deverta aiam fabula sh, & omni ad Allegoria recantur, If Parashs be not sensible, then there was no sountaine, and these norieurs, if no river, then no such source benefit of the solid, the solid so

Furthermore, by the continuation and order of the Storie is the place made more manifest. For God gaue Adam free libertie to eat of enery tree of the Carden, (the tree of knowledge excepted) which trees Moles in the ninth verse faith that they were good to eat; meaning the fruit which they bare. Befides, God left all beaftes to Adam to be named, which he had formerly made; and these beastes were neither in the third heaven, nor neere the circle of the Moone, nor beaftes in imagination: for if all these things were enigmaticall or mysticall, the same might also bee said of the creation of all things. And Ezechiel speaking of the glory of the Assyrian Kings vseth this speech. All the trees of Eden, which were in the garden of God, enuied him, which to proueth both Eden, and Paradife therein feated to bee terrestriall: for the Prophets made no imaginarie comparisons. But Moses wrote plainly, and in a simple stile, fit for the capacities of ignorant men, and he was more large and precise in the description of Paradile, then in any other place of Scripture; of purpole to take away all scruple from the incredulitie of future ages, whom he knew (out of the gift of Prophecie) to be ant to fabulous inventions, and that if hee had not described both the region and the rivers, and how it flood from Canaan, many of the vibeleeuing Israelites, and others after them, would have misconstrued this storie of mankind. And is it likely, there would have beene so often mention made of Paradise in the Scriptures, if the fame had been an Vtopia? For we finde that the valley, wherein Sodome and Gomor- 20 rha flood, (fometimes called Pentapolis, of the flue principall Cities therein) was before the destruction (which their vnnaturall sinne purchased) compared to the Paradife of the Lord, and like to the land of Egypt toward Zoar; In like maner was Ifraell resembled to the Paradise of God, before the Babylonians wasted it: which producth plainely, that Paradife it felfe exceeded in beautie and fertilitie, and that these places had but a refemblance thereof: being compared to a feat and foyle of farre exceeding Belides, whence had Homer his invention of Alcinous gardens, as Iustin Martyr noteth, but out of Moles his description of Paradife? Gene. 2. and whence are their praifes of the Elisian fieldes, but out of the Storie of Paradise! to which also appertaine 30 those verses of the golden age in Ouid.

And it is manifest, that Orpheus, Linus, Pyndarus, Hefiodus and Homer, and after him, Ouid, one out of another, and all thefe together with Pythagoras and Plato, and their fectatours, did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stollen treasures of diuine letters, altered by prophane additions, and difguifed by poeticall conversions, as if they had beene conceined out of their owne speculations and contemplations.

But befides all these testimonies, if we finde what Region Heden or Eden was; if we proue the riner that ranne out of it, and that the same afterwards was divided into foure branches; together with the Kingdomes of Hauila and Culb, and that all these are Eastward from Canaan, or the desarts of the Amorites, where Moses wrote, 50 I then conceine, that there is no man that will doubt, but that fuch a place there was. And yet I doe not exclude the allegoricall fense of the Scripture; for aswell in this there were many figures of Christ, as in all the old Testament throughout: the Storie being directly true notwithstanding. And to this purpose (faith St. Augustine)

Tres sunt de Paradiso generales sententia: vna est eorum, qui tantummodò corporaliter Paradisum intelligi volunt: aliaeorum, qui spiritualiter tantum (idest) Ecclesiam : tertiaeorum, qui viroq, modo Paradisum accipiunt, (that is) There are three opinions of Paradise: the one of those men, which will have it altogether corporall: a second of those which conceine it altogether (pirituall, and to be a figure of the Church : the third of those, which take it in both fenfes; which third opinion St. Augustine approueth, and of which Surdas gi- August de cinic. ueth this allowable judgement. ## Why it should be needfull to intreate diligently of the place of Paradife.

Vt it may be objected, that it is needlesse, and a kinde of curiositie to enquire so diligently after this place of Paradife, and that the knowledge thereofs of little or novie. To which I answere, that there is nothing written in the Scriptures, but for our instruction; and if the truth of the Storie be necellarie, then by the place proued, the same is a'so made more apparent. For if we should conceine that Paradise were not on the earth, but lifted up as high as the Moone; or that it were beyond all the Ocean, and in no part of the knowne world, from whence Adam was faid to wade through the Sea, and thence to have come into Iudea, (out of doubt) there would be few men in the world, that would give any credit vnto it. For what could seeme more ridicuslous then the report of fuch a place? and besides, what maketh this seate of Paradise fo much disputed and doubted of but the conceit that Piston should be Ganges, which watereth the East India, and Gehon, Nilus, which enricheth Agypt, and these two 20 Riuers so farre distant, as (except all the world were Paradise) these streames can no way be comprised therein? Secondly, if the birth, and workes, and death of our Sauiour, were faid to have beene in some such Countrie, of which no man euer heard tell, and that his miracles had beene performed in the aire, or no place certainly knowne, I affere my felfe, that the Christian religion would have taken but a slender roote in the minds of men : for times and places are approued witneffes of worldly actions.

Thirdly, if we should relie, or give place to the judgements of some writers voon this place of Genesis (though otherwise for their doctrine in generall, they are worthy of honour and reuerence) I say that there is no fable among the Gracians or Agyp-40 tians more ridiculous: for who would beleeue that there were a peece of the world fo fet by it felfe and feparated, as to hang in the aire under the circle of the Moone? or who so doltish to conceine, that from thence the four rivers of Ganges, Nilus, Euphrates, and Tigris, should fall downe, and runne under all the Ocean, and rife up againe in this our habitable world, and in those places where they are now found. Which left any man thinke, that I enforce or straine to the worst, these are Peter Comestors owne wordes. Est autem locus amænisimus longo terra & maris tractu à nostra habitabili zona secretus, adeò eleuatus, vt v sque ad Lunarem globum attingat, &c.(that is) It is a most pleasant place, severed from our babitable zone by a long tract of land and Seaselenated fo, that it reacheth to the globe of the Moone.

And Moles Barcephas vpon this place writeth in this manner: Deinde hoc quoque re- Barc conunted Sponsum volumus, Paradisum multo sublimiore positum esse regione, atque bee nostra extet by Masius. terra, eog, fieri, vt illinc per precipitium delabantur fluuy tanto cum impetu, quantum verbis exprimere non possis; cogʻimpetu impulsi presigʻ sub Oceani vada rapiuntur, vnde rur-Sus prosiliant ebulliant q, in how a nobis culto orbe: which have this sense: Furthermore (faith he) we give this for an answere, that Paradife is set in a Region farreraised above this part which we inhabite; whereby it comes to passe, that from thence these rivers fall downe with such a headlong violence, as wordes cannot expresse; and with that force so impulsed and prest, they are carried under the deepe Ocean, and doe againe arife and boile up in this our habitable world: and to this he addeth the opinion of Ephram, which is this Ephram sicit Paradisum ambire terram, at 6, vltra Oceanum ita positum esse, vt totum terrarum orbem ab omni circumdet regione, non aliter atq, Luna orbis Lunam cingit, (which is) That Paradise doth compasse or embrace the whole earth, and is so set beyond the Ocean Sea, as it enuironeth the whole Orbe of the earth on every fide, as the Orbe of the Moone doth embrace the Moone. To the end therefore that thefe ridiculous expolitions and opinions doe 10 not bring question vnto truth it selfe, or make the same subject to doubts or disputes, it is necessarie to discouer the true place of Paradise, which God and his wisedome appointed in the very Nauell of this our world, and (as Melanchton faics) in parteterre meliore, in the best part thereof, that from thence, as from a Center; the Vniuerfall might be filled with people, and planted; and by knowing this place, wee shall the better judge of the beginning of Nations, and of the worlds inhabitation : for neare unto this did the Sonnes of Noah also disperse themselves after the floud, into all other remote Regions and Countries. And if it be a generous delire in men, to know from whence their owne forefathers have come, and out of what Regions and Nations, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first Auncester, from 20 whence all the streames and branches of mankinde haue followed and beene deduccd. If then it doe appeare by the former, that fuch a place there was as Paradife and that the knowledge of this place cannot be unprofitable, it followeth in order to examine the feuerall opinions before remembred, by the Truth it felfe; and to fee how they agree with the fense of the Scripture, and with common reason, and afterward to proue directly, and to delineate the Region in which God first planted this delightfull Garden.

Nd first, whereas it is supposed by Jug. Chysamensis, that the sloud hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated this place, in such sort, as no man can finde any marke or memorie thereof: (of which opinion there were others also, ascribing to the floud the cause of those high mountaines, which are found on all the earth ouer, with many other strange effects) for my owne opinion, I thinke neither the one nor the other to be true. For although I cannot denie, but that the face of Paradife was after the floud 40 withered, and growne old, in respect of the first beautie: (for both the ages of men, and the nature of all things Time hath changed) yet if there had beene no figne of any fuch place, or if the foile and feate had not remained, then would not Mofes, who wrote of Paradife about 850. yeares after the floud, have described it so particularly, and the Prophets long after Moses would not have made so often mention thereof. And though the very garden it selfe were not then to be found, but that the floud, and other accidents of time made it one common field and pasture with the land of Eden, yet the place is still the same, and the rivers still remaine the same rivers. By two of which (neuer doubted of) to wit, Tigris, and Euphrates, we are fure to finde in what longitude Paradise lay; and learning out one of these rivers, which afterward 50 doth divide it selfe into foure branches, we are fure that the partition is at the very border of the garden it felfe. For it is written, that out of Eden went a river to water the garden, and from thence it was divided and became into foure heads: Now whether the word in the Latine translation (Inde) from thence, be referred to Eden it felfe, or to Paradife, yet the division and branching of those rivers must be in the North or South fide of the very garden (if the rivers runne as they doe, North and South) and therefore these rivers yet remaining, and Eden manifestly knowne, there could be no fuch defacing by the floud, as is supposed. Furthermore, as there is no likelihood, that the place could be so altered as future ages know it not, so is there no probabilitie, that either these rivers were turned out of their courses, or new rivers created by the floud which were not, or that the floud (as aforefaid) by a violent motion, when it beganne to decrease, was the cause of high hils, or deepe vallies. For what descent of waters could there bee in a Sphæricall and round bodie, wherein to there is nor high nor low? feeing that all violent force of waters is either by the strength of winde, by descent from a higher to a lower, or by the ebbe or floud of the Sea. But that there was any winde (whereby the Seas are most enraged) it appeareth not, rather the contrarie is probable: for it is written, Therefore God made a Gen. s.c. winde to paffe upon the earth, and the waters ceased. So as it appeareth not, that, untill the waters fanke, there was any winde at all, but that God afterward, out of his goodnesse, caused the winde to blow, to drie up the abundant slime and mudde of the earth, and make the land more firme, and to cleanfe the aire of thicke vapours and vnholesome mists; and this we know by experience, that all downe-right raines doe euermore diffeuer the violence of outragious winds, and beate downe, and leuell

the fwelling and mountainous billow of the Sea: for any cbbes and flowes there could be none, when the waters were equal and of one heighth ouer all the face of the Earth, and when there were no Indraughts, Bayes, or Gulfes to receiue a floud, or any descent, or violent falling of waters in the round forme of the earth and waters, as aforefaid; and therefore it feemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather flood in a quiet calme, then that they moued with any raging or ouerbearing violence. And for a more direct proofe that the floud made no fuch destroying alteration, toleph. anoweth that one of those pillars erected by Seth, the third from Adam, was to be feene in his dayes, which pillars were fet vp aboue 1426. yeares be-fore the floud, counting Seth to be an hundred yeares old at the crection of them, and 20 Isleph. himselfe, to have lived some 40.or 50. yeares after Christ: of whom although there be no cause to beleeue all that he wrote, yet that, which he auouched of his owne time, cannot (without great derogation) be called in question. And therefore it may be possible, that some foundation or ruine thereof might then be seen? Now that fuch pillars were raifed by Seth, all Antiquitie hath anowed. It is also written in Berofus (to whom although I giue little credit, yet I cannot condemne him in all) that the Cittie of Enoch built by Cain, about the mountaines of Libanus, was not defaced by length of time : yeathe ruines thereof Annius (who commented ypon that invented fragment) faith, were to be seene in his daies, who lived in the raigne of Ferdinand and Isabella of Castile; and if these his wordes be not true, then was he

40 exceeding impudent. For, speaking of this Cittie of Enoch, he conclude thin this fort. Cuius maxima & ingentis molis fundamenta vifuntur, & vocatur ab incolis regionis , Ciuitas Cain, ut nostri mercatores, & peregrini referent, The foundation of which huge Masse is now to be seene, and the place is called by the people of that region, the Cittie of Cain, as both our strangers and merchants report. It is also anowed by Pomponius Mela, (to whom I give more credit in these things) that the Cittie of Ioppa was built before the floud, over which Cepha was King: whose name with his brother Phineus, together with the grounds and principles of their religion, was found grauen vpon certaine Altars of stone; and it is not unpossible, that the ruines of this other Cittie, called Enoch by Annius, might be seene, though founded in the first age: but it could

70 not be of the first Cittle of the world, built by Cain, the place, rather then the time, Gan.4.17

And to proue directly, that the floud was not the cause of mountaines, but that there were mountaines from the creation, it is written, that the waters of the floud ouerflowed by fifteene cubits the highest mountaines. And Masius Damascenus speaking of the floud, writeth in this manner. Et supra Minradam excelsus mons in Armenia (qui Baris appellatur) in quo confugientes multos (ermo est diluun tempore liberatos. And vopon Minyada there is an high mountaine, in Armenia (called Baris) unto which (as it is (aid) that many fledde in the time of the deluge, and that they faued themselves thereon. Now although it is contrarie to Gods word, that any more were faued then eight perfons ( which Malius doth not auouch, but by report ) yet it is a testimonie, that fuch mountaines were before the floud, which were afterwards, and euer fince. knowne by the fame names; and on which mountaines it is generally received that the Arkerefted : but vntruly, as I shall proue hereafter. And againe it appeareth, that the Mount Syon (though by another name) was knowne before the floud : on 10 which the Thalmudiffs report, that many Giants faued themselves also: but (as Annius faith) without all authoritie, either diuine or humane.

Lastiy, it appeareth that the floud did not so turne vpside-downe the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased, by this that when Noah fent out the Done the fecond time, flee returned with an Oline leafe in her mouth, which shee had pluckt, and which (vntill the trees were discoursed) shee found not : for otherwise shee might have found them floating on the water: a manifest proofe, that the trees were not torne vp by the rootes, nor swamme vpon the waters, for it is written, folium Oliue, raptum or decerptum, a leafe pluckt, (which is) to take from a tree, or to teare off. By this it is apparent, (there being nothing written 20 to the contrarie) that the floud made no fuch alteration, as was supposed, but that the place of Paradife might be seene to succeeding ages, especially vnto Moses, by whom it pleased God to teach the truth of the worlds creation, and vnto the Prophets which fucceeded him: both which I take for my warrant, and to guide me in this discoucrie.

VI.

That Paradife was not the whole earth, as some have thought: making the Ocean to be the fountaine of those foure Rivers.

His conceit of Aug. Chyfamensis being answered, who only giueth his opinion for reason, I will in a few wordes examine that of the Manichies, of Noutomagus, Vadianus, Goropius, Becanus, and all those that underflood, that by Paradife was meant the whole earth. But in this I shall on not trouble the Reader with many wordes, because by those places of Scripture formerly remembred, this Vniuerfalitie will appeare altogether impro-Fr. The places which Vadianus alleageth, bring forth fruit and multiplie, fill the earth and subdue it, rule over every creature, &c. with this of the Acts, and hath made of one blond all mankinde, to dwell on all the face of the earth, doe no way proue fuch a generali- 40 tie: for the world was made for man, of which he was Lord and Gouernour, and all things therein were ordained of God for his vse: Now although all men were of one and the fame fountaine of bloud originally; and Adams posteritie inhabited in proceffe of time ouer all the face of the earth; yet it disproueth in nothing the particular garden, affigned to Adam to dreffe and cultiue, in which he lived in so bleffed an effate before his transgression. For if there had beene no other choice, but that Adam had beene left to the Vniuerfall; Mofes would not then have faid Eastward in Eden, feeing the world hath nor East nor West', but respectively. And to what end had the Angell of God beene fet to keepe the East-side, and entrance into Paradife after Adams expulsion, if the Vniuerfall had beene Paradife? for then must Adam have been 50 chased also out of the world. For if All the earth were Paradife, that place can receiue no better construction then this, That Adam was driven out of the world into the world, and out of Paradife into Paradife, except we should believe with Metrodorus, that there were infinite worlds. Which to denie; he thinkes all one, as to af-

firme, that in so large a field, as the universall, there should grow but one thisse. Novio-MACVs vpon Beda, seemeth to be led by this, that it was unpossible for those three Rivers, Ganges, Nilus, and Euphrates, (which water three portions of the world fo farre distant) to rise out of one fountaine, except the Ocean be taken for the Well, and the world for the Garden.

And it is true, that those four erivers, being so vinderstood, there could be no conjecture more probable; but it shall plainely appeare, that Pilon was fallly taken for Ganges, and Gehon fallly for Nilus, although Ganges be a river by Hauilah in India, and Wilus runne through Athiopia. The Seventie write Chus for Athiopia, and thereby the errours of the Manichees, and the mistakings of Nouiomagus, Goropius, and Vadianus, with others, are made manifest. Yet was their conjecture farre more probable, then that of Ephram, Cyrillus, and Athanasius: That Paradise was seated farre bevond the Ocean Sea, and that Adam waded through it, and at last came toward the Countrie, in which hee was created, and was buried at Mount Caluarie, in Hierusalem. And certainly, though all those of the first age were of great stature, and so continued many yeares after the floud, yet Adams shinne-bones must have contained a thousand fadome, and much more, if he had foorded the Ocean; but this opinion is fo ridiculous, as it needs no argument to disproue it.

Of their opinion, which make Paradife as high as the Moone: and of others, which make it higher than the middle Region of the aire.

Hirdly, where as Beda faith, and as the Schoole-men affirme, Paradife to be a place, altogether remoued from the knowledge of men (logis die was farre in the East, but mounted about the Ocean, and all the Earth, and near the Orbe of the Moone (which opinion, though the Schoole-men charge Beda withall, yet Pererius laies it off from Beda vpon Strabus, and his Mr. Rabanus: ) and whereas Rupertus in his Geographic of Paradife, doth not much differ from the rest, but finds it seated next or nearest heaven; It may seeme, that all these borrowed this doctrine out of Plate, and Plate out of Secrates 3 but neither of them (as I conceive) well understood: who (undoubtedly) tooke this place for heauen it selfe, into which the soules of the blessed were carried after death.

True it is, that these Philosophers durst not for feare of the Areopagites, (in this Diog. Lacrt.in and many other divine apprehensions) set downe what they beleeved in plaine Sco. termes, especially Plate: though Secrates in the end suffered death, for acknowledge

40 ing one only powerfull God; and therefore did the Deuill himselfe doe him that right, as by an Oracle, to pronounce him the wifest man. Instine Martyr affirmeth, Justin, Mart, that Plate had read the Scriptures; and St. Augustine gaue this judgement of him, as admant cent. his opinion, that (few things changed) he might be counted a Christian. And it seemeth to me, that both Tertullian and Eusebius conceine, that Socrates, by that place aforesaid, meant the celestiall Paradise, and not this of Eden. Soliniu, I grant, reporteth, that there is a place exceeding delightfull and healthfull, vpon the top of Mount Atho (called Acrothonos) which being about all clouds of raine, or other inconvenience, the people (by reason of their many yeares) are called Macrobioi (that is) Long-lined. A further argument is vsed, for proofe of the heighth of this

50 place, because therein was Enoch preserved from the violence of the floud: appro-ued by Isladore, and Peter Lumbard; in which place also Tertullian conceived, that the bleffed foules were preserved till the last judgement; which Irenew, and Instine Martyr also beleeued. But this opinion was of all Catholike Dinines reproued, and in the Florentine Councell damned; of which St. Augustine more modestly gaue this judgement. Sicut certumest ENOCH & ELIAM nune vinere : itavbi nune sunt, an in Paradiso an alibi, incertum oft: (that is ) As it is certaine that ENOCH and ELIAS doe now line : fo where they now line, in Paradife or elfewhere, it is uncertaine. But Barcephas gives a third cause, though of all other the weakest. For (saith he) it was necesfarie that Paradife thould be fet at fuch a dillance and heighth, because the foure Riuers (had they not fallen so precipitate) could not have had sufficient force to have thrust themselves under the great Ocean, and afterwards have forced their passage through the earth, and have rifen againe in the farre diffant Regions of India, E-

These strange fancies and dreames have been answered by divers, carned men 10 long fince and lately by Hopkins and Pererius writing upon this fubject; of whose arguments I will repeat these few : for to vie long discourse against those things, which are both against Scripture and Reason, might rightly be judged a vanitie in

It is first therefore alleaged, that such a place cannot be commodious to liue in: for being fet so neare the Moone, it had beene too neare the Sunne, and other heauenly bodies. Secondly, because it must have beene too joynet a Neighbour to the Element of fire. Thirdly, because the aire in that Region is so violently moued, and carried about with such swiftnesse, as nothing in that place can consist or haue abyding. Fourthly, because the place between the Earth and the Moone (according 20 to Ptolomic and Alfraganus) is seventeene times the Diameter of the Earth, which makes by a groffe account about one hundred and twentie thousand miles. Hereupon it must follow, that Paradife, being raised to this heighth, must have the compasse of the whole earth for a Balis & foundation. But had it been fo railed, it could hardly be hidden from the knowledge, or cies of men : feeing, it would depriue vs of the Sunnes light, all the fore-part of the day, being feated in the East, as they suppose. Now, to fortifie the former opinions, Toffatus addeth this, that those people which dwell neare those fals of waters are deafe from their infancie, like those which dwell neare the Catadupa, or ouer-falls of Nilws. But this I hold as fained. For I have feene in the Indies farre greater water-falls, than those of Nilus, and yet the people dwel- 30 ling neare them, are not deafe at all. Toffatus (the better to strengthen himselfe) citeth Ball and Ambrole together : to which PERERIVS, Sed ego hac apud Balilium & Ambrolium in corum feriptis quanunc extant, nufquam me legere memini; But I doe not remember (faith he) that I ever read those things, either in Basil or Ambrosc.

But for the bodies of Enoch and Elias, God hath disposed of them according to his wisdome. Their taking vp might be into the celettiall Paradife for ought we know. For although flesh and bloud, subject to corruption, cannot inherit the Kingdome of Heaven, and the feede must rot in the ground before it grow, yet we shall not all 1, Con. 15.26.51 die (faith St. Pave.) but all fhall be changed : which change, in Enoch and Elias, was eafie to him that is Almightie. But for the reft, the Scriptures are manifest that by the 40 floud all perifhed on the earth, fauing eight perfons, and therefore in the terrestriall

For Toffatus his owne opinion, who foared not altogether fo high as the rest, but believed that Paradife was raifed above the middle Region of the aire, and twentie cubits about all mountaines that the floud did not therefore reach it: (which Scotus and other later Schoole-men also believed; for, fay they, there were no finners in P was life, and therefore no cause to ouerwhelme it:) this is also contrarie to the expreffe letter of the Scripture: which directly, & without admitting of any diffinction teacheth vs, that the waters overflowed all the mountaines under heaven. And were it orherwise, then might we aswell give credit to Majius Damascenus, and the Thalmu- 50 diffs, who affirme, that there were of the Giants that faued themselues on the mountaine Baris, and on gron. But to helpe this, Scotus, being (as the rest of the Schoolemen are) full of diffinctions faith; that the waters flood at Paradife, as they did in Evaluation the Red Sea, and at Iordan; and as the floud was not naturall, fo was Paradife faued by miracle. And Thomas Aguinas qualifieth this high conceit with this supposition, That it was not believed, that Paradife was fo feated as Beda and others feeme to affirme in wordes, but by Hyperbole and comparatively, for the delicacie and beautic fo refembled. But this I dareauow of all those Schoole-men, that though they were exceeding wittie, yet they better teach all their followers to shift, then to resolue, by their diffinctions. Wherefore not to ftay long in answering this opinion of Toffatus. I confesse that it is written, that the Mountaines of Olympus, Atho, and Atlas, oner-reach and furmount all windes and cloudes, and that (notwithflanding) there is found on the heads of the hilles both fprings and fruits; and the Pagan Priefts, facri-10 ficing on these mountaine tops, doe not finde the asses (remaining of their sicrifices) blowne thence, nor thence washt off by raines, when they returne: yet experience hath resolued vs, that these reports are fabulous, and Planie himselfe (who was not foaring in the report of wonders) auoweth the contrarie. But were it graunted, yet the heighth of these mountaines is farre under the supposed place of Paradise; and on these selfe hilles the aire is so thinne (saith St. Augustine whom herein I mistrust) that it is not sufficient to be are up the body of a bird, having therein no seeling of her wings, or any fensible resistance of aire to mount her selfe by.

Of their opinion that seate Paradise under the Aguinoctiall: and of the pleasant.

habitation under those Climates.

Hofe which come neare unto reason finde Paradife under the Aquinoetiall line; as Tertullian, Bonauenture, and Durandus; judging, that therevinder might be found most pleasure, and the greatest fertilitie of soile: but against it Thomas Aquinas Obieceth the distemperate heate, which he supposeth to be in all places so directly under the Sunne; but this is 30 (non causa pro causa) for although Paradise could not be vnder the line, because Eden is farre from it, in which Paradife was; and because there is no part of Euphrates, Tigris, or Ganges under it, (Ganges being one of the foure rivers, as they suppose) yet this conceit of diffemper, (being but an old opinion) is found to be very vntrue, though for the coniecture not to be condemned, confidering the age when those Fathers wrote, grounded chiefly on this: that whereas it appeared, that every Countrie, as it lay by degrees nearer the Tropick, and so toward the Aquinottiall, did so much the more exceede in heate, It was therefore a reasonable coniecture, that those Countries which were fituated directly under it, were of a diftemper uninhabitable; but it feemeth that Tertullian conceined better, and so did Aucenne, for they both thought

40 them habitable enough; and though (perchance) in those dayes it might be thought a fantasticall opinion (as all are which goe against the vulgar) yet we now finde, that if there be any place ypon the earth of that nature, beautie, and delight, that Paradife had, the fame must be found within that supposed winhabitable burnt Zone, or within the Tropicks, and nearest to the line it selfe. For hereof experience bath informed reason, and Time hath made those things apparent, which were hidden, and could not by any contemplation be discoursed. Indeede it hath so pleased God to prouide for all living creatures, wherewith he hath filled the world, that fuch inconueniences which we contemplate a farre off, are found by triall and the witnesse of mens travailes, to be fo qualified, as there is no portion of the earth made in vaine, or

50 as a fruitleffe lumpe to fallion out the reft. For God himfelfe (laith I s A 1) that formed 160 45.18; the earth and made it, he that prepared it, he created it not in vaine, he formed it to be inbabited. Now we finde that these hottestregions of the world, seated under the Aquinoctiall line, or neare it, are so refreshed with a daylie gale of Easternely winde (which the Spaniards call the Brize, that doth euermore blow strongest in the heate of the day, as the downe-right beames of the Sunne can not fo much mafter it, that there is any inconvenience or diftemperate heate found thereby. Secondly, the nights are so cold, fresh and equall, by reason of the entire interpolition of the earth, as (for those places which my selfe haue seene, neere the Line and vnder it) I know no other part of the world of better, or equall temper, Onely there are some tracks. which by accident of high mountaines are barr'd from this ayre and fresh wind, and fome few fandie parts without trees, which are not therefore fo well inhabited as the rest; and such difference of soyles wee finde also in all other parts of the world. But (for the greatest part) those regions have so many goodly rivers, sountaines and little brookes, abundance of high Cedars, and other stately trees casting shade, so ma- 10 ny forts of delicate fruites, euer bearing, and at all times beautified with bloffome and fruit, both greene and ripe, as it may of all other parts bee best compared to the Paradife of Eden: the boughes and branches are neuer vnclothed and left naked their fappe creepeth not under ground into the roote, fearing the injurie of the first; neither doth Pomona at any times defoise her withered hulband Vertumnus, in his Winter quarters and old age. Therefore are these Countries called Terra vitiofa, Vitious Countries: for nature being liberall to all without labour, necessitie imposing no industrie or trauell, idlenesse bringeth forth no other fruites then vaine thoughts. and licentious pleafures. So that to conclude this part, Tertullian and those of his opinion were not deceived in the nature of the place; but Aguinas, who misliked this 20 opinion, andfollowed a worfe. And (to fay the trueth) all the Schoole-men were groffe in this particular.

δ. I X.

Of the change of the names of places: and that besides that Eden in Calefyria, there is a Countrey in Babylon, once of this name as is prouedout of Ela. 27. and Ezech. 27.

Hele opinions answered, and the Region of Edennot found in any of those imaginarie worlds, nor vnder 1 orriva 2000, it was Paradise now we discouer and finde out the seatethereof, for init was Paradise of which search resteth chiefly in those imaginarie worlds, nor under Torrida Zona; it followeth that by God planted. The difficultie of which fearch resteth chiefly in Ithis, That as all Nations haue often changed names with their Mafters, fo are most of these places, by Moles remembred, forgotten by those names of all Historians and Geographers as well ancient as moderne.

Belides, we finde that the Affyrians, Babylonians, Medes and Persians, (Cyrus Onely and few other excepted) fought to extinguish the Hebrewes. The Gracians hated both their Nation and their Religion; and the Romanes despised once to remember 40 them in any of their stories. And as those three Monarchies succeeded each other: fo did they transforme the names of all those principall places and Cities in the East: and after them, the Turke hath fought (what hee could) to extinguish in all things, the ancient memorie of those people; which he hath subjected and inthralled.

Now befides those notable markes, Euphrates & Tigris, the better to find the way, which leadeth to the Countrey of Eden, we are to take for guides these two consideration: (to wit) That it lay Eastward from Canaan and Iudea; and that it was of all other the most beautifull and fertile First then in respect of situation, the next Countrey to Iudea Eastward was Arabia Petras; but in this Region was Moses himselfe when hee wrote: and the next vnto it Eastward also was Arabia the Defart, both which in re- 50 spect of the infertilitie could not be Eden, neither have any of the Arabians any such rivers, as are exprest to runne out of it: So as it followeth of necessitie, that Eden must be Eastward, and beyond both Arabia Petraa, and Deferta. But because Eden is by Mofes named by it felfe, and by the fertilitie, and the rivers encly deferibed, we must feeke it in other Scriptures, and where it is by the additions of the neighbour Nations better described. In the Prophet Isai I finde it coupled and accompanied with other Jiai 27.0.12, adiacent Countries, in these wordes spoken in the person of Senacherib by Rabsakeh. Have the Gods of the Nations delivered them, which my Fathers have destroyed, as GOSAN. and HARKN, and RESEPH, and the children of EDEN, which were at Telaffar : and in Ezechiel, where he prophecieth against the Tyrians : They of HARAN and CANNEH, Cap. 27.001 (23) and EDEN, the Merchants of SHEBA, ASHVR, and CHILMAD, were thy Mer. chants , drc.

But to avoide confusion, we must understand that there were two Edens, one of no which the Prophet Amos remembreth, where he divideth Spria into three Proving Capassoff ces, whereof, the first he maketh Syria Damascene, or Decapolitan: the second part is that Valley called Juenis, otherwise Conuallis, or the Tract of Chamath, where Allyria is joyned to Arabia the Defart, and where Ptolomie placeth the Cittie of Auerra; and the third is knowne by the name of Domus Edenis, or Caleffria, otherwise Vallis ca- Strabs, na, or the hollow Valley, because the Mountaines of Libanus and Antilibanus, take all the length of it on both fides, and border it . for Coele in Greeke is Caus in Latine. But this is not that Eden, which we feeke: neither doth this Province lie East from Canaan, but North, and so joyneth vnto it, as it could not be vnknowne to the Hebrewes. Yet, because there is a little Cittie therein called Paradise, the Jewes belee-20 ued this Cælefyria to be the same which Moses describeth. For the same cause doth Hopkins in his Treatife of Paradife reprehend Beroaldus, in that he confoundeth this Eden, with the other Eden of Paradife: though to give Beroaldus his right, I conceive that he ledde the way to Hopkins, and to all other latter writers, fauing, that he fair led in distinguishing these two Regions, both called Eden: and that hee altogether misvnderstood two of the foure Rivers (to wit) Pifon and Gehon, as shall appeare hereaster. Now to finde out Eden, which (as Moses teacheth vs) lay Eastward from the Desarts, where hee wrote after hee had passed the redde Sea; wee must consider where those other Countries are found, which the Prophet Isai and Ezechiel joyneth with it. For (faith Esalah) Golan, Haran, and Releath, and the children of Eden.

30 which were at Telaffar. Also Ezechiel ioyneth Haran with Eden, who, together with Ezechie, vaz; those of Sheba, Albur, and Chilmad, were the Merchants that traded with the Cittie of Tyre, which was then (faith EZECHIEL) the Mart of the people for many Ifles. And it hath euer beene the custome, that the Persians conveyed their merchandise to Babylon, and to those Citties vpon Euphrates, and Tigris, and from thence transported them into Syria, now Soria, and to the Port of the Mediterrane Sea : as in ancient times to the Cittie of Tyre, afterward to Tripolie, and now to Aleppo, from whence they imbarque them at the Port of Alexandretta, in the Bay of Isious, now Laiazzo. Exechiel in the description of the magnificence of Tyre, and of the exceeding trade that it had with all the Nations of the East, as the only Mart-towne of that part of 40 the world, reciteth both the people, with whom they had commerce, and also what commodities euery Countrie yeelded: and having counted the seuerall people and Countries, he addeth the particular trade, which each of them exercised. They were Verfixed thy Merchants (faith the Prophet) in all forts of things, in rayments of blew filke, and of broidered workes, fine linnen, corrall and pearle: and afterwards speaking of the Merchants of Sheba and Raamah, and what kindes they traded, he hath these wordes. The Merchants of Sheba and Raamah were thy Merchants, they occupied in thy Faires, with the chiefe of all Spices, and with all pretions slones and gold. Now these be indeed the riches which Persia and Arabia Fælix yeeld: and because Sheba and Raama are those parts of Arabia, which border the Sea, called the Persian Gulfe, therefore did those Nations to both vent fuch spice, sweet gummes, and pearles, as their owne Countries yeelded, and (withall) having trade with their neighbours of India, had from them also all forts of spices, and plentie of gold. The better to conuey the secommodities to that great Mart of Tyre, the Shebans or Arabians entred by the mouth of Tigris, and from the Cittie of Terredon (built or enlarged by Nabuchodonozor, now called Balfara) thence fent up all these rich merchandises by boate to Babylon, from whence by the body of Euphrates, as farre as it bended Westward, and afterward by a branch thereof, which reacheth within three daies iourney of Aleppo, and then ouer land they palt to Tyre, as they did afterward to Tripolie (formerly Hieropolis ) and thence to Alexandretta, as aforefaid. Now the Merchants of Cannel, which Ezechiel iovneth with Eden, inhabited farre up the river, and received this trade from Arabia and India, belides those proper commodities which themselves had, and which they received out of Persia, which bordered them. St. Hierome understandeth by Canneh, Seleucia, which is feated upon Euphrates, where it breaketh into foure heads, and which tooke that name from Seleucus, who made thereof a magnificent Cittie. Hierofolymitanus 10 thinkes it to be Ctefiphon, but Ctefiphon is seated downe low vpon Tigris, and Canneh cannot be on that fide. I meane on the East-fide of Tigris, for then were it out of the Plin. 16. 6.26. Valley of Shinar. Plinie placeth the Schenite vpon Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fourdable, which is toward the border of Syria, after it leaueth to be the bound of Arabia the Defart, and where the river of Euphrates reflecteth from the De-(art of Palmirena: for these people of Canneh (afterward Schenita) inhabited both borders of Euphrates, firetching themselves from their owne Cittie of Cannel in Shinar Weltward along the banks of Euphrates, as farre as the Cittie of Thap (acus, where Ptolomie appointed the Foords of Euphrates: which also agreeth with the description of the Schenita by Strabo, whose wordes are these; Mercatoribus ex Syria Seleuciam 20 er Babyloniam euntibus iter est per Schenitas. The Merchants which trauaile from Syria to Seleucia and Babylon, take their way by the Schenites. Therefore those which take Canneb for Charran doe much mistake it. For Charran, to which Abraham came from Vr in Chaldes (called by God) standeth also in Melopotamia, not you Euphrates it selfe, but upon the river of Chaboras, which falleth into Euphrates : and the Merchants of Charran are distinctly named with those of Canneh in Ezecbiel (as) they of Haran, and Cannel, and Eden, the Merchants of Sheba, Albur, and Chilmad were thy Merchants. Wherefore Charran which is sometime called Charre, and Haran, and Aran, is but the fame Charran of Mesopotamia; and when it is written Aran, then it is taken for the region of Melopotamia; or Aran fluviorum, the Grecke word (Melopotamia) impor- 30 ting, a Countrie betweene Rivers: for Melos in Greeke, is Medius in Latine, and Potamos, fluuius; and when it is written Haran or Aran, it is then taken for the Cittie it felfe, to which Abraham came from Vr (as aforefaid.) For Strabo in the description of Arabia, gineth that Tract of land from the borders of Calefyria, to the edge of Melopotamia, to the Schenite, who also inhabited on both sides of Euphrates, and were in after-ages accounted of these Arabians which inhabite Batanea, and the North part of the Defarts, stretching themselves toward the vnhabited Solitude of Palmirema, which lyoth betweene Syria, and Arabia the Defart. So as these of Canneh lay in the very high-way from Babylon to Tyre, and were neighbours (indifferent) to Charran and to Eden: and therefore they are by the Prophet Ezechiel coupled together, 40 they of Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, &c. But St. Hierome made a good interpretation of Canneh, or Chalne, by Seleucia: for Seleucia was anciently called Chalanne (witneffe Appian; ) and fo Rabanus Maurus callethit in his Commentaries ypon Genesis; the name by time and mixture of languages being changed from Chalne or Canneh, to Chalanne: of which name there are two other Citties, standing in Triangle with Selencia, and almost the next vnto it, (as) Thelbe-canne, and Mann-canne; the one a little to the West of Seleucia, and the other opposite vnto it, where these rivers of Tigris and Euphrates are ready to joyne. Therefore, which of these the ancient Canne was, (being all three within the bound of the Valley Shinar) it is vncertaine: but it is a note a fivel of the importance of the place, as of the certaine feate thereof, that fo 50 many other Citties did retaine a part of the name in so many ages after. Neither is it valikely, that these additions of Thelbe and Mann to the word Canne, were but to make difference betweene the East and the West, or the greater and the lesse Canne, or betweene Canne the old, and the new ; which additions to diffinguish Citties by, are ordinarie in all the Regions of the world.

Now of the other Cittie ioyned with Eden, as Haran or Charran, St. Hierome on the Indges speaketh thereof in these words: Cumg, reverterentur, peruenerunt ad Jud. 1. Charran, que est in medio itinere contra Niniuen, undecimo die, When they returned, they came to Charran, (which is the mid-way against Niniue) the elementh

This Cittie is by the Martyr Stephen named Charran (speaking to the high Priest: Tee men, brethren, and fathers hearken: The God of glorie appeared to our father ABRA- ARTIS HAM, while he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran. But the seate of this Cittle is not doubted of : for it is not only remembred in many Scriptures, but, with-10 all, exceeding famous for the death and ouerthrow of Craffus the Roman, who for his vnsatiable greedinesse was called Gurges anaritie, the gulfe of anarice. Whereof

But this Cittie Canne or Chalne is made manifest by Moses himselfe, where it is written of NIMROD. And the beginning of his Kingdome was Babel, and Erech, and Gen.10. 10, 20 Mead, and Chalne, in the land of Sinaar, or Shinar : where Mofes theweth the first compolition of the Babylonian Empire, and what Citties and people were subject vnto Nimrod, all which lay in the faid Valley of Shinar or nearest; and this Valley of Shinar is that Tract, afterwards called Babylonia and Chaldea, into which also Eden ftretcheth it felfe. Chaldea, Babylonia, Sinaar, idem funt (faith Comestor,) Three names of one Countrie : which Region of Babylonia tooke name of the Tower Babel; and the Tower, of the confusion of tongues. And that Shinar was Babylonia, it is proped in the elementh Chapter of Genelis, in these wordes; And as they went from the Vol. 2 East, they found a Plaine in the land of Shinar, and there they abode : in which Plaine Babylon was built (as aforefaid.) Now Shinar being Babylonia, and Canneh, in the first beginning of N imrods great-nesse, and before he had subdued any strange, or farre-off nations, being one part of his Dominion, and also named by Moses to be in Shinar, it proueth, that Canneh ioyneth to Babylonia; which also Ezechiel coupleth with Eden, and (further) affirmeth, that those of Eden were also the Merchants, which traded with the Tyrians : and Esat in the threats of Senacharib against Hierufalem ( with other Nations that Senacharib vaunted that his Fathers had destroyed) nameth the children of Eden which were at Telassar. But before I conclude where Eden it selfe lyeth, it is necessarie to describe those other Countries, which Ezerniel ioyneth therewith in the places before remembred, as, those of Sheba and Raamah. It is written in Genesis the tenth. Moreover Vers 7. 40 the sonnes of HAM were Cush, Oc. And the sonnes of CVSH were Scha, and Hauilah. and Sabtah, and Raamah, Gre. And the sonnes of R AAMAH were Sheba, Gre. and anon after Cvs H begat NIMR OD: fo as Sheba was the grand-child of Culh, and Nimrod the fonne of culb, whose elder brother was sebah: though some there are that conceine to the contrarie, that Nimrod was the elder in valour and vnderstanding; though not in time and precedence of birth; who inhabited that part of Shinar, where Babel was built, afterwards Babylonia. His brother Raamah or Regma, tooke that part adiopning to Shinar, toward the Sea-fide and Persian Gulfe (called afterward Raama and Sheba. by the Father and his Sonnes, which poffeffed it.) For (faith Ezechiel) the Merchants of Raamah and Sheba were thy Merchants; they occupied in thy Faires with the chief

70 of all spices, and all pretious stones, and gold. So as Sheba was that Tract of Countrie, which parteth Arabia deferta from Arabia Falix, and which joyneth to the Sea where Tigris and Euphrates fall out, and render themselves to the Ocean. This part, and the confining Countrie Strabo calleth Catabaria, where the best Myrrhe and Frankin- strabo, Las, cense is gathered; which people have an interchange or trade with Elana, lying on the East fide of the Persian Gulfe. By this it appeareth who were the Shebans, spoken of by Ezechiel, and faid to have beene the Merchants of Tyre, for gold, spices, and pretious flones: of which they had not only plentic of their owne, but were also furnished from that part of India (called Elana according to Strabo) for exchange of their Aromatiques and other proper commodities. For as Strabo reporteth out of E-RATOSTHENES. In Perfice ore initio Infula eft, in qua multi & pretiofi uniones giquantur ; in alus verò, clari & perlucidi lapilli. ERATOSTHENES (faith STRABO) affirmeth, that in the beginning of the Persian Gulfe there is an Island, in which there are many pretious pearles bred : and in other, very cleare and shining stones. Now the difference betweene Sheha, the fonne of Raamah, and Seba, the fonne of Culb, is in this, 10 That Seba is written with the Hebrew (Samech, ) and Sheba with (Schin: ) but whatfocuer the difference may be in the Hebrew Orthographic, their Countries and habitations are divers. For Sheba is that part which bordereth the Perfian Sea; and Saba (whence the Queene of Saba) neighboured the redde Sea; and fo that place of the 72. Pfalme, expounded. Reges Arabum & Saba, hath in the Hebrew this

The Shehans Exechiel nameth together with the Edenites, because they inhabited vpon the Out-let of the fame river, vpon which the Edenites were feated : and fo those of Sheba, towards the Sea-coast and vponit, past vp the Countrie, by Tieris and Euphrates, being joyned in one maine streame, and so through the Region of Eden which 20 Tigris boundeth, thereby the better to conucy their merchandife toward Tyre. And as the Citties of Charran, and Canneb, border Eden on the West and Northwest: fo doth Sheba on the South, and Chilmad on the North-east. Chilmad being a Region of the higher Media, as appearethin the Chaldean Paraphrast, which Countrie by the Geographers is called Coromitena, (L) placed by exchange for (R) which change the Hebrewes also often vse.

Thus much of those Countries which border Eden, and who altogether praded with the Tyrians: of which, the chiefe were the Edenites, inhabiting Telaffar : for these Senacharib vaunted, that his Fathers had destroyed; and this place of Telassar lay most convenient, both to receive the Trade from Sheba and Arabia, and also to 30 conney it ouer into Syria, and to Tyrus. Now to make these things the more plaine. we must remember, that before the death of Senacharib, many parts of the Babylonian Empire fell from his obedience, and after his death these Monarchies were vtterly difforned.

For it appeareth both in Efai the 37, and in the second of Kings, by the threats of Rabfache, the while the Armie of Affgria lay before Hierufalem, that the Citties of Gofan, Haran, Refeph, and the Edenites at Telaffar, had relifted the Affyrians, though by them (in a fort) maistered and recourred. Have the Gods of the Nations delivered them, whom my Fathers have destroyed, as Gosan, and Haran, Reseph, and the children of Eden, which were at Telassar. But it appeared manifestly after Senacharibs death, that 40 these Nations formerly contending, were then freed from the others subjection: for Efar-Haddon held Affyria, and Merodach Baladan, Babylonia. And after that the Ar-2.King. 19.35. mie of Senacharib, commanded by Rabfache, which lay before Hierufalem (Ezechias then raigning) while Senacharib was in £gypt, was by the Angell of God destroyed; the King of Babel fent to Ezechias, both to congratulate the recoucie of his health, and his victorie obtained ouer the Affyrians. After which ouerthrow Senacharib himselfe was flaine by his owne sonnes in the Temple of his Idols, Esar-Haddon succceding him in Affria. To the Babylonian Embaffadours fent by Merodach, Ezechias fhewed all his treasures, aswell proper as confecrate, which inuited the Kings of Baby/mafterward to undertake their conquest and subjection. So as, the suspicion of 50 warre encreasing betweene Babylon and Affyria, the Edenites which inhabited the borders of Shinar towards the North, and towards Affria, were imployed to beare off the incursions of the Affrians; and their Garrison-place was at Telassar: and the very word (Telaffar) faith Innius, fignifying as much, as a Bulwarke against the Affirians. This place Hierofolymitanus takes for Refem, others for Seleucia: but this Telastar is the same, which Am. Marcellinus in the Historic of Iulian (whom he followed in the enterprise of Persia) calleth Thilutha in stead of TelasTar, who describeth the exceeding strength thereof in his 24. Booke: It is feated in an Illand of Euphrates vnpon a steepe and vnassaultable Rocke, in so much as the Emperour Julian durst not attempt it; and therefore it was a convenient place for a Garrison against the Assyrians, being also a passage out of Mesopotamia into Babylonia, and in which the Edenites of the Countrie adioyning were lodged to defend the same. This place Ptolomie calleth Teridata, having Refeph (which he calleth Refepha) on the left hand, and Canneh, Afra Tab. 4. 10 (which he calleth Thelbe-canne) on the right hand, not far from whence is also found the Cittie of Mann-canne vpon Tigris, and all these seated together, as Esay and Ezechiel have forted them. But the vnderstanding of these places is the more difficult, because Assyria (which the Chaldeans call Atturia) and Mesopotamia, were so often confounded: the one taken for the other by interchange of Dominion. Affria & Mesopotamia in Babylonia nomen transferant (faith NIGER,) Affria and Mesopota- Colmon Alice. mia tooke the name of Babylonia. Lastly, it appeareth by those adjacent Regions by the Prophets named, in what part of the world Eden is feated, as, by Charran or Haran in Melopotamia : also by Canneh and Reseph, according to the opinion of Vatablus, who in these wordes translateth this place: Plantauerat autem I EHOVAH Deus hor-20 tum in Eden, ab Oriente, The Lord God planted a garden in Eden, Eastward; that is (faith he in his Annotations.) Of divers other testimonies of the land of Eden; and that this is the bia & Mesopotamia, He commanded trees to grow in Eden, an Easterne Region in the borders of Arabia and Melovotamia.

Mo for a more particular pointing out of this Eden, it seemes by the two Epistles of the Nestorian Christians, that inhabite Mesopotamia, which Epistles in the yeare 1552. they sent to the Pope about the confirming of their Patriarch, and Andraas Massus hath published them, translated out of Syriae into Latine. By these Epistles ( I say ) it seemes we may haue some farther light for the proofe of that, which we have faid about the Region of Eden in those parts. For in them both there is mention of the Island of Eden in the River Tigris, or at least, Tigris in both these Epistles is called the River of Eden. This Island as Masius in his Praface to these Epistles faith, is commonly called Gozoria (as it were, the Island, by an eminencie) It hath (faith he) tenne miles in circuit, and was 40 fometimes walled round about, which name of the Island Eden may (doubt leffe) remaine to this day; though in the rest of the Region so called this name be swallowcd vp, with the fame of those flourishing Kingdomes of McCopotamia, Aslyria, Babylonia, and Chaldea. This Island of Eden hath vo the River, and not farre beyond it the Cittie of Hasan-Cepha, otherwise Fortis Petra; below it, it hath Mosal or Mosel, from which (as in that which followeth it shall appeare out of Massius) it is not about twelue miles distant. Neither is it to trouble vs, that Mofal or Mofel by Marius Niger is remembred among the Citties higher vp Tigris, in these wordes. Inxta autem Vi sup a. Tigrim, Ciuitates funt Dorbeta prope Taurum montem, que nunc Mosel dicitur, magna sa-ne, &c. (that is) By Tigris are these Citties, Dorbeta neare unto mount Taurus (which 50 is now called Mofel) which is a great one, &c. This opinion of Niger, displacing Mofel, and making it to be Dorbeta (I fay) needes not here to trouble vs : seeing for this matter, the testimonie of Massius informed by the Christians that dwelt there (the Seat of whose Patriarch it is) ought to be of credit, anowing that this Mofal (or Mozal) is in the confines of Mesopotamia and Assyria, seated upon Tigris, and in the neighbourhood of Ninine; and that it is the famous Selentis Pathorum. The Neitorian Christian in their former epithle call it 2stur in their words: Ex omnibus Cinitatinus of pagis gue funt irruam Cinitation Mozal (but ell) Altun in vicinia Ninine; 90 fail the Citties and lowner which are about the Citie of Mozal (but it) Altun in the neighbourhood of Ninine. As allo Niege acknowledged telegibous. a Citie the receabout to be called Affair (which is the fame as Attur, after the Dudeti of those Nations, which change Shinto T:) Neither is it much that he should mistake Ctefiphon (which is not farre of the leneal) for Selentia, to be Affa. By this then we may come somewhat never the end of our purpose. For the sle of Eden, which lyeth in the breast of Trigris, is but twelue miles from Angla, and that ancient Citie; which Ptolame and Testus call Nijmus, and the Scriptures Nimus, Philostratus, and Simeon Sethi, Mosal, and John Leon Magla, did, others Mossific, (though it be not the same with Mosal) is set but a little higher youn the same riner of Trigris, nerre CMgla! for that we are like to sinde this site of Eden heere-about. For the same America Muslim which placeth it about CMgla, makes it to be belowy Halen-keeples, which is youn the same riner of Trigris, nerve CMgla! so that me riner of Trigris is port the same riner of Trigris, nerve CMgla! so that me riner of Trigris is never the makes it to be belowy Halen-keeples, which its youn the same riner of Trigris is never the same riner of Trigris in the rine riner of Trigris in the riner of the rine of the riner of the rine of the riner of

The onely difficultie is this, that some perhaps may thinke, that the words of the Nestorians in both their epiftles speake not of any Ile in Tigris, called the Ile of Eden. but of an Ile in Tigris, ariuer of Eden. But this sense of their words in my opinion seemeth the more vnprobable. And yet if this were the meaning heere, we have a teltimonie from the learned of those parts, that not onely Euphrates, but also Tigrie was 20 ariuer of Eden, and that the name of Eden in those parts is not yet quite worne out, though the Region hath beene subject to the same change, that all other kingdomes of the world have beene, and hath by conquest, and corruption of other languages, received new and differing names. For the South part of Eden, which stretcheth over Euphrates, was after the floud called Shinar, and then of the tower of Babel, Babylomia; and the North part of Eden is that Tract of Melopotamia, Allyria, and Armenia, which embraceth both the banks of Tigris, betweene Mount Taurus, and Seleucia. And of this Region of Eden that auncient AETHICVS maketh mention, (not that latter AETHICUS disciple of CALLINICUS, otherwise by PLVTARCH and ATHENAEVS called ISTRI, who lived in Agypt in the raigne of PHILADEL- 30 P H V S, but an other of a farre higher and remote time) the fame being made Latine out of Greeke by S. HIEROME. And though by corruption of the ancient coppie it be written in AETHICVS Adonu, for Edenis, yet Adonis being a river of Phanic/a, cannot be understood to be the region named by AETHICVS. For AETHIc v s makes it a Countrie, and not a river, and iovneth it with Melopotamia and Ethiopia, calling the land of CHVS Athiopia, after the Vulgar, and Septuagint. And laftly, the riner which watereth the Regions (layth AETHICVS) falleth into the Gulfe of Persia: which riner he calleth Armodius, for Tigris; Tigris being but a name imposed for the swiftnesse thereof. And out of Armenia both Tigris and Euphrates have their originall; for out of Eden came a river, or rivers, to water the gar- 49 den, both which rivers (to wit) Tigris and Euphrates come out of Armenia, and both of them trauerse Mesopotamia, Regions first of all knowne by the name of Eden for their beautie and fertilitie. And it is very probable, that Eden contained also fome part of Armenia, and the excellent fertilitie thereof in divers places is not vnworthie the name of Eden. For in some part thereof (fayth STRABO) the leaves are alwayes greene, and therefore therein a perpetual Spring. Also STEPHANVS de vrbibus mentioneth the Cittie of Adana vpon Euphrates: and the name of Eden was in vie in Amos time, though he speake not of Eden in the East, but of Eden in Calesyria. But to the end I may not burden the readers patience with too long a difcourfe, it may suffice to know, that Euphrates and Tigris (once ioyned together, and 50 afterward feparate) are two of those foure heads, into which these rivers which are fayd to water the garden of Paradift, were divided: whose courses being knowne. Eden, (out of which they are fayd to come) cannot be vinknowne. Now that Hidde-keland Perath were Tigris and Euphrates it is agreed by all: for the Seuentie and all others convert Peralb by Euphrates, & Hiddekel Tigrim omnes exponent: and all mon vandrstand Hiddekel by Tigrus (sayth Naraals:) And because that which I have style of the lie of Eden, shall not be subject to the censure of tell-sinentino, I have heere-vinder set down the words out of the two general episses of the Neithrians, as Massius (ad verbum) hath converted them into Latine. Theocasion of those letters and supplications to the Pope were, that the Neithrian Christians which inhabit McGoptamius, Africa, Persia, and Bulylouia, and have to thus day (at least in Queene Maries time they had) sifteene Churches in one Cittic, called Seleute Arthoram, or Mossel-upon the river of Tigris, having no sufficient authorities to choose themselves.

10 a Patriareh (which cannot be done without fower or three Metropolitan Bilhops at leath) fent to the Bilhop of Rome in the yeare of Chrift 1572 (as aforefaid) a Petition to obtaine allowance vnto fisch an election as themfelues had made; hauning three hundred yeare before that ypon the like defect, fent one Marans thither to be confirmed; and in this negotiation they make knowne to the Bilhop of Rome the flate of the Christian Church in those parts: for ypon the death of their Patriarich (who of a couctous defire to enrich himself had forborne to institute Metropolitane Bilhops, when the places fell voidy they all affembled themselues together to confult of the Church-gouernment. And became all the Patriarehs for 100 years had been of one house and familie to the prejudice of the Church, and that there yet remains 20 ned one Bishop of the same stock and kindred, who aspired to the same dignitic, which his Predecessours had held, the rest of the Professours refused to allow him. Vpon which occasion, and so the choice of a Gouernour more sufficient, the Teachers in all the Churches assembled themselves. The words of the generall epistle to the Pope are these, about the middle of the sayd epistle. From non non exceptanimus neque proclamatimus ipsum, sea shotic conventious exomnibus locis of reinstables, of ex omnibus Ciuitatibus & Pagia que sunt circum Ciuitatem Mosel (hoc essentialloss, vicinia Ninuas; ex Babylonia, ex Charrha, ex Arbella, ex Insila que est in medio Tierus, staminia Ninuas; ex Babylonia, ex Charrha, ex Arbella, ex Insila que est in medio Tierus, staminia chae, ex Tausis Perse, ex Nisila, ser wichia in sun we adioniblem except of this man, neither pronounced him: but suddenly we assembled our selves out of all parts of the 30 East, and out of all the cities and Villages which are about Mosel (or Attin') neighbouring \( \) inities, and out of Babylon, Carrba, Arbella, and out of the lland which byth in the middle of Tigers, a rhear of Edwa, or tather, and the Ite of Edwardship byth in the river Tigers.

And in a second epithe at the same time sent, they we these words: Neque specifions a pud nos Metropolites, quorum est ordinare Catholicum, sed soft pauci Episcopie, Episcopie Arbela, Episcopie Salmassis, Episcopie Salmassis, Episcopie Salmassis, etc.

Meither are there remaining among vs. any Matropolitum inter nos &c. (which is) Neither are there remaining among vs. any Matropolitum Bispops towhome it belongs to 40 is in Tigris, and aprecede between our seleus &c.

Now this lland of Eden Mafais describeth with other places, which being well conceived, the Xestorian episities, and the state of the Church may be in those parts (shyth he) the better undershood. And after he hath distinguished the flower fors of Christians in those parts of the world, and in the South part of Africa, which he calleth Nestorians, taobites, Maropite, and Cophis, he gooth on in these words. Move, auditaillius morts, concurrify airbant sumulturatio in illan quam mode dist Tigris triffulars, que duodecim circiter passamm millibus supra slocal posits, decem ser o millia pissum situation in the sum of the state of the Partiards, as those that the benimbus habitats: which is, Now bearing of the death of the Partiard, as those that came to Rome

50 reported) they ran tumultuoully together into that Ilandof Tigris or Eden before spoken Of, which Iland is shuated about 22 miles aboue Mosels, containing very neare ten miles in compasse, and cuery where innironed with swall, sinhibited by a few ather menthan Christians. And afterward he maketh a recapitulation of the Christian Churches, among the rest he addeth the sile of Eden by the name of Gesetts, Insula Tigris; sius Cesterts. 20

Furthermore, describing the Citic of Hosan-cepha, or Fortis Petra, he placeth it supra pradictam Tirris Insulam rupi aspera impositam, about the foresaid Iland of Tigris, being leated on a fleepe rock. Of this Iland of Geferta Andrew Theuet maketh mention in his tenth booke of his generall Cosmographie in these words: Geferta ou Gestre est an milieu de la riuiere du Tigre, & pense que c'est une terre des plus fertiles de toute l'Asie. Geserta or Gesire is in the middle of Tigris, the soile the most fertile of all Asia.

By this we fee that the ancient name of Eden liueth, and of that Eden, which lyeth Eastward from Arabia Petrea, and the Defart where Moles wrote, and that Eden which bordereth Charran according to Ezechiel, and that Eden which is scated according to the affertion of the faid Prophet, and joyned with those Nations of Re- 10 Gob, Cannels, and Charran, and the rest which traded with the Tyrians, and is found at this day in the parting of the two Regions of Asyria and Babylonia, where the Edenites in Thelassar were garrisond to relist the Assprians, whose displantation Senacherib vaunted of (as aboue written) and lastly, the same Eden, which embraceth Tigris, and looketh on Euphrates, two of the knowner iners of those foure, which are by all men ascribed to Paradife.

ð. XI.

Of the difficultie in the Text, which feemeth to make the foure rivers to rife from one streame.

Vt it may be objected, that it is written in the Text, That a River went out of Eden, and not Rivers, in the Plurall, which scruple Matthew Beroaldus hath thus answered in his Chronologie: The Latine Translation (fayth he) hath these words: Et fluuius egrediebatur deloco volup-tatis ad irrigandum Paradisum, qui inde dinidebatur in quatuor capita:

Que verbamelius consentient cum rei narratione, & eius dem explicatione, si ita reddantur, Et fluuius erat egrediens ex Edene, (hoc est) flauis procedebant ex Edene regione ad rigandum pomarium of inde dividebatur of erat in quatuor capita : which is And a River went 20 out of the place of pleasure to water Paradise, and thence was divided into foure heads; which words (fayth Beroaldus) doe better agree with the narration and explication of the place, if they be thus translated : And a river was going forth of Eden (that is) Rivers went forth, and ran out of the Region of Eden to water the Orchard, and from thence it was diutded, and they became foure heads. The Tigurine differs from the Vulgar or Latine. for it converts it thus: Et fluuius egrediebatur de delicus. And a River went out of pleasure in stead of Eden; and the Latine addeth the word locus, or place. Et flusius egrediebatur de loco voluptatis: And a River went out of the place of pleasure, and so the word (place) may rightly be referred to Eden, which was (of all other) a Region most delightfull and fertile; and so also the word (inde) and thence was divided, hath reference to the 40 Countrie of Eden, and not to the garden it felfe.

And for the word (river) for rivers, it is vivall among the Hebrewes; for it is written. Let the earth bud forth the bud of the hearbe, that feedeth feede, the fruitfull tree, &c. Heere the Hebrew vieth the Singular for the Plurall, hearbe and tree for hearbs and trees; and againe, we cat of the fruit of the tree, in stead of (trees:) And thirdly, The man and his wife hid themselves from the presence of God. In medio lignt Paradisi. In the middle of the tree of the garden, for (trees.) And of this opinion is David Kimbi, and Vatablus, who vpon this place of Genelis fay, that the Hebrewes doe often put the Singular for the Plurall, as illud, for vnumquodq, illorum, and he giveth an instance in this question it selfe, as A river (for rivers) went out of Eden.

And this answere out of divers of the learned, may, not without good reason, be given to the objection, That Moles speaketh but of one river, from which the heads should divide themselves. Howbeit I denie not, but with as good (and perhaps betzer) reason we may expound the fower heads, to be sower notable passages into famous Countries. And fo we may take the word (riner) verse the tenth for one riner (to wit) Euphrates, as this name comprehendeth all the branches thereof. For this River, after he is past the place, where we suppose Paradise to have beene, divides it felfe, and ere long yeeldeth fower notable passages into seuerall Countries, though not all the way downe streame, (for this is no where in the Text) where it is noted. that following the river downeward, there is conveyance into the Countries named in the Text, though part of the way to one of the Countries (to wit, to Allyria. were vo Tigris.

To this end the Text speaking of Hiddekel, as it riseth from the River of Eden. to doth not fay it compaffeth or walheth the whole Region of Affria, (as it had yied this phrase of Pison and Gehon) but that it runneth toward Assertia. The first branch Pilon, is Nahar-malcha, (by interpretation) Balilius, or flumen regium, which runnerh into Tigris vnder Apamia, whence ariseth the name of Pasitigris, (as it were) Piso-tigris. This leadeth to the land of Hauila or Susiana. The second branch Gehon, is that which in Historians is Nabarfares, or Narragas, for Nabar-ragas: both which names signifie flumen derivatum (a river derived) also Acracanus, quasi Ranosus, by reason of the froggie fennes which it maketh; this Gehon leadeth to the first seate of Chus, about the borders of Chaldaa and Arabia, and it is loft at length in the Lakes of Chaldea. The third branch, Hiddekel, may be expounded the ypper streame of Pi-

20 fon, or Basilius, which runneth into Hiddekel properly so called (that is, into Tigris) aboue Seleucia, where it sheweth a passage vp Tigris into Assyria: where, because at length it is called Hiddekel, or Tigris, having before no known proper name, the Text in this place calleth it Hiddekel from the beginning. The fourth Perath or Euphrates, so called per excellentiam, being the Bodie of the River Euphrates, which runneth through Babylon and Otris. But, be it ariuer, or rivers, that come out of Eden, feeing that Tigris and Euphrates are noted in the Text, there can be no doubt, but that Paradile was not farre from these Rivers: for that Perath in Moles is Euphrates, there can be no question; and (indeede) as plaine it is that Hiddekel is Tigris. For Hiddekel goeth (faith Mofes) Eastwards towards Affur, as we finde, that Tieris is the River of 20 Allyria proprie dicta, whose chiefe Cittie was Niniue, as in Genelis the tenth it is written: That out of that land (to wit) Babylonia, Nimrod went into Affar, and builded Niniue, which was the chiefe Cittie of Affyria. And as for the kinde of speech here yied in the Text, speaking of sourcheads; though the heads of Rivers be (properly) their fountaines, yet here are they to be vnderstood, to be spoken of the beginning of their division from the first streame. Caput aque (faith V LPIANVS) illudeft. unde aqua nascitur: si ex fonte nascatur fons: fiex flumine, vel ex lacu prima initia, &c. If the beginning of the water be out of a fountaine, then is the fountaine taken for the head: if out of a lake, then the lake; and if from a maine river any branch be separate and divided, then where that branch doth first 40 bound it felfe with new bankes, there is that part of the river, where the branch for-

Of the strange fertilitie and happinesse of the Babylonian soile, as it is certaine that Eden was such.

T may also be demanded, whether this region of Eden, by vs described, be of fuch fertilitie and beautie, as Eden the feate of Paradife was: which if it bedenied, then must we amo connect, since part of the earth, that retained that fertilitie and pleafure, that it had part of the earth, that retained that fertilitie and pleafure, that it had which if it be denied, then must we also consider, that there was no before the curse : neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulnesse to any part of the earth, nor the same vertue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the floud; and therefore this Region of Eden may be now no fuch flourishing Countrie, as it was when it was first created in his perfection. Yet this I finde Hand, Chailer, written of it: First in Herodotus, who was an eye-witnesse, and speaketh of the yery place it felfe, for the Ifle of Eden is but twelve miles or thereabout from Ninine, and To from Mofal. Ex Euphrate exicus in Tigrim, alterum flumen, justa and Vrbs Ninus fita erat, Hacvegio omnium quas nos vi limus, optima est, eye, Where Euphrates runneth Out into Tigris, not farre from the place where Ninus is feated, This Region, of all that we have feene, is most excellent; and he addeth afterward. Cereris autem fructu procreanelo adeò ferax est, vt nunquàm non serè ducenta reddat, &c. (that is) It is so fruitfull in bringing forth Corne, that it yeeldeth two hundred fold : The leanes of Wheate and Barley being 10 almost foure fingers broade: As for the height of Millet and Sesame, they are eurn'n length like anto trees, which although I know to be true, yet I forbeare to speake hereof well knowing, that those thinges which are reported of this fruitfulnesse, will sceme very incredible to those, which never were in the Countrie of Babylon. They have commonly in all the Countrie Palme-trees growing of their owne accord, the most of them bearing fruit, out of which they make both meats, and wine, and honnie, ordering them as the Fig-trees. Thus farre Herodotus.

To this Palme-tree so much admired in the East India, Strabo and Niger adde a fourth excellencie, which is, that it yeeldeth bread; Exquibus panem, or mel or vinum, & acetum conficiunt, Of which thefe people make bread, wine, honnie, and vineger. But 20 Antonius the Exemite findeth a fift commoditie, not inferiour to any of those foure, which is, that from this felfe-fame Tree there is drawne a kind of fine flaxe, of which people make their garments, and with which in East India they prepare the cordage for their flips; and that this is true Athanafius in the life of Antonius the Eremite confesseth, laying : That he received a garment made thereof from the Eremite himselfe, which he brought with him out of this Region. So therefore those trees, which the East Indies fo highly efterme and fo much admire (as indeede the Earth yeeldeth no plant comparable to this) those trees (I say) are in this upper Babylon, or Region of Eden, as common as any trees of the field. Sunt etiam (faith STRABO) passim per omnem regionem Palma fua spontenascentes, There are of Palmes ouer all the whole Region, grow- 30 ing of their owne accord. Of this place Quintus Curtius maketh this report. Euntibus à parte læna Arabia odorum fertilitate nobilis, regio campestris interest inter Tigrim & Euphratem, iacens two where & pingui solo, wt à pasturepelli pecora dicantur, ne satietas perimat, (that is) Is you transale on the left hand of Arabia (famous for plentic of fiveetodours) there lyeth a champaine Countrie placed betweene Tigris and Euphrates and fo fruitfull and fat a foile, that they are faid to drive their cattell from the pasture, least they should perish by fatietie. Bis in anno segetes Babylonii secant, The Babylonians cut their cornetwice a year (faith Niger.) And as Countries generally are more fruitfull to the Southward, then in the Northern parts: fo we may judge the excellencie of this by that report which Strabo maketh of the South part of Armenia, which is the North border 40 of Eden, or a part thereof; his wordes be these in the Latine, Tota enim hac regio frugibus & arboribus abundat mansuetis, items, semper virentibus, This Region aboundeth with pleasant fruits, and trees alwaies greene : which witneffeth a perpetuall Spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the Sunnesneighbourhood, the life and stirrer vp of nature in a perpetual lactinitie. In briefe so great is the sertilitie of the ground, that the people are confirmined twice to mow downe their cornefields, and a third time to cate them vp with sheep: which husbandrie the Spaniards wanting in the Valley of Mexico, for the first fortie yeares, could not make our kinde of Wheate beare feede, but it grew vp as high as the trees, and was fruitleffe. Befides, those fields are altogether without weedes (faith Plinie) who addeth this fingulari- 50 tic to that foile, That the fecond yeare the very stubble (or rather falling downe of the feedes againe) yeeldeth them a haruest of Corne without any further labour; his wordes are these: Vbertatis tanta funt, vt sequenti anno sponterestibilis flat seges.

Of the River Pilon, and the land of Havilah.

Fter the discourrie of Eden, and the testimonies of the fertilitie thereof, it resteth to proue that Pison and Gebon are branches of Tigris, and Euphrates. For that the knowledge and certainety of these two rivers should trouble so many wise men, it is strange to me, seeing necessitie it felfe (Tieris and Euphrates being knowne) findeth them out : for Eu-10 phrates or Tigris, or both be that river or rivers of Eden, which water Paradife, which riuer or riuers Moses witnessethafterward; diuided into soure heads, whereof the one is called Pifon, the other Gehon, &c. Could there be a stranger fancie in the world, then when we find both these (namely) Tigris and Euphrates in Allyria and Mesopotamia, to feeke the other two in India and Egypt, making the one Ganges, and the other Nilus? Two rivers as farre distant, as any of fame knowne or discovered in the world: the Scriptures making it fo plaine, that these rivers were divided into source branches; and with the Scriptures, Nature, Reason and Experience bearing witnesse. There is no errour, which hath not some slipperie and bad foundation, or some apparance of probabilitie refembling truth, which when men (who studie to be singu-20 lar) finde out, (straining reason according to their fancies) they then publish to the world matter of contention, and jangling: not doubting but in the variable deformitie of mens minds to finde some partakers or sectatours, the better by their helpe to nurse and cherish such weake babes, as their owne inventions have begotten.

But this miltaking (and first for the river of Pifon) feemeth to have growne out of the not distinguishing of that Region in India, called Hauilah, from Hauilah, which adioyneth to Babylonia, afterward knowne by the name of Susiana. For Hauilah vpon Tigris tooke name from Hauilah the sonne of Culh; and Hauilah in India from Hauilab the sonne of Lottan, the one remembred by Moses in the description of Paradise, Gen. 10.7.

the other where Mofe's fetteth downe the generations of Noah and his sonnes after 30 the floud. For the sonnes of Cush were Seba, Hauilah, Sabtah, and Raamah; and the fonnes of IoEtan were Ophir, and Hauilah, &c. of which later (to wit) of Ophir and Hauilah the fonnes of lottan, that iland of Ophir, (whence Salomon had gold) and Hauilah adioyning had their names. Now because Ganges is a great and a famous river of the East India, and Hauilah a Countrey of the same, and is situated upon Ganges, hence it came that Ganges was taken for Pifon, which river is faid by Mofes to water 2.11 the land of Hauilah. Or perhaps it was supposed that those source rivers, named by Moses, must of necessitie befoure of the greatest in the world; whence (supposing that Ganges was the next great and famous river after Tigris and Euphrates, they chole out this river to make one of the foure. And yet certainely there is an other river.

40 whome in these respects they should rather have chosen then Ganges; for the river Indus on this fide India, for beautie, for nearneffe, and for abilitie, giveth no way place to Ganges; but exceedeth it in all. And how can any reasonable man conceine, that Ganges can be one of the foure heads: feeing Indus commeth betweene it and Tigris; and betweene Tigris and Indus is all that large Empire of Persia, consisting of many Kingdomes. And againe, farther toward the East, and beyond Indust, are all those ample Dominions of India intra Gangem, which lie betweene those two proud rivers of Indus and Ganges, now called the Kingdome of Mogor. So as if Indus bee not accounted for any of the foure, because it is removed from Tigris by all the breadth of Persia, then how much lesse Ganges, which falleth into the Ocean, little lesse then

50 fortic degrees to the Eastward of Indus? Surely whosoeuer readeth the Storie of Alexander shall finde, that there is no river in Asia, that can exceede Indus. For Hydaspis was of that breadth and depth, as Alexander thereon in great Gallies transported himselfe and the greatest part of his armie, and in sayling downe that branch of indus, found it fo large and deepe, and by reason thereof so great a billow, as it endangered his whole Fleete, which was readie to be swallowed up therein: Hydaspis (as aforefaid being but one of many branches of Indus, comparable to it, and as great as it. having besides this, the Rivers of Coas, of Snastus, Acesines, Adris, (otherwise Hirotis) History, and Zaradrus, all which make but one Indus, and by it are swallowed vo with all their children and companions, which being all incorporate and made one ffreame, it croffeth athwart Alia, and then at Cambaia visiteth the Ocean Sea.

But because Pifon, which compasseth Hauilah, as also Gehon, which watereth Culb. must formewhere be joyned with the rest in one bodie, or at least be found to procced out of the same Countrie of Eden, out of which the other two heads doe proceed, out of doubt they cannot either the one or the other, be Ganges, or Nilus: for 10 Wilus rifeth in the vetermost of the South, and runneth Northward into the Mediterran Sea; and the River Ganges rifeth out of the mountaine Imaus, or (as others will haue it) Caucalus, which divides the Northerne Seythia from India, and runneth from North to South into the Indian Ocean. And as for Perath and Hiddekel (that is. Euphrates and Tigris) the one of them is begotten in Armenia, neere Georgiana or Iberia, the other not farre off in the fame Armenia, by the Gordinan mountaines, so as Ganges who onely transileth in her owne India, and N ilus through Athiopia and Agypt, neuer faw the land of Eden, or ioyned themselves in one Channell, either with themselves, or with either of the other; and therefore could not at any time from thence be separated, or divided into sower heads or branches, according to 20

Therefore the River Pifon, which enricheth Hauilah, is the same which by iovning it felfe with Tigris, was therefore called Pifi-tigris, or Pifo-tigris, of Pifon and Tigris, which river watereth that Havilah, which Havilah the fonne of Cvs H gauc name vnto, and not Hauilah of India, so called of HAVILAH the sonne of I octan, who inhabited with his brother OPHIR in the East. And this Hauilah of the Cuthites hath also Gold, Bdellium, and the Onyx stone. This Bdellium is a tree, of the bigneffe of an Oline, whereof Arabia hath great plentie, which yeeldeth a certaine gumme, fivect to finell to, but bitter in tafte, called also Bdellium. The Hebrewes take the Load-stone for Bdellium. Beroaldus affirmeth, that Bdela in Hebrew signi- 20 fieth Pearle: fo doth Eugubinus; and Hierome calls it Oleaster: be it what it will, a tree bearing gumme, or pearle: Hauilah, or Sufiana hath plentie of both. Now this Countrie of Susiana or Hauilah stretcheth it selfe toward the North, as farre as the Altars of Hercules, and from thence embraceth all that Tract of land Southward, as farre as the Persian Gulfe, on the East side thereof: from which East side had the Shebans (which traded with the Cittie of Tyre, according to Ezechiel) their great plentie of gold, which Straboalfo witneffeth, as was shewed before.

The Greekes had a conceipt, that Pifon was Danubius: the Rabbines take it for Nilus. Aben-ezra (fayth Hopkins) out of Rabbi Saadia translateth Pilon into Nilus: But Nilus findeth the fame impossibilitie that Ganges doth: and Danubius hath the 40 Sea of Hellespont and all Asia the leffe, betweene it and Tigris. Now Pison which runnoth through Hauilah or Susiana, doth to this day retaine some signe of this name: for where it and Tigris embrace each other under the Cittie of Apamia, there doe they agree of a joynet and compounded name, and are called Pifo-tigris. And it is strange vnto me, that from so great antiquitie there should be found remayning any resembling sound of the first name; for Babylon it selfe, which dwelleth so neere these rivers, is by some writers knowne by the name of Bandas, as, by Postellus, by Theuse, cosmis. Castaldus, of Baldach: by Barius, of Bagdad; and of Boughedor, by Andrew Theuet; and yet all those that hauc lately seene it, call it Bagdet. To this river of Pifon, Ptolomie indeed with many others give the name of Bafilius, or Regius, and Gehon they terme 50 Mahar-fares and Marsias, and Baarsares. So is Euphrates, neere the Spring and foun-Plintib. 5.c.24. taine, by Strabo and Plinie called Pixirates: by Junius, Puckperath, out of the Hebrew, (that is) The profusion, or comming forth of Euphrates: where it breaketh through the mountaine Taurus, it takes the name of Omyra. Plutareb calls it Medus and ZaranCHAP. 2. S.12. of the Hiltorie of the World.

da: the Hebrewes Parath, (fayth Ar. Montanus : ) Pagninus, Perath : Iosephus, Phorah ; Eulebius, Zozimus: Ammianus, Chalymicus: Gistilanus and Colinutius terme it Cobar: which Ezechiel calleth Chebar; but this is but a branch of Euphrates. The Affrians know it by the name of Armalchar or Nahor Malcha: but now commonly it is cal-

The same confusion of names bath Tigris, as, Diglito, and Diglath, Seilax, and Sollax: of the Hebrewes it was called Hiddikel: now of the inhabitants Tegil.

But Mercer vpon Genesis conceineth rightly of these rivers: for Euphrates and . Tieris (fayth he) streame into fower branches, two of which keepe their ancient 10 names, and the other two are called Pifon and Gehon. The reason, why these two riuers joyned in one (below Apamia) loofe their names, and are called Pifi-tioris, and the memorie of Euphrates extinguished, is, because the best part of Euphrates running through the channell of Gehon, linketh into the Lakes of Chaldaa, not farre from Vr, the Cittie of Abraham, and fall not intirely into the Persian Sea, as Tigris accompanied with Pilon doth.

This errour that Pifon was Gunges, was first broched by Infephus, (whose fields though they be fertile, yet are they exceeding full of weedes) and other men (who take his authoritie to be sufficient in matter of description, whereupon depended no other important confequence) were not curious in the examination thereof. For 20 Epiphanius, Augustine, and Hierome, take this for currant; whereof it followed that as Pifon was transported into the East India, to find out Hauilah : so was Gehon drawne into Africa, to compaffe Athiopia. But if Hauilah, whereof Moles speaketh in the description of Paradise, be found to be a Region, adjoyning to Babylon on the one side. and Culb (which is fallly interpreted Athiopia) faltened to it on the other fide, wee shall not neede then to worke wonders (that is) to impose vpon men the transportation of rivers, from one end of the world to the other, which (among other yes) were made to transport men. Now it was in the valley of Shinar, where Culb the fonne of Ham first fate downe with his fonnes, Sheba, Hauilah, Sabtah, Raamah, Nimrodge and of Hauilah, the fonnes of Cufh, did that Region take name, which Pilon 30 compaffeth; and the land (called Culh) which Gehon watereth, tooke name of Culh himselfe. For as the sonnes of Ioctan, Ophir, and Hauilah, seated themselves as neare together as they could in India, fo did the fonnes of Culh and Shinar or Babylonia. where Nimrod built Babel: for Hauilah or Chauilah was first Chusea of Cush; then Chafa, Sufa, and Sufiana,

From this Hauilah unto the Defarts of Sur, did the Ifraelites and Amalechites pofsessed the interiacent Countries: for Saul smote the Amalechites from Hauilah to 1, Sama 1, 76 Sur: which Sur the Chaldean Paraphrast converteth Hagra, and Hagra bordereth the redde Sea; but this was not meant from Sur vpon the redde Sea, to Hauilah in the East India, for Saul was no fuch trauailer or Conquerour, and therefore Hauilah must 40 be found nearer home, where the fonnes of Ifmael inhabited, and which Countrie Saul wasted : for Amalek and the Amalechites posses that necke of Countrie, between the Persian Sea, and the redde Sea; Hauilah being the extreme of the one towards the East, and Sur of the other, towards Egypt and the West, leaving that great body of Arabin faclix towards the South; and they spreade themselves with the Madianites and Edumeans, from the East part, or backe-fide of the Holie Land, to the bankes of Euphrates, comprising the best parts of Arabia Petraa, and Deferta.

Ow, as Hauilah in the East India drew Pifon so farre out of his way this ther, fo I fay did Cull (being by the Seventie translated Athiopia) force Gehon into Africa. For Culb being taken for Ethiopia by the Greekes, whom the Latins followed, Gehon confequently was effected for Wilus. But Athiopians are as much as blacke or burnt faces, whose proper 10

Countrie is called Thebaides, lying to the Southward of all Egypt. And although there be many other regions of Athiopians, and far South in Africa, yet those of Thebaides are those so often remembred in the Agyptian Stories, and out of which Nation they had many times their Kings of Agypt : all which Athiopians are very neare, or elfe directly under the Aquino tial line, which is very farre from that land inhabited by the Chustes; who are neither blacke of colour, nor in any fortheighbouring Torrida Zona. But this Translation of the Septuagint. Pererius doth qualific in this manner. There are (faith he) two Athiopia's, the East, and the West : and this divilion he findeth in Strabe, out of Homer. Now because there is no colour to make Chulh Athiopiain Africa , Pererius will make Chulh and the land of the Chu- 20 fites (which is Arabia Petraa, and a part of Arabia the happie, with the Region of Madian) to be the East Ethiopia.

Now if it be oraunted, that Culb and the land of the Chulites, be that Tract from Sur to Hauilah, according to the Scriptures; Habitauit Is MAEL ab Hauilah v (que Sur, que respicit Agyptum intracuntibus Assyrios, Ism NEL dwelt from Hauilah unto Sur, that is towards Agypt, as thou goest toward Affyria; The same sufficeth to proue that Gehon cannot be Nilus, but a river which watereth Cufb, and not Athiopia. But this place of Scripture Habitanit I SMAEL, &c. hath this fence. Ifmael dwelt from Hanilah. which is the way of Alliria, or the Countrie bordering Alliria; and Sur, which lyeth toward Agypt, which is as much to fay, as, The iffues of Ifmael (whereof there 20 were twelne Princes) whom God had promifed to make a great people, inhabited all those regions between the border of Agypt and Assyria. And that they were (according to the word of God) so increased and multiplied, it well appeared, when Zearah the Chufite, which others call Tharantha, brought an Armie of ten hundred thousand against Is King of Juda. Which Armie came not out of Athiopia beyond £gypt; for that had beene a strange progresse for such a multitude, as ten hundred thousand, having so mightie a King as the King of £gypt, betweene Pale-flina and Æthiopia. But these were the Chujites, Amalechites, Madianites, Ifmaelites, and Arabians, For it is written, that after Afa (strengthened by God) had defeated this world of an Armie, he in following his victorie tooke fome of the Citties of King 40 Zearah round about, as Gerar. Now that Gerar is a Cittie of the Æthiopians, it cannot be suspected: for these be the wordes of the Scripture disprouing it : And ABRA-HAM departed thence toward the South Countrie, and dwelt betweene Cadelh and Sur, and Colourned in Gerar; Now Sur is that part, upon which Mofes and the Ifraelites first fet their feete after they passed the redde Sea, where the Amalechites in Rephidim set on them, fuppoling that they had beene weary, and vnable to relift. Againe, in the Storie of iface it is written. Wherefore Is A A C went to Abimilech, and the Philistims unto Gen.26.1. Gerar: and I am fure Abimelech and the Philistims were no Athiopians. And laftly, Moles himselfe, where he describeth the bounds of Canaan, hath these words: Then the border of the Canzanites was from Sydon, as thou commest to Gerar: for Sydon was the Frontier of Cansan towards the North, and Gerar by Gazah towards the South. But indeede, howfoeuer Pererius doth with an honeft excuse salue his Translation of

together milvnderstand this place. And first, for Homers East and West Athiopia, teth Homer for an Author, of these two Ethiopia's. But the East Ethiopia is that which compaffeth Nelse to the South of Leypt, and is the South border thereof; now a part of the Empire of the Aby Sines, under Prefter John, And the West Athiopis is that, which joyneth it felfe with the river Niger, which we call Senega and Gambria : for thereabouts are these Ethiopians, called Perorli, Daratites, with divers other names, which Plinie numbreth. But all these are in Africa, and beyond the Defarts Plin Isc. 8. thereof, faith Plinie out of Homer, Agrippa, and Iuba; which Regions indeede (I they are both found elsewhere. For Plinie in his fift Booke and eighth Chapter, ci-meane that of Niger, and that of Prefler Iohn, and the Trogladytes) lie due East and West. But as for Culb, and the Region of the Ismaelites, &c. they are extended directly North from that Ethiopia, which is beyond Egypt. Now, that Iofephus was exceeding groffe herein, it appeareth by that fiction, which he hath of Moles when he ferued Pharas, in the warres against the Athiopians : for in that (to make Chu, Athiopia) hee transporteth Madian by miracle over the Red Sea, and beyond ail Egypt, and fetteth it in Athiopia, as shall be shewed more at large in the Chapter of the worlds plantation. Againe, that Gehon was improperly translated Nilus, Pererius confesseth, and laieth it rather to the corruption of the Greeke copie, than otherwife. And whereas the Septuagint have converted this place of the Prophet HIEREMIE. And what hast thou now to doe in the way of Agypt, to drinke the water c.2.v.18.

10 of Nilus ? Quid tibi vis in via Agypti, vt bibas aquam Gchon? to this faith Pererius. profecto Hebraice ibi non est vox Gehon , sed Sicher , que significat nigrum & turbidum ; Truly (faith PERERIVS) the word Gehon in this place, is not found in the Hebrew, but Sicher, which signifieth black and troubleth water.

Furthermore, this is a manifest and vnanswerable argument, that Chus was ill taken for Athiopia. Moles maried the daughter of Jethro, Prince and Priest of Madian, Frod 2. 25. whom both the Greeke and Latin call a Madianite, and not Athopissan, as ( with 10- 3.1. fephus ) the Geneua converts it, though it helpe it a little with a marginal note. Num. 12.1. Now it is without dispute, that Zipporah was of the Countrie of Madian, which is that part of Arabia Petraa, bordering the Red Sea; for it is written in the second of 20 Exodus, that Moses fled from PHARAO into the land of Madian, and fate downe by a V.15:

Wellere, and againe, in the third of Exedus, When Mos Eskept the sheepe of IETHRO VI. his father in law, Prieft of Madian Coc. Indeed, these four nations are enery where mixt in the Scriptures, because they dwell confusedly together (to wit) the Madianites, the If meelites, the Amalekites, and the Chafites, which were all in one generall word, arabians, and in the Scriptures fometimes called by one of those names, and sometimes by another, as in Gen. 27. 2.25.27. 28. that Joseph was fold to the Ismaelites; and in the same chapter, v. 36. it is written, that the Madianites fold Infeph to Putiphar , Pharay's fleward. The Geneuians, in a marginall note (to avoid this confounding of the Nations) fay, that Moles wrote according to their opinion, who tooke the Madianites and Ismaelites to be all one. But Moses wrote not after any mans opinion, he wrote the truth, and thefe were all Arabians, and fo in this very place it appeareth by their merchandise, which they brought with them, when they bought Ioseph : for their Cammells were loaden with spicerie, and Balme, & Myrrhe, which are the trades of Gm. 37.21. Arabia falix: from whence chiefly, and from the East India, all the world is serued with Myrrhe and Frankincense; and their spices they received from the East side of the Arabian Gulfe, as aforefaid. And in the 39. Chapter it is faid : That Putiphar v.t. bought Infeph of the Ismaelites, which the Chaldean Paraphrast in the same place calleth Arabians. Now to make this the more manifest, it is written in the 6. of Judges.

That when Ifrael had fowen, then came up the Madianites, and the Amalekites, and w. 50 they of the East, and came vpon them: they of the East, were Arabians of the Defart; To as where before in the buying of ioleph, the Madianites and the Ismaelites were confused, here the Madianites and Amalekites, are made one Nation. For in the profecution of the storie of Gedeon, the Madianites only are named, as comprehending Care both Nations; and in the eight Chapter, v. 2 4. these Nations are all called Ismaelites.

and neither Madianites nor Amalekttes. As when Gedeon defired, that cuery man would give him the golden ear-rings, which they bad taken, after the victoric against Zebah and Zalmanna, Kings of Arabia, amounting to 1700 shickles of gold, it is written: For they had golden eare-rings, because they were Ismaelites. And these Ismaelites were a great and valiant Nation, and euer in action of warre. Manus eius contra omnes, comanus omnium contra eum : His hand (faith Go D of I s M A E L) hall be avainst all men, and every mans hand against him. Of these Ismaelites came the Mahametan Arabians, though fome writers thinke Mahomet to be of the Schenita. And thefe Ifmaelites, which inhabite chiefly in Cedar, and the Defarts of Sur and Pharan (faith Infephus) vse poison vpon their arrowes, as the Indians doe. Towards the South-east 10 are the Madanites, and Chalites; and beyond them, towards the Defarts of Arabia, the Amalekites; and all are one Nation, and all Arabians.

Lastly, the ill translation of Athiopia for Chus, is, among other places, made most chronices, in the fecond of Chronicles, in these words: So the Lord streed up against I E H OR AM, the first of the Philiftines, and the Arabians, which confine the Athropians, fo Hierome reads it : the Geneua translation hath it, which were besides the Ethiopians. Now, how farre it is off betweene the Philiftines, and the Negro's, or the Athiopians, curry man that looketh in a Map, may judge. For the Philistines and Arabrans, doe mixe and joyne with the land of the Chulites, and are distant from £thiopia about two and thirtie, or three and thirtie degrees, and therefore not their next 20 Neighbours; but all Agypt, and the Defarts of Sur and Pharan, are betweene them. So as this place of the second of Chronicles, should have been translated in these Words: So the Lord flir ed up against I EHORAM, the spirits of the Philistines, and the Arabians, which confine and border upon the Chufites, who indeed are their next neigh-* Steach, Eu-bours.* Nulla superest dubitatio quin Æthiopia in sacrisliteris sit Arabia propinqua; There gub.in Gen. c.z. remaineth no doubt ((aith STEVCHIVS) but Ethiopia in the Scriptures, is taken for

Now may we thinke is it probable, or possible, that Mofes could be ignorant of Nilm? No heknew it, no living man fo wel, and therfore would never have named Gehon, for Nilus, or Nilus for Gehon. Surely if Moles had meant Nilus, when he named 20 Gelion he would have called the River (into which he was cast vpon reeds, and preferned by God, working compaffion in the Daughter of Pharao) a River of Agypt, wherein hee was borne and bred, and wrought fo many miracles. Befides the river of Nilus is often named in the Scriptures, but never by the name of Gehan. And if Moles had told the Ifraelites, that Nilus had beene a Riner of Paradife, they might justly have thought that he had derided them; for they had lived there all daies of their lines, and found no fuch Paradile at all, nor any memorie, or speech thereof; Plints.c.t. except we shall believe the Paradife of Helperides, where (faith Plinie) there was nothing found in his time, but wild Olives in flead of golden apples. But Nilus is twice called Sicher, once in Elay, and once in the Prophet Hieremie; and yet in those places 40 it is not faid to be a river of £thiopia, but of £gypt. For in a word, the Ifraelites had neuer any comunion or affaires with the Ethiopians, nor any intelligence, or trade, beyond Legrer, to the South; but the enemies, which they had on the South, and East parts, were these Nations of the Chastles, Philistines, Ifmaelites, Amalekites, and Multimites: who being often gouerned by many little Kings, or Reguli, were diftinguilhed in names, according to the Fathers and Heads of those Nations; but in one generall name were all Arabians. On the North fide of Canaan, they were afflicted with the Calefyrians, with the Magogians, Tubalines, and others their adherents; and thirdly within themselves, the Nations, which remained of the ancient Canaanites, held the strongest Ciries upon the Sca-coast (as) Tyre, Sidon, Acon, Gaza and many 50 others : yea, Hierofalem it felfe was with-held from Ifrael (from the daies of Mofes cuen viito the time of Dauid) by the Iebusites.

That which now remaineth of most difficultie is, that it doth not appeare, that any part of Gehon watereth that part of Arabia the stonie, which the Chastes inhabited in the times of the Kings of Ifraell: and in this Defart it was that Matt. Beroaldus loft himfelfe in feeking out Paradife: for he was driven (to my vnderstanding) to create two rivers, and call them Gehon, and Pilon; to the end that the one might water Chus, and the other Hauilah, for I finde none fuch in rerumnatura, ashe hath described : by which Rivers hee also includeth within Paradile, even arabia the

And as he well proued that Pifon was not Ganges, nor Gehon, Nilus: fo where to finde them else-where it feemeth he knew not. Certainely this river of Geben, which he maketh to fall into the Mediterran at Gaza, and whose springs he findeth farre 10 East in Arabia, is but imaginarie: for the Current by Gaza is but a small streame, riling betweene it and the red Sea, whose head from Gaza it selfe is little more then twentie English miles, as shall appeare hereafter. But questionlesse, hence it comes that many were mistaken. They all considered of the habitations of the Chaster, as they were planted when the flate of Ifraell flood, and when it flourished, being then their neere neighbours, and neuer looked back to the first seates and plantation of CHVS. For after the floud, CHVS and his children neuer rested, till they found the Valley of Shinar, in which, and necre which himselfe with his somes first inhabited. HAVILAR tooke the riner-fide of Tigris chiefly on the East, which after his owne name he called HAVILAH, (now Susiana:) Raamah and Sheba farther downe the 20 riner, in the entrance of Arabia falix. NIMROD feated himselfe in the best of the Valley, where he built Babel, whereof that Region had afterwards the name of Babylonia. CHVs himselfe and his brother MIZRAIM first kept upon Gehon, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea, and in proceffe of time, and as their people increased, they drew themselues more Westerly towards the red or Arabian Sea: from whence MIZRALM past ouer into Agypt, in which Tract the Chastes remayned for many yeares after. Now because there could be no such river found in Arabia the stonics which they might entitle Gehon, they translated Chus Aethiopia, and Gehon, Nilus. And if we doe examine this miltaking by example, we shall the better perceive it as it was. For let vs suppose, that BRVTE, or whosocuerelse that first peopled this

30 Iland, had arrived upon the River of Thames, and calling the Iland after his name BRITANNIA, it might be fayd that Thames or Tems was a river, that watered Britannia: and when afterwards in proceffe of time, the fame BRVTE had also discover red and conquered Scotland, which he also entituled by the same name of Britannia, after-ages might conclude that Scotland was no part thereof, because the river of Tems is not found therein. Or let vs suppose that EVROPA, the daughter of the King of Tyre in Phanicia, gaue the name to Europe, according to Herodotus, and that Hard. L. S. the first discouerers thereofarrined in the mouth of some riner in Crete, which then watered as much of Europe, as he first discouered, shall we in like fort resolue, that France, Spaine, and Halie, ere are no parts of Europe, because that River is not found 40 in them, or any of them? In like manner was it fayd by Mofes in his description of Gehon, that it watered the whole land of Chus; but not the whole land which the Chaftes should or might in future time conquer, people, and inhabit, seeing in afterages they became Lords of many Nations, and they might (perchance) have been Maisters in time, (as the Saracens which came of them were) of a great part of the world. For (though the Babylonian Empire, which tooke beginning in NIMEOD the sonne of CHVs, consisted at the first but of fower Citties, (to wit) Babel, Erech, Acad, and Chalne, yet we finde, that his Succeffours within a few yeares after commaunded all the whole world in effect; and the fame of Babel confirmed the memoric of Chusea. For of this Tower of Confusion did all that land take the name of Balislonia: and the greatnesse of that Empire founded by NIME OD a vonger some, ob-50 scured the name and nation of his father Cvs H in those parts, whill they crept farther off, and in places not yet entituled, and farther from the Babylonian Empire, where the Chastles retained their names, which also they fastned to the Soile and that C is visor any of his could in haft creepe through those desert Regions, which the length of 130 yeares after the shood had (as it were) fortified with thickers, and permitted encer'p bulh and briar, recde and tree to ioyne themselizes (as its were) into one maine body and Forrest. For if we looke with studgement and reason into the worlds plantation, we shall finde, that encery familie feated themselizes as never together as possible they could; and though necessific enforced them, after they grew full of people, to spread themselizes, and creepe out of Shinar or Badyleania, yet did they it with this adulie, as that they might at a litmes refort, and succour one another by river, the fields being then (without all doubt) impassable. So N 182-80 do, who out of wit and strength ssinged dominion ouer the rest, fact downe in 10 the very confluence of all those times, which watered Paradse; for this trivas to which the greatest troupes of N 0 at schildren repaired; and from the same place whence Mankinde had his beginning, from thence had they againe their increase. The first Father of men A 0 at 8, bean from thence his dispersion.

Now as N i me od the yongels, yet firongels, made his choice of Babel (as afore-faid) which both Tiepis and Emphrates cleanted and enriched; fo did Havillan place himfelte yon Pife-tiepis. R Aman it and his fonne S it is a Karterd downe you the fame river, on the Sen-coast of Larbás: C iv s himfelte you Gebon, the faired thranch of Emphrates. And when they began to fire and themfelves fruitter off, 20 yet they alwaies faitened themfelves to the rivers lides: for Ninime, Charran, Refeph, Canneb, 17 in Chaldes, and the other first-peopled Cairse were all founded you the familiant of the contractions of the chart of the contraction of stance to the other, as is already often remembred.

\( \lambda \times V. \) A conclusion by way of repetition of fomethings spoken of before.

Vt now to conclude this dispute, it appeareth to me by the testimonies of the Scriptures, that Paradise was a place created by God, and a part of this our earth and habitable world, stated in the lower part of the Region of Eden, afterward called Caranssulaus run, or Melsopatamin, which taketh into it allo a portion of Sbinur and Armenia; this Region flanding in the mole seccellent temperorial others, (to win') 37 degrees from the Acquimettiall, and 57 from the North pole: in which Climate the molt excellent wines, fruites, oyle, graine of all forts are to this day found in abundance. And there is nothing that better prough the excellencie of this fayd foile and temper, then the abundant growing of the Palme-trees, without the care and labour of man. 45 For wherein foeuer the Earth, Nature, and the Sunne can molt vannt, that they haue excelled, yet shall this Plant be the greatest wonder of all their works: this true alone giueth vitto man whatfocuter his life beggeth at Natures hand. And though it may be fayd, that these trees are found both in the East and West Indies, which Countries are also blefted with a perpetual Spring and Summer, yet lay downeby those pleasures and benefits the tearchill and dangerous thunders and lightnings, the horrible and frequent Earthquakes, the dangerous diseases, the multitude of we nimous beatls and worms, with other inconneniences, and then there will be found no comparison between the one and the other.

What other excellencies this garden of Pandaffe had, before God, (for mansin- 50 gratitude and crueltie, curfed the earth) we cannot indge; but I may fafely thinke, that by how much Amexeceded all liming men in prefettion, by being the immediate workemanthip of God, by 6 much did that chofen and particular garden exceeded all parts of the Vniuerfall world, in which God had planted (that is) made to grow the trees, of Life, of Knowledge; Plants only proper, and becomming the Paradife, and Garden of fo great a Lord.

The fumme of all this is, That whereas the eyes of meninthis Scripture haue beene dimme-fighted (fome of them finding Paradife beyond our knowne world: been annucing the order of their linding Paraage beyond our knowne world: fome, about the middle Region of the aire: fome; cleuated neare the Moone: others, as farre South as the Line, or as farre North, as the Pole, &c.) I hope that the Reader will be fufficiently fatisfied, that these were but like Cattles in the aire, and in mens fancies, vainely imagined. For it was Eastward in Eden (faith (Afales)) Eastward, in respect of Indea, that God planted this garden, which Eden we finde in the Prophets where it was, and whereof the name (in some part) remaineth to thisday. A River went out of Eden to water this garden, and from thence divided it selfe into foure branches; and we finde that both Tigris and Euphrates swimming through Eden doe joyne in one, and afterward taking waves apart doe water Chus and Hauilah, according to Mofes: the true feates of Chus and his Sonnes then being in the Valley of Shinar, in which Wimrod built Babel. That Pifon was Ganges, the Scripture, Reason, and experience teach the contrarie: for that which was never ioyned cannot be divided. Ganges, which inhabiteth India, cannot be a branch of the Rivers of Eden; That Gehon was Wilus, the same distance maketh the same impossibilitie, and this River is a greater stranger to Tigris and Euphrates, then Ganges 20 is: for although there are betweene Tigris and Ganges aboue four thousand miles, yet they both rise in the same quarter of the world; but Nilus is begotten in the mountaines of the Moone, almost as farre off as the Cape of good hope, and falleth into the Mediterran Sca : and Euphrates distilleth out of the mountaines of Armenia. and falleth into the Gulfe of Persia: the one riseth in the South, and travaileth North: the other rifeth in the North, and runneth South, three score and three degrees the one from the other. In this leafe following I have added a Chorographicall description of this terrestrial Paradise, that the Reader may thereby the better conceine the preceding discourse; and this is the reward I looke for, that my labours may but receine an allowance suspended,

CHAP. IIII.

Of the two chiefe Trees in the Garden of Paradife.

That the tree of Life was a materiall tree : and in what sense it is to be taken, that man by his eating the forbidden fruit, is made fubieet to death.

O a eating the forbidden fruit of the Tree of Knowledge was Adam driven out of Paradife, inexilium vita temporalis, into the banishment of temporall life. faith Beda. That these trees of Life and Knowledge were materiall trees (though Figures of the Law and of the Gospell) it is not doubted by the most religious 20 and learned writers; although the wits of men, which are fo volatile, as nothing can fixe them, and fo flipperie, as nothing can fasten them, haue in this also deliuered to the world an imaginarie doctrine. The tree of Life (fay the Hebrewes) hath a plurall construction, and is to be understood, Lignum vitarum, The tree of lines, because the fruit thereof had a propertie, to preserve both the growing, sensitive, and rational life of man; and not only (but for Adams transgression) had prolonged his owne Bart, 6 dayes, but also given a durefull continuance to all posteritie; and that, so long, as a bodie compounded of Elements could last.

And although it is hard to thinke, that flesh and bloud could be immortall, but that it must once perish and rot, by the vnchanged law of God imposed on his creatures, Man (notwithstanding) should have enjoyed thereby a long, healthfull, and ungrieued life: after which (according to the opinion of most Diuines) he should haue beene translated, as Enoch was. And as before the floud, the daies of men had the long measure of eight hundred or nine hundred yeares; and soone after the floud of two hundred yeares and vpwards euen to fine hundred : fo if Adam had not difobeyed Gods first and easie Commandement, the lines of men on earth might have continued double, treble, or quadruple to any of the longest times of the first age, as many learned men haue conceined. Chryfostome, Rupertus, Tostatus, and others were 40 of beliefe, that (but for Adams fall and transgression) Adam and his posteritie had been eimmortall. But such is the infinite wisedome of God, as he foresaw that the Earth could not have contained mankinde; or elfe, that Millions of foules must have beene vngenerated, and haue had no being, if the first number, wherewith the Earth was replenished, had abode thereon for euer: and therefore that of Chryfostome must be vnderstood of immortalitie of bodies, which should have been translated and

But of what kinde or Species this tree of Life was, no man hath taken on him to teach; in which respect many have conceived, that the same was not materiall, but a meere Allegorie, taking their strength out of Salomon, where Wisedome is compared 50 to the Tree of Life, and from other places, where also Christ is called the Tree of Life, and out of the Apocalypsis, I will give to him that overcommeth, to eate of the Tree of life, which is in the Paradife of God. But to this place St. Augustines answere may fuffice, (which is) That the one doth not exclude the other, but that, as there was a terrestriall Paradife, so there was a celestiall. For although Agar and Sarawere Figures of the old, and New Testament, yet to thinke that they were not Women, and the maide and wife of Abraham, were meere foolishnesse. And so in this place the fense of the Scripture is manifest. For God brought out of the earth enery tree faire to fight, and freet to taste; the tree also of life in the midst of the garden: which sheweth. that among the trees, which the Earth by Gods commandement produced, the tree of Life was one, and that the fruit thereof was also to be eaten. The report of this Tree was also brought to the ancient Poets: for as from the indigested matter or Chaos, Hesiodus, Homer, Ouid, and others steale the invention of the created world:

to fo from the Garden of Paradife, they tooke the Plat-forme of the Orchard of Alcinous, and another of the Helperides : and from the tree of Life, their Nectar and Ambrosia; for Nettar, according to Suidas, signifieth making young, and Ambrosia, immortalitie; and therefore faid to be the meate and drinke of the Gods.

II.

of BECANUS his opinion that the Tree of Knowledge was Ficus Indica.

Ow for the Tree of Knowledge of good and euill, fome men haue prefumed farther, especially Goropius Becanus, who giveth himselfe the honour to have found out the kind of this Tree, which none of the Writers of former times could euerghesse at, whereat Goropius much maruaileth. But as he had an inuentiue braine, so there neuer liued any man, that beleeued better thereof, and of himselfe. Surely howsoeuer his opinion may be valued, yet he vsurpeth the praise due to others, at least if the invention be at that price at which he settethit. For Moses Bar-cephas fastened on this coniecture aboue fixe hundred yeares before Becanus was borne: and Bar-cephas himfelfe referreth the invention to an antiquitie more remote, citing for his Authour Philoxenus

30 Maburgensis, and others, whose very wordes Goropius vseth, both concerning the Tree, and the reasons wherewith he would induce other men to that beliefe. For Moles Bar-cephas in his Treatise of Paradise (the first Part and fol. 49.) faith, That the Tree of Knowledge was Ficus Indica, the Indian Fig-tree, of which the greatest plentie (faith Becanus) are found vpon the bankes of Acelines, one of the Rivers which fallethinto Indus, where Alexander built his Fleet of Gallies in, or neare the Kingdome of Parus

This Tree beareth a fruit of the bignesse of agreat peaze, or (as Pliniereporteth) plin.l.s.s.s. somewhat bigger, and that it is a tree fe femper ferens, alwaies planting it felfe; that it

spreadeth it selfe so farre abroade, as that a troupe of horsemen may hide themselves 40 vnderit. Strabo faith, that it hath branches bending downewards, and leaues no leffe Lib. Leap. 2. then a shield. Aristobulus affirmeth that siftie horsemen may shadow themselves vnder one of these trees. Onesieritus raiseth this number to soure hundred. This tree (faith Theophrastus) exceedethall other in bignesse, which also Plinie and Onesicritus confirme: to the truncke of which these Authours give such a magnitude as I shame to repeate. But it may be, they all speake by an ill-vnderstood report. For this Indian Fig-tree is not fo rare a Plant, as Becanus conceineth, who because he found it no where elfe, would needes draw the garden of Paradife to the Tree, and fet it by the river Acesines. But many parts of the world have them, and I my selfe have seene twentie thousand of them in one Valley, not farre from Pariain America. They 50 grow in moist grounds, and in this manner. After they are first shot up some twentie or thirtie foote in length, (fome more, fome leffe, according to the foile) they foread a very large toppe, having no bough nor twigge in the truncke or stemme : for from the vtmostend of the head branches there issueth out a gummic iuyce, which hangeth downeward like a cord or finnew, and within a few Moneths reacheth the ground; which it no fooner toucheth but it taketh roote, and then being filled both from the toppe boughes, and from his owne proper roote, this corde maketh it felfe a Tree exceeding halfily. From the vtmost boughes of these young trees there fall againg the like cordes, which in one years and leffe (in that world of a perpetual) forme) become also trees of the bignesse of the nether part of a launce, and as straight, as art or nature can make any thing, casting such a shade, and making such a kinde of groue, as no other Tree in the world can doc. Now one of these trees considered with all his young ones may (indeede) shrowde foure hundred or foure thousand horsemen, if they please; for they couer whole vallies of ground where these Trees grow neare the Sea-banke, as they doe by thousands in the inner part of Trinidado. 10 The cordes which fall downe ouer the bankes into the Sea, thooting alway downeward to finde roote under water, are in those Seas of the Indies, where Oisters breed. intangled in their beddes, fo as by pulling vp one of these cordes out of the Sea, I haue seene frue hundred Oysters hanging in a heape thereon; whereof the report came, that Oyfters grew on trees in India. But that they beare any fuch huge leaues, or any fuch delicate fruit I could neuer finde, and yet I haue transiled adozen miles together under them; but to returne to Goropius Becanus. This tree (faith he) was good for meate and pleasing to the fight, as the tree of Knowledge of good and enill

Secondly, this tree having to huge a truncke (as the former Authours report, and 20 Becanus belocueth) it was in this tree that Adam and Eue hidde themselves from the presence of God, for no other tree (faith he) could contain them. But first it is certaine, that this Tree hath no extraordinarie magnitude, as touching the trunke or stemme, for among ten thousand of them it is hard to finde any one bigger then the rest, and these are all but of a meane size. Secondly, the wordes of Moses translated in medialiani, are by all the interpreters understood in the plural number, (that is) in the middest of the trees. But his third argument (or rather the argument of Moses Bar-cephas, word for word) is, that when Adam and Eue found themselves naked, they made them breeches of Fig-leaues; which proueth (indeede) that either the tree it selfe was a Fig-tree, or that a Fig-tree grew neare it: because Adam being possest 20 with shame did not runne vp and downe the garden to seeke out leaues to couerhim. but found them in the place it felfe; and the feleaues of all other were most commodious by reason of their largenesse, which Plinie anoweth in these wordes; Latitudo foliorum pelt a effigiem Amazonia habet, The breadth of the leaves hath the shape of an Amazonian shield : which also Theophrast confirmeth; the forme of which Targets Virgil toucheth:

Gen.3.7.

Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis Penthefilea furens.

The Amazons with Crescent-formed shield Penthefilæa leades into the field.

Here Becamus defireth to be believed, or rather threatneth vs all that reade him, to give credit to this his borrowed discoverie, vsing this confident (or rather cholericke) speech. Quis erit tam impudenter obstinatus, si hac à nobis de sieu hac ex antiquis scriptoribus cum Mosis narratione comparet, vt audeat dicere aliam arborem inueniri posse, que cum illa magis quadret, Who will be so impudently obstinate, if he compare these thinges which we have reported of this Fig-tree, and out of ancient Writers delivered, with the narration of Moses, as to dare to anow, that any other tree can be found, which doth to more properly answere, or agree therewith. But for my selfe, because I neither find this tree, forting in body, in largenesse of leaues, nor in fruit to this report, I rather incline to the opinion of Philo: That the Earth neuer brought forth any of these trees neither before nor after; but I leave every man to his owne beleefe, for the matter is of

ð. III.

Of BECANUS his not unwittie allegorizing of the Storie of his Ficus Indica.

Vt in this I must doe Becanus right, that he hath very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his supposition of the Tree it selfe to be true. The effects whereof because his discourses are exceeding ample, I have gathered in these few wordes. As this Tree (faith he) so did Man, grow straight and vpright towards God, vntill such time as hee had transgreffed and broken the Commandement of his Creatour; and then like vnto the boughes of this tree, he beganne to bend downeward, and flouped toward the earth, which all the reft of Adams posteritie after him have done, rooting themselves therein, and fastning themselves to this corrupt world. The exceeding vmbragious-20 neffe of this tree he compareth to the darke and fladowed life of man, through which the Sunne of inflice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the lhadow of death, till it pleased Christ to climbe the tree of the Crosse for our enlightning and redemption. The little fruit which it beareth, and which is hard to finde among fo many large leaues, may be compared (faith he) to the little vertue, and unperceived knowledge among to large vanities, which obscure and shadow it ouer. And as this fruit is exceeding fweet, and delicate to the taste and palate, so are the delights and pleasures of the world, most pleasing while they dure. But as all those thinges which are most mellishuous, are soonest changed into choller and bitternesse: fo are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest forrowes and repen-30 tances. That the leaues are so exceeding large, the fruit (for such leaues) exceeding of worldly men, their following the more than the many cares and great labours of worldly men, their follicitude, their outward shewes, and publike often tation, their apparent pride and large vanities; and if we seeke for the fruit, which ought to be their vertuous and pious actions, we find it of the bigneffe of the finallest peaze, glorie, to all the world apparent; goodnesse, to all the world invisible. And furthermore, as the leaues, bodie, and boughes of this tree, by fo much exceede all other Plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly abilitie surpasse the meanest: so is the little fruit of fuch men, and fuch trees, rather fitting and becomming the vnworthieft shrubbe, and humblest bryar, or the poorest and basest man, then such a flou-40 rishing statelinesse, and magnitude. Lastly, whereas Adam, after he had disobayed God, and beheld his owne nakednesse and shame, sought for leaves to cover himfelfe withall, this may ferue to put vs in minde of his and our linnes, as often as we put on our garments, to couer and adorne our rotten and mortall bodies: to pamper and maintaine which wee yee fo many vncharitable and cruell practifes in this world.

Q. IIII.

Of the name of the tree of Knowledge of good and euill: with some other notes touching the Storie of ADAMS finne.

Ow, as touching the sense of this tree of Knowledge of good and cuill, and what operation the fruit thereof had, and as touching the properand what of the Tree it felfe, Moses Bar-ephas an ancient Syrian Doctor (translated by Massus) giveth this indgement: That the fruit of this tree had no such vertue or qualitie, as that by the talting thereof, there was any fuch knowledge created in Adam, as if he had beene ignorant before: but as Iunius also noteth, Arbor scientia boni & mali (idest) experientia boni & maliabeuentu, The Tree of Knowledge of good and enill (that is) the experience of good and enill by the e-uent. For thus much we may conceive, that Adam being made (according to the Hebrew phrase) by the workemanship of Gods owne hand, in greater perfection then euer any man was produced by generation, being (as it were) the created plant. out of whose seede all men liuing haue growne vp; and hauing received immortalitie from the breath or spirit of God, he could not (for these respects) be ignorant. that the disobaying of Gods commandement was the fearfullest cuill, and the obseruation of his precepts the happiest good. But as men in perfect health doc (not-10 with (tanding) conceiue, that ficknesse is grieuous, and yet in no such degree of torment, as by the fuffering and experience in themselves they afterwards witnesse: so was it with Adam, who could not be ignorant of the punishments, due to neglect and disobedience; and yet felt by the proofe thereof in himselfe another terrour then he had forethought, or could imagine. For looking into the glaffe of his owne guiltie foule, he beheld therein the horrour of Gods judgements, fo as he then knew, he feelingly knew, and had triall of the late good, which could not be prized, and of the new purchased euill, which could not be exprest. He then saw himselfe naked both in bodie and minde; that is, deprined of Gods grace and former felicitie; and therefore was this tree called the tree of Knowledge, and not because the fruit thereof had 20 any such operation, by any selfe qualitie or effect; for the same phrase is vsed in many places of the Scriptures, and names are given to Signes and Sacraments, as to acts performed, and thinges done. In such fort as this tree was called the tree of Knowledge, by cause of the euent (as is aforesaid) so was the Well of contention therefore called Elek, and the Well of hatred Sitnath, because the Heardsmen of Isaac and Gerar contended for them; and the heape of stones, called the heape of witnesse, betweene Jacob and Laban, not that the stones bare witnesse, but for a memorie of the couenant. So Jacob called the house of God Bethel: and Hagar, the Well in the Defart, Vinentis,

> But Adam being both betrayed and maistered by his affections, ambitious of a 30 farther knowledge then he had perceived in himselfe, and looking but slightly (as all his iffues doe) into the miferies and forrowes incident, and greatly affecting the fupposed glorie which he might obtaine by tasting the fruit forbidden, he was transported and blowne forward by the gentle winde of pleafing perfuations vnawares; his progreffion being strengthened by the subtile arguments of Sathan, who laboured to poylon mankinde in the very roote, which he moistned with the liquor of the same ambition, by which himselfe perished for euer.

But what meanes did the Deuill finde out, or what instruments did his owne subtletic present him, as fittest and aptest to worke this mischiefe by ? even the vnquiet tette present ining as incert and aperture works that initiation of the voice of his wife, contrarie 40 to the expresse commandement of the liuing God, Mankind by that her incantation became the subject of labour, forrow, and death: the woman being given to man for a comforter and companion, but not for a Counsellour. But because thou hast obayed the voice of thy wife, ere. (faid God himselfe) Curfed is the earth for thy fake, in forrow shalt thou eate of it all thy life. It is also to be noted, by whom the woman was tempted; euen by the most vgley and vnworthy of all beasts, into whom the Deuill entredand perswaded.

Secondly, what was the motive of her disobedience: even a defire to know what was most visitting her knowledge, an affection which hath euer since remained in all the posteritie of her Sexe. Thirdly, what was it that moued the man to yeeld to 50 her perswasions ? euen the same cause which hath moued all men since to the like confent, namely an viwilling neffe to grieue her and make her fadde, leaft flie should pine and be ouercome with forrow. But if Adam in the state of perfection, and Salomon the fonne of David Gods chosen servant, and himselfe a man endued with the greatest wisedome, did both of them disobay their Creatour, by the perswasion and for the loue they bare to a woman, it is not fo wonderfull as lamentable, that other men in fucceeding ages have beene allured to fo many inconvenient and wicked practifes by the perfyalions of their wives, or other beloued Darlings, who couer ouer and shadow many malicious purposes with a counterfait passion of diffimulate forrow and vnquietnesse.

Снар. V.

Of divers memorable things betweene the fall of Adam, and the floud of Noah.

Of the cause and the reuenge of CAINS sinne: and of his going out from God.

HE same pride and ambition which beganne in Angels, and afterward possest Adam, Cain also inherited: for Cain (enuious of the acceptation of his brothers prayer and facrifice) flew him, making himfelfe the first man-slayer, and his brother the first Martyr: the reuenge of which 'vinaturall murther, although it pleafed God to mitigate, when Cain cryed out that his punishment was greater then he could beare. For the same offence chiefly (wherewith the sonnes of Adam, as it were, vrged and prouoked God) he destroyed all mankinde, but Noah and his familie: for it is written.

The earth also was corrupt before God: of which in the same place Moses giveth a rea- Gent waters

After this murther of A BEL, CAIN went out from the presence of the Lord; and dwelt in the land of No D, Gen. v. 16, towards the East fide of Eden : in which wordes The going out of Cain from the presence of the Lord, is not to be understood after the literall sense; God being wholly in all parts of the world. of CAINS dwelling in the land of NOD; and of his Cittie Enoch.

His word Nod or Naid St. Hierome and many others understand to signific wandring, or incertaine habitation : vexation or agitation, faith Junius; but the Seuentic conuert it otherwise, and take Nod for the proper name of a Countrie, and so doth tosephus. But it seemeth to me, that Cam was rather a vagabond or wanderer in his cogitations.

then any thing elfe, and that his thoughts and conscience had no quiet or rest, in re- 10 gard of the murther committed, justly fearing (by his owne words) the like violence: And who so euer findeth me (saith Cain) shall slavime. Now that Nod or Naid was a Region wherein Cam inhabited, appeareth by the word (dwell) for dwelling signifieth an abiding: and we call those people wanderers and vagabonds that haue no dwelling place. And to make this dwelling and abiding more manifest, Mose teacheth in what part of the earth this his habitation was, which he affirmeth towards the East side of Eden. Secondly, it is said by Moses, that after Cain departed from the presence or fauour of God, he built a Cittie, and called it by the name of his first borne, Enoch; which sheweth that he feared to wander, and rather sought to fortifie himselfe against reuenge. Cyrillus faith, that Cain and Abel were figures of Christ 20 and of the Iewes; and that as Cain, after that he had flaine Abel vniuftly, had thenceforth no certain cabiding in the world : fo the Iewes, after they had crucified the Sonne of God, became Runnegates: and it is true, that the Tewes had neuer fince any certaine Estate, Commonweale, or Prince of their owne vpon the earth. Now this land of Nod, Innius taketh to be in Arabia Deferta, a Region of Nomades; but Arabia the Defert is not Eastward, or on the East part of Eden, neither are these Normales any particular people or Nation. For all these, in what part of the world soener, which in old time liued by pastorage, and fedde (as we call it in Ireland) ypon white meate without tilling of the ground, are called by the Greekes Nomades, and by the Latines Pastores vagi, as the Northern Tartarians, the Getulians, and Numidians in 30 Africa, the ancient Brittans, and the Northern Irifb: yea fuch were the inhabitants of Italie it selfe, till such time as Italies (who gaue them that name) taught them the husbandrie of tillage vsed at this day. But the Region Eastward from Eden is that part of Affyria, called by Ptolomie, Calena, which also might be derived of Carena, the Countrie of Cain. And that Cain inhabited in those parts it may be gathered by the first possession of his Father Adam; for thus it is written Gen. 3. Therefore the Lord

God fent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the earth whence he was taken: and in the

Verse following: Thus he cast out man, &c. and at the East side of the garden of Eden he fet the Cherubins: which sheweth that the entric into Paradife was from the East, by which entrance Adam was cast out, and therefore inhabiting on that side of Paradise 40 which was Eastward; according to the Text. Cain also in the same Region sought his dwelling place. Now, if the word Nod or Naid doe fignific profugus, that is, a fugitiue, wee can giue no longer time to this vncertaine habitation of Cain, then till hee built the Cittie of Enoch, the first of the world, which he inclosed either for his owne defence, or (as to lephus writeth) to oppreffe others thereby. So as for mine owne opinion I am resolued with the Septuagint that Nod was the proper name of a Region; and for the word (vagabond) which Cain vieth of himfelfe, it seemeth by the perclose of the same Verse, that (vagabond) is therein understood for such an one astrauaileth infeare of reuengement ; for whofoeuer findeth me (faith CA'IN) fhall flay me; or else (vagabond) is taken for a man without protection, and cast out from the fa-

And because these Henochians, so called of the Cittie Henoch, were the first societie and civil affemblie of all other, it is likely that the fame of these people (either for crueltie, firength, or other actions) lived in the memorie of Avah and his fonnes; fo CHAP.5. that after the floud (as there were of all forts of natures, some vertuously, some impioufly disposed, and every active minde setting before it whom to follow or imitate) those people, which delighted in crueltie and oppression tooks on them their names whose natures they most liked and allowed; of whom these Henochians were not the leaft. Perchance the place it felfe where Henoch flood before the floud, and whereof the monuments might remaine (as the pillars or the foundation of Joppe) did gaue occasion to the planters of that place to call themselues by the same names: for of those Henochians there were many Nations in the borders of Pontus, and Colchis in Iberia, Serdiana, and Bactria, and of the fame name many mountaines, as those to which are otherwise called Coraxici. And seeing that it is hard to finde out the truth Quotidie aliquid of these things, which the most aged time hath couered ouer or defaced, wee may be mutator, work (according to the counfaile of Plato) exceedingly rejoyce, and therewith fatisfie our orbital fundafelues, if of fo great and almost worne-out antiquitie, if of the eldest peoples names menta inclinatur,

In * Plinie , P. Mela, Strabo , Valerius Flaccus. Lucan , Stephanus , we finde those this nom-nibus Henochei described, though diuersly written, as in Plinie, sometimes Henochi, in Mela prioribus oriun-Emochi, in Flaccus Heniochi, in Lucan Enochi, all which inhabite vpon the Sea Euxinus, Albimum. but yet none of these are on the East side of Eden, or (according to Moses words) East- * Plin. 1.6.c.9. ward from Eden. For Moles, in all places where he describeth any Region, was so attl. Level. 20 exceeding precife; as fometime he vieth the word East or South without borrow- Strabo.L.11. exceeding precile; as lometime he vietn the word East or South without borrow-ing or addition, at other times with a borrowing, as Eastward or Southward, or to-Lucant, 3, 3, 7, wards the East or South. In the place of Genesis the eleventh he writeth the word (East) simply and directly. And as they went from the East , they found a Plaine in the v.a. land of Shinar, but in this of Cain he addeth the word (towards) as, in the land of Nod towards the East fide of Eden; which may be taken, as inclining some one point or two either to the North or to the South, of the East.

But as we may conjecture that these Nations tooke name of Henoch, the Cittie of Cain, or of the Region wherein it flood, when the same was repeopled after the floud: fo it is probable that these Henochij of Colchis, and other parts adjoyning, were 30 not the first of that name, after the sonnes of Noah beganne to fill the world againe: because, had this Henoch the Cittie of Cain stood in any of these parts, it had then beene feated North, and not East or Eastward from Eden. But as Plinie findeth their habitation towards Pontus, so afterwards he goeth on Eastward, till he tracke them or trace them out to their originall. For he calleth these of Colchis (now Mengrelia) Plin 1.5.c.s. Sanni Heniochi; Ptolomie Zani; beyond which an hundred and fiftie mile Eastward Ptolsab. Afia. 3 he findeth another Nation of them about Iberia and Albania; and beyond these againe he discouereth a third Nation, from whence all the rest tooke beginning, which inhabited on the West side of the mountaines of Paro-panifus, between them and the great river of Oxus, which bordereth Bactria on the North fide; and these 40 Henochij are due East from the Region of Eden, and Eastward from the very garden

And although we cannot be affured, that these Henochij tooke name from the memorie of the Cittie of Enoch directly, yet because they inhabited due East from Paradife, and afterwards spred themselves Westward (as all Noahs sonnes did that came into Shinar) the conjecture is farre more probable, then that of Annius the Fryar, who fets Henoch in Phanicia, quite contrarie to Mofes word : Phanicia from all parts of Eden being directly West.

And befides these severall Nations of the Henochii, Stephanus findeth a Region cal- steph. de Vrb. led Henochia, and the same also in the East, with divers mountaines about Bactria and 50 Sogdiana of the fame name. Only the Gracians (according to their fabulous inuentions of all things elfe) out of the word (Heniochi) which fignifieth Carts or Coachmen, make these Nations to have sprung from the Waggoners of Castor and Pollux Nat, comes cal-(to wit) Amphites and Telchius, who attended them in the enterprise of Infor into leth them Rive-Colchis. #### ð. III.

Of Moses his omitting fundry things concerning CAINS generation,

Vt of the remembrance and testimonies of the name of the Cittie of Henoch in prophane storie, thus much may suffice; Now it followeth to answere some few objections against certaine particulars in the fourth and fifth Chapter of Genefis: against which for the first it is demanded, how it was possible for Cain (having no other affistance then his fonne Henoch) to performe fuch a worke as the building of a Cittie, feeing there is thereto required fo many hands, and fo great a maffe of all forts of Materials? To which it is answered, that we are first to consider, That of Cain (because he was the Parent of an impious race) Moses vseth no ample declaration; and so it best agreeth with his divine reason, seeing that he containeth the whole storie of the first race, 20 which wasted by the least account 1656. yeares, in fine short Chapters. Yet thus much may euery man borrow of his owne weakest reason, That seeing it pleased God to bestow on the first generations of mens lines solong a measure, as 800. and 900. yeares, that in fuch a space Cain had not want of leasure and meanes to build many fuch Citties as Henoth, be the capacitie answering to what other of the world focuer: for in what age of Cains life he built it, the Scriptures are filent : as of whose times, and the times of his iffues Mofes had the least care. And as it was faid of Cain, that he built a Cittie: fo was it faid of Noah, that his three fonnes peopled all the world; but in both the processe of time required to be understood; which adulse feeing Moses vseth where the space lesse requireth it, as knowing that hee writthe 30 Scriptures to reasonable men, we may easily understand, that such was his meaning also in all reports of like nature. For in making but a difference betweene the birth of Abel, and oblation of Cain, he spake it in this fort, Fuit autem post dies multos or à fine dierum (that is) in processe of time it came to passe that CAIN brought an oblation. And therefore it is in like fort to be understood of Cain, that many yeares fore-gone, and when his people were increased he built the Cittie of Enoch or Henoch,

And where it is written, as of Cain, that he built Enoch, so of Salomon, that he built the Temple of Hierusalem; yet it is well knowne of Salomon, that he employed in that worke 1 50000. labourers: for this phrase or speech is common with our selues to fay, The King inuaded; when he caused an inuasion to be made: and he built, 40 when he commanded such a building. And therefore seeing we finde, that Moses had no regard to the ages, to the birth, or to the death of any of Cains iffues, it is not to be maruailed at, why he also passeth ouer in a word the building of Enoch, without addition of any circumstance : for of Cain, Moses writeth in this manner: CAIN also knew his wife, who conceived and bare HENOCH, and he built a Cittie, and called the name of the Cittle after the name of his sonne Henoch. And to Henoch was borne IRAD, and IRAD begat MEHVIAEL, and MEHVIAEL begat METHY-

Now of Seth, Moles writeth farre otherwise, and in this manner. And SEVH lined 107. yeares, and begat ENOCH, and SETH lined after he begat ENOCH 807. 50 yeares, and begat Sonnes and Daughters : fo as all the daies of SETH were 912. yeares, and he died: as for the yeares and times of the wicked they were not numbred in libro viuentium, faith Cyril. But in Seth was the Church of God established, from whom Christ descended, as touching his manhood: and therefore this way and worke Mofes walked in, and finished it with care, passing ouer the reprobate generation (as aforefaid.) Of the line of Adam by Cain, Moses remembreth but eight generations, reckoning Adam for one, and of the line of Adam by Seth ten, counting Adam alfo therein, as followeth:

TI. ADAM.

2. Cain. 2. Henoch.

4. Irad. s. Mahuiael. 6. Mathulael.

Lamech, who by Ada had 8. Iubal and Tubal, and by Silla Tubalcain, and Woema.

Cainan.

Mahaleel. Israd. Henoch.

Mathusalem. 9. Lamech, and

These be the generations of Adam by Cain, which the Scriptures mention : but Iofephus giueth vnto Lamech three score and seuenteene Sonnes and Daughters , by his two wines Ada, and Silla : and to these three sonnes of Lamech, Moles ascribeth 20 the invention of Pastorage, of Musicke, and the working in mettall; for it seemeth that Iubal first gathered together, and made familiar those beasts which formerly were vntamed, and brought them into heards and droues: Tubal invented Mulicke, Gen.4.30,21.13 and Tubalcain the working in braffe and yron: the one being addicted to hulbandrie, the other was Mechanicall, the third given to idlenesse and pleasure. In whom beganne these three meaner degrees of Sheep-heards, handy-crafts-men, and Musitians. And in the issues of Seth beganne the services of God, Divinitie, Prophecie, and Astronomic: the children of the one beheld the Heauens, the other the Earth.

d. IIII.

Of the diversities in the ages of the Patriarchs when they begat their children.

Second fcruple hath beene made, How it came to paffe that the Patriarchs begat their children at fo divers ages, as Cainan or Cenan at feuentie yeares, Mahaleel and Enoch at three score and five yeares, whereas Iared begat not any of his untill he was 162. yeares old: Mathusalems begat at 187. Lamech at 182. and Woah at 500. yeares. Now this difference hath beene the more enforced, because it cannot be conjectured, that either Iared, Mathusalem, or Lamech abstained from marriage out of the religion of ab-40 stinence, seeing that Enoch, who was translated by God for his singular fanctities, begat children before he was three score and ten yeares old.

The apparent difference hereof arifeth in this, that Mofes did not number the generations before the floud precifely, according to the first begotten and eldest sonnes of the Patriarchs, but he drew downe the line of Noah from Seth, and afterward from Noah to Abraham, by their true Ancestors were they elder or younger as he found them: for it is likely that Henoch was not the eldest of Iarad, nor Lamcch the first borne of Mathufalem, nor Noah of Lamech; neither is there any thing knowne to the contraric, but that Noah might have had many fonnes before Shem, Ham, and Japhet, though these three were only named, and surviving, and which by God were reserved to be 50 the Fathers of mankinde after the floud; and therefore when we finde Mahaleel to be begotten by Kenan at three score and ten yeares who was the first sonne of Kenan, and then reckon that Mathusalem begat Lamech in the 187. yeare of his life, the difference feemeth strange, where Lamech is taken for the eldest. But Mofes rejecteth all the other sonnes of Mathusalem but Lamech only, because he was the Father of Noah as aforesaid. Of this St. Augustine hath somewhat else in his 20. and 21. Chapters, De Cinitate Dei.

But as Moses counted the generations of the first age, and so to Abraham, and the children of the promise after him, so doth St. Matthew recite the Genealogie of Christ, not by the eldest fonnes, but from those whom God had chosen and blessed, without respect of the first borne, who have hereby the prerogative in Estates, worldly and transitoric only; and therefore the Enangelist nameth Isaac, and not Ismael, though Ismael were first in time : so doth he take Iacob the younger, and not Esau the elder; neither is Christ derined from any of the three eldest Patriarchs, Reuben, Simeon, or Leur, but from Inda a fourth brother, and so from Danid a younger sonne of Iessa; 10 and lastly we finde, that the Kingdome it selfe of Inda was not given to the Heire in nature, but to the Heire of grace, namely Salomon.

Of the long lines of the Patriarchs : and some of late memorie.

He third objection is, that the great difference of yeares between those of the first age, whereof some of them had well neare seene a thousand yeares, makes it disputable, whether the account of times were of the 20 fame measure as in after-ages, seeing that soone after the floud men liued not a third part of that time, and in fucceeding ages and to this

They that have hereon resolued that those yeares were but Lunarie yeares, (to with of a Moneth or thereabouts, or Ægyptian yeares, are easily confuted. For whereas Seth begat Enosh in the yeare of his life 105, if those yeares bee taken but for Moneths, then had Seth lived but eight yeares and one Moneth when he begat Enolb: and if the time of Enolb have the fame allowance, when he begat Kenan, then could Enoth at that time have beene but ' yeares and fortie eight weekes old; and fo it may be gathered of the rest; excepting only 12 , who was created perfect in 20 his kinde, as were the trees in their kinde, bearing fruit and feede. But this were too ridiculous to imagine. For to giue an abilitie of generation at 6. 7. or 8. yeares, agreeth with the fhort lines of Se Pigmies, and not with the conflictations of our first Fathers, who being descended from Alam, the workemanship of Gods hands, and begotten and borne in the strong youth of the world, had length of daies and abilitie of body agreeable. Againe, if we allow this idle conceit of the Lunarie yeares, then there would follow this extremitie, that those which lived longest, and vpwards of nine hundred yeares, had by that accompt but the time of foure score and ten and odde yeares, which were not only lesse by farre then the Patriarchs lived after the floud, but short of many mens lives in this decrepit age of the world, wherein many 40 exceede foure foore, and fome hundred yeares. Further (if neede be) to diffroue this reckoning, whereas its written Gov. 25. That Abraham died in a good age, an old man, and of great yeares: all which (if the former account were of Lunarie yeares) makes but feuenteene and an halfe of our yeares.

And if we feeke for a cause of this long life in nature, then is it reasonable, that the first man, created in highest perfection, should also beget children of equal strength or little differing; for of the first and purest seede there must of necessitie spring up the fairest and fruitfullest Plants. Secondly, the earth it selfe was then much lesse corrupt, which yeelded her increase, and brought forth fruit and foode for man, without any fuch mixture of harmefull qualitie, as fince that time the curse of God for 50 the crueltie of mans heart brought on it and mankinde : Neither had the waters of the floud infused such an impuritie, as thereby the naturall and powerfull operation of all Plants, Hearbes, and fruits you the earth received a qualification and harmefull change. And as all things under the Sunne have one time of strength, and anCHAP.5. S.5. of the Historie of the World.

But belides the old age of the world, how farre doth our education and fimplicitie of liuing differ from that old time? the tender bringing vp of children, first fedde and nourished with the milke of a strange Dugge; an vnnatural curiositic haumo taught all women (but the begger) to finde out Nurfes, which necessitie only ought to commend vnto them: The hastie marriages in tender yeares, wherein, Nature being but yet greene and growing, we rent from her and replant her branches, while her felfe hath not yet any roote fufficient to maintaine her owne toppe; and fuels halfe-ripe feedes (for the most part) in their growing vp wither in the budde, and waxe old euen in their infancie. But aboue all things the exceeding luxuriousnesses this gluttonous age, wherein we pressenature with our waightie burdens, and finding her strength defective we take the worke out of her hands, and commit it to the artificiall helpe of ftrong waters, hot fpices, and prouoking fawces: of which Lucan hath these elegant Verses:

to by infpiration, the holy Ghoft guiding the hand of Moles; yet it is manifelt, that the knowledge thereof might by tradition (then yied) be deliuered ynto him by a more certaine prefumption, then any or all the testimonies which prophane antiquitie had preserved and left to their successours: which their wife men (as they terme them) did lay up and defend from the injurie of the time and other hazards. For, leauing to remember that Adam instructed Seth, and Seth his children and succesfours, which cannot be doubted of, it is manifest, that Methusalem lived together with Adam himselfe two hundred fortie and three yeeres, and Noah with Methufalem no leffe then fine hundred yeeres: and before Noah died Abraham was fiftie and eight yeeres old; from whence this knowledge by an easie and ordinarie way 20 might come to Ifrael, and fo to Moles.

But befides this tradition, it is questionlesse, that the vse of letters was found out in the very infancie of the world, proued by those prophecies written on pillars of ftone and Bricke by Enoch: of which Iofephus affirmeth, that one of them remained Inch. euen in his time, (meaning belike some ruine or foundation thereof) which pillars by others are ascribed to Seth. But of these prophecies of Enoch Saint Inde testifietth; and some part of his Bookes (which contained the course of the Starres, their names and motions) were afterward found in Arabia fælix in the Dominion of the Queene of Saba: (faith Origen) of which Tertullian affirmeth that hee had seene and read some whole pages. It is not therfore strange, that Moses came to the know- Origen. Homit :

Now for the Bookes of Enoch, how focuer fome men make question of them, sure I am that Tertullian, Origen, Augustine, Beda, Procopius, Gazeus, (with others) cite Orig. Hamilas, them in their History and the Company of them in their writings: although Medina, for an argument to prooue them vnwritten traditions, all eageth that Pope Gelassus among other the Apolnyphall Script Europelaban, ten traditions, all eageth that Pope Gelassus among other the Apolnyphall Script Europelaban, Script Europelaban tures (which he rejecteth) named not these of Enoch; but that whatsoener was remembred out of them, the same was deliugred by Tradition from the Jewes. 40 Irather thinke with Pererius that fuch a Booke there was, and that the fame was corrupted after the death of the Apostles, and many things added thereinto by heretikes, who tooke occasion vpon the antiquitie thereof, and out of that place of Michael contending with the deuill about the body of Atafes; to frame and adde thereunto many inuentions of their owne. One of the greatest arguments against these Bookes, is that neither Philo, nor Iosephus (the most diligent searchers of Antiquitie) make mention thereof. But against it I will set this opinion of Saint A v-CVSTINE, Scripfisse quidem nonnulla diuina En och illum septimum ab ADAM negare non possumus: That ENOCH the sewenth from A DAM did write divers divine things we cannot denie. Now his writings which came afterwards to light, were suspected because of the antiquitie, & of fables of Giants supposed to be begotten of Angels, and 50 others, and by fo much the more, because no such Booke was found amongst those Canonicall Scriptures, kept by the diligence of the Hebrew Priests in Armario Iudates (faith Tertuldian) who yet affirmeth that this Booke might bee preferred by Tertul de kajin.

litric leffe: Alfo Mafiniffa of Numidia lived very long, and Dando of Illyria. Among the Kings of Arcadia many lived three hundred yeares (faith Ephorus ) Hellanicus atfirmeth of the Epcians, that some of them line full two hundred yeares; and so doth Diodorus Siculus of the Egyptians; and that these reports are not fabulous; To sephus bringeth many witnesses with himselfe, as, Marethon, Berofus, Mochus, Ellius, Hieronymus . Egyptius, Hecataus, Ephorus, and others. And Anthonie Fume an Historian of good reputation reporteth, that in the years 1570, there was an Indian prefented to Solyman, Generall of the Turkes Armie, who had out-lived three hundred yeares. I my felfe knew the old Counteffe of Desmond of Inchiquin in Munster, who lined in the yeare 1589, and many yeares fince, who was married in Edward the 10 fourths time, and held her Ioynture from all the Earles of Defenond fince then; and that this is true, all the Noblemen and Gentlemen of Auntler can witnesse. Strozzius Cigogna, out of Torquemada Maffaus, and the like Authours, telleth of some that have not only farre exceeded the terme preferibed by Epigenes; but beene repaired from the withered cltate of decrepit age to fresh youth. But for length of life, if we note but the difference betweene the abilitie of men in those daies wherein Galen the Philition lived, it may calify prove vnto vs what reedes we are in respect of those Cedars of the first age. For Galen did ordinarily let bloud fixe pound weight. whereas we (for the most part) stoppe at fixe ounces. But to conclude this part, there are three thinges (not counting Constellations) which are the natural causes 20 of a long and healthfull life; (to wit) ftrong Parents, a pure and thinne aire, and temperate vse of diet, pleasure, and rest: for those which are built of rotten timber, or mouldring ftone, cannot ftand long vpright; on aire we feede alwaies and in euery inflant, and on meates but at times : and yet the heavie loade of abundance, wherewith we oppresse and ouercharge Nature, maketh her to sinke vnawares in the midway; and therefore with a good constitution, a pure aire, and a temperate vse of those thinges which Nature wanteth, are the only friends and companions of a long life.

Fourth scruple hath beene made, How the certaine knowledge of the Creation came to Moles, seeing there was no Storie thereof written, and if any fuch had beene, yet it is conceiued, that all memorie of Antiqui-tic perished in the vniuerfall floud.

But if we consider the curiofitie and policie of elder ages, we shall find that knowledge was the greatest treasure that men sought for, and which they also coursed 40 and hid from the vulgar fort, as iewels of ineftimable price, fearing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious: so as whatsoener was attained vnto concoming God, and his working in nature, the same was not left to publike dispute, but deliuered ouer by heart and tradition from wife men to a posteritie equally zealous. Ex animo in animum fineliteris, medio intercedente verbo . From minde to minde without Letters, by way of tradition or word of mouth. And it was thought by Efdras, Origen, and Hilarius, (as Mirandula conceineth) that Mofes did not onely you the Mount receive the Law from God, but withall fecretiorem of veramlegis enarrationem, a more fecret and true explanation of the Law, which (faith he out of the fame Authors,) he delivered by mouth to Iofuah, and Iofuah to the Elders: For to teach these mysteries, 50 which he called feeretion to the rude multitude were no other quam dare fanctum canibus, & inter porcos spargere margaritas, then to give holy things to Dogges, and to cast pearles before fivine. In fucceeding times this understanding and wisedome began to be written in Ciphers, and Characters, and letters bearing the forme of beaftes, denie; how they were deliuered to posteritie I know not, whether by the Ienes Cabala, or by what other meanes, the fame is but mans coniccture. And (certainly) by the knowledge ascribed to Noah of the motions of the heavens, and of the natures and conjunctions of the Starres; and afterwards to fome of his fonnes, to Zoroaster, and then to Abraham, it is very probable that Noah had seene and might preserve this booke. For it is not likely, that so exquisite knowledge therein (as these men had) was fuddenly invented and found out, but left by Seth to Enoch, and by Enoch to Noah, as hath beene faid before. And therefore if letters and arts were knowne from the time of Seth to Enoch, and that Noah lived with Methnfalem, who lived with Adam, and Abraham lived with Noah, it is not strange (I say) to conceive how Moses 10. came to the knowledge of the first Age, be it by letters, or by Cabala and Tradition, had the vindoubted word of God neede of any other proofe then felfe-authoritie,

Ow let vs confider the relation of Mofes, who nameth seuen descents of Cains children, and of Adam by Sethten: Seth being given by God in fread of Abel; and of Seth was Enosh begotten, in whose time men be- 29 ganne to proteffe Religion, and to offer factifice in publike. For although Adam inftructed his children in the knowledge of God their

Creatour, as appeared by the facrifice offered by Cain and Abel; yet it feemeth that after the birth of Enosh men beganne publikely to call on the name of the Lord, that is, they ferued and praifed God by Communion and in publike manner, or calling vpon the name of the Lord, and thereby were the sonnes of God or the godly distinguilhed from the wicked. From the birth of Enosh the sonne of Seth to the time of Henoch the sonne of Lared there is nothing remembred by Moses, but their owne births, the births of their fonnes, the length of their lines, and deaths. But of Henoch it is written, that he walked with God, and he mas no more feene : for God tooke him a- 30 way. By that, that he walked with God, was meant, that he was a inftand vpright man, and that he feared, loued, and obayed God. For the same phrase Moses vieth of Noah. NOAH was a just and upright man in his time, and NOAH walked with God. The Seuentie conuert it , ENOCH placuit Deo : HENOCH pleased God. And although Aben-Ezraand others understand this place, (tuliteum Deus:) scilicet, mortuus est, God tooke him away (that is) he died, which (indeede) agreeth both with the phrase of the Scripture, and with our manner of speech to this day, to say, God tookehimaway, when hedied; yet the difference which Moles maketh betweene the pictic of Henoch and the rest of the Patriarchs, and by omitting the word (death) which hevfeth to all elfe, makes it manifest, that Henoch was not dissolved as the rest. For to all 40 the rest of the Patriarchs, Moses wieth these wordes, Andhe died; but of Henoch he spake otherwise, saying only, he was missing, or he was not seene. Et non inueniebatur (faith the Epistle to the Hebrewes) quia Deus eum transfulit, And he was not found, for the Lord tooke him away. In the same place it is expressy added, that he saw not death.

But whether this taking away of Enoch were not with the same kinde of changing, which St. Paul promifeth when he faith, that when the end shall come, we shall not all die, but all shall be changed, I leave it to the learned Divines.

After Henoch, Mofes passeth ouer to Methusalem and Lamech, remembring (as of the rest) the times of their birth and death : sauing that Lamech prophecied of his fonne Noah, faying, This fame shall comfort us concerning our worke, and forrow of our 50 hands, as touching the earth which the Lord hath curfed. Of Noah, Mofes writeth more amply, then of any of the rest of Adamschildren by Seth, being the last of the ten generations of the first Age, whom God (with his familie) preserued, because he was an vpright man in his time, and feared God.

But of the warre, peace, gouernement, and pollicie of these strong and mightie men, so able both in bodie and wit, there is no memorie remaining: whose Stories if they had beene preserved, and what else was then performed in that newnesse of the world, there could nothing of more delight have beene left to posteritie. For the exceeding long liues of men (who to their strength of body and naturall wits had the experience added of 800. and 900. yeares) how much of necessity must the same adde of wisedome and undertakings? Likely it is, that their works excelled all whatfoeuer can be told of after-times, especially in respect of this old age of the world, when we no sooner beginne to know, but we beginne to die; according to Hippocrates.

10 Vita breats, art longs, tempus praceps, (which is) Life is short, Art is long, and Time is About, headlong. And that those people of the first age performed many things worthy admiration, it may be gathered out of these words of Moses, These were mighty men, Gos, 4 which in old time were men of renowne. But these men of renowne (whom the Scripture afterwards calleth Giants, both for strength of bodie and crueltie of minde) trufled fo much to their owne abilities, as they forgat altogether the pietic of Seth, and the waies wherein Henoch walked : for all the imaginations of their hearts were euill, only V. 5. enill, and continually enill. And this wickednesse was not only found in the issues of Cain, but it was then vniuerfall, when the children and fonnes of God, (or of the godly) were corrupted and misted by their idolatrons wines, the Daughters of Cain, or 20 of those other men louing themselues and the world only.

That these sonnes of God were Angels, which being taken with the beauticof wo- Gens, v. 14 men accompanied them and begat Giants, some of the Fathers supposed, namely Lactantius and Eufebius milled by Iofephus: of whom I cannot doubt, but that they afterward changed their former opinions. And of this militaking many Writers haue taken great aduantage, and haue troubled themselues with large answeres and very needleffe; the question being vncapable of dispute; especially since St. Chrysoflome and St. Augustine have answered it largely long agoe. For, that good and godly men were honoured with the title of Gods children, it doth every where appeare in the Scripture; and on the contrarie, to thinke that Angels, who (as Christ 30 witneffeth) behold the face of God, (that is) alwaies attend his commandements, should after a separation from the rest which fell with Lucifer for sake the glorious presence of their Creatour, and become Incubi, or Succubi, contrarie both to nature and grace, were more then madneffe to imagine.

d. VIII.

That the Giants by Moses fo called were indeed emen of huge bodies: as alfo diners in latter times.

F these Giants which Moses calleth mightic men, Goropius Becanus an Antuerpian (who thought his owne wit more Giganticall then the bodies of Nimred or Hercules) hath written a large discourse, intituled Gigantomachia, and strained his braines to proue, that there were neuer any fuch men: his reasons (whosoeuer delires to loose time) he may finde them in the Treatifes before named. It is true that Cyrillus reproues the Græcian Poets for their monstrous fictions : who affirme shamelesly, That the Giants haue in elder times not only cast vp mountaines vpon mountaines, but remoued stands out of the Sea, with like fooleries. And for that invention of casting vp hils,

50 and making warre with the Gods, no doubt but that the same was borrowed out of the storie of Nimrod, as before remembred; and euen out of this Scripture, That the Sonnes of God faw the Daughters of Men, of whom the first Giants were begotten, was that conceit taken of Orpheus and Hessodus, That Giants were the sonnes of the Heauen and the Earth; meaning by the Heauens the fonnes of God, and by the Earth the daughters ofmen: which verses of Orpheus are by Iohn Cassam (who hath written a wittie discourse of this subject) thus changed into Latine.

> Nomine calestes illos dixère Gigantes Orti auòd terr à fuerint & (anguine cali.

From the Earth and from thy bloud, O heaven, they came, Whome thereupon the Gods did Giants name.

But what will not Opiniators and felfe-beleeuing men dispute of and make doubt 10 of, if they cannot conceine that there were in the first Age such kind of men; and of which there have beene in all times fince? Seeing the Scriptures auow the one mani-feltly, and common experience the other?

And for that superlatine straining of words, and the meaning of them, that the name of Giants was given to oppressours and Tyrants, and not to strength of body and eminent flature: fuch men might with better reason call them oppressours becausethey were Giants, and therefore had abilitie to oppresse, then say, That they were called Giants onely, because oppressours. For first Moses himselfe calleth them mightie men; which sheweth a strength surpassing others; and afterwards, men of renowne, (that is) of great vndertaking and aduenturous action. And if the 20 same stature of body, and abilitie had not beene found among divers Nations after the generall floud, then might this place of Moses have more willingly hearkned to a diffoute, and veelded to interpretation.

But befides all these famous Giants found in prophane Histories (which I will referue to accompanie the Giants of Albion in the Storie of Britanie) the Scriptures doe clearely and without all allegoricall construction auow, That, besides Nimrod, there were found of these Giants in the time of Abraham, of Moles, of Iolua, and of David; namely the Rephaims in Afteroth; the Zuzai or Zanzummims in Ham, and the Paut, 2.v. 21.20 Emims, which dwelt anciently in the land of Moab: whom Moses (for stature) com-pareth with the Anakims, which dwelt in Hebron; for they also were taken for Giants 30 as the Anakims: Likewise where Moses speaketh of the land of Ammon, he vieth these words. That also was taken for a land of Giants, for Giants dwelt therein aforetimes: and, whome the Ammonites call Zamzammims: a people that was great, and many, and tall as the Anakims. And these Giants called Rephaims in Asteroth and Karnaim, and the Zu-Eai or Zanzummims, Chedorlaomer King of Elamouerthrew, affisted by other Kings his affociates. Also the Prophet Amos found among the Ammonites men of Giantlike stature, whome he compareth to the Cedar, and whose strength to the Oakes; and the Prophet BARVCH, These were the Giants famous from the beginning, that were of so great stature, and so expert in warre. Particularly it is written of og, King of

Balan, that his bedde of yron was nine cubits long, and four cubits broad: for only 40 Of King of Basan remained of the remnants of the Giants, who commanded the Kingdome of Basan, foure hundred yeares after the expedition of Chedorlaomer. Moreouer those discouerers and searchers of the Land of promise (sent by Moses from Cadesbarre in Paran) made report at their returne of the great stature of those Numbara.v. 24. people in generall, and especially of the sonnes of Anak, in these wordes. All the people which we faw in it are men of great stature : for there we faw Giants , the sonnes of AN AK which come of the Giants, so that we seemed in our sights like grasse-hoppers, and so we were in their fight, (that is) the fearchers found in their owne judgements a meruailous difference betweene the Anakims and themselues : insomuch that the Israelites were fo ftricken with feare, as they rather fought and defired to return again into 50 Agypt, and were more willing to endure their former flauerie, then to fall by the C. 14.4. z.Sam.17.4.

strokes of those fearefull Nations. Furthermore the Scriptures put vs out of doubt, that Goliah the Philistine of Gath was a Giant of fixe cubits and a spanne long: the armour which he wore waighed fine thousand shickles of braffe: the shaft of his speare was like a weauers beame, and his speare head waighed fixe hundred shickles of yron. Alfo in Samuel there is mention of another Goliah ill rnamed Getheus; because he was samanare of Gath: and of three other Giants; of which the first was slaine by Iehonathan; Da- 1. chron. 20. 41. uids Nephew, who had twelve fingers, and as many toes; a man of great flature, and his fingers were by fixes, even foure and twentie.

Also that Sampson was of surpassing strength no man doubteth, who tore a Lion 14d, 14.6. as it had beene a Kidde, and after flew thirtie of the abilifities, and (after that) a thousand more of them with a jawbone of an Affe, And lastly he tooke the gates of Azzah, and the two posts, and lifted the manay with the barres, and put them or von his houlders, and carried them to the toppe of the Mountaine before Ebron.

If then it be appround by chery judgement; that both Nature and the Heatens waxe old, and that the great age of time hath (with it felfe) infeebled and almost worne out the vertue of all things, then I say, That as in all other kindes the Earth (before that Sinne had increased the curse and corruption) brought forth her young ones more frong and beautifull then it did in after-ages : fo also those Giants, those mightic men, and men of renowne as farre exceeded the proportion, nature and strength of those Giants remembred by Moses of his owne time, and after him their fuccessours, as the ordinarie proportion of all men ingenerall; soone after the floud and in times farre off, exceeded the bulkes and bodies of men which are now borne 20 in the withered quarter and Winter of the world: If therefore Giants were common in the third and fourthage, much more in the first flourishing youth and new-neffe of the world. But the wickednesse (especially in crueltie and oppression) of these men was such. as God therefore by the floud gaue end to all flesh, but to the just 200th and his fatmilic. And Godrepented him that he had made man, which St. Augustine thus expound Gene, 6. deth: Nequeenim sicut hominem, ita Deum facti sui parnitet, cuius est de omnibus om. De ciuit. Legends:

That in old corruptions we may finde some signes of more ancient truth.

ERE before we proceede any further, the occasion offereth it felfe for vs to confider, how the Greekes and other more ancient Nations, by fabulous inventions, 20 and by breaking into parts the Storie of the Creation, and by deliuering it ouer in a mysticall sense, wrapping it vp mixed with other their owne trumperie, haue fought to obscure the truth thereof; and have hoped, that after-ages, being thereby brought into many doubts, might receive those intermixt discourses of God and Nature for the inventions of Poets and Philosophers, and not as any thing borrowed or stolne out of the bookes of God. But as a skilfull and learned Chymist can aswell by separation of visible elements draw helpfull medicines out of poyson, as poyson out of 20 the most healthfull hearbs and plants (all things having in themselves both life and death) fo, contrarie to the purposes and hopes of the Heathen, may those which feeke after God and Truth finde out enery where, and in all the ancient Poets and Philosophers, the Storie of the first Age, with all the workes and maruailes thereof, amply and liuely exprest.

That the corruptions themselves were very ancient : as in the familie of  $N \circ AH$ , and in the old Ægyptians.

Vt this defection and falling away from God, which was first found in Angels, and afterwards in Men (the one haujing erred but once, the other euer) as concerning mankinde it tooke luch effect, that thereby (the liberall grace of God being withdrawne) all the posteritie of our first Parents were afterwards borne and bred in a world, suffering a perpetuall Eclipse of spirituall light. Hence it was that it produced plants of such imperfection and harmefull qualitie, as the waters of the generall floud could not fo walh out or depure, but that the same defection hath had continuance in the very generation and nature of mankinde. Yea, euen among the few sonnes of Noah there 50 were found frong effects of the former poyfon. For as the children of Sem did inherit the vertues of Seth, Enoth, and Noth; so the sonnes of Cham did possess the vices of the sonnes of Cain, and of those wicked Giants of the first Age. Whence the Chaldeans beganne foone after the floud to ascribe divine power and honour to the creature, which was only due to the Creatour. First, they worshipped the Sunne, and then the fire. So the Agyptians and Phanicians did not only learne to leave the true God, but created twelue feuerall Gods, and diuine powers, whom they worthipped; and vnto whom they built Altars and Temples. For Herodotus faith, duodecim Deo-Herodin Euter. rum nomina primos Ægyptios in v su habuisse, atque Gracos ab illis cepisse mutuatos, cosa, peprius aras, & imagines, & templa Dijs sibserexisse, The Agyptians (faith he) first deuifed the names of the twelve Gods, which the Greekes received from them, who first erected unto themselues Altars, Images, and Temples for the Gods.

This first Jupiter, of the Ethnickes was then the same Cain, the some of Adam. who marrying his owne fifter (as also Jupiter is faid to have done) inhabited the East, where Stephanus de vrbibus placeth the Cittie Henochia. And besides this Cittie of Henoch, Philo Indans conceineth that Cain built fixe others, as Maich, Iared, Tehe, 40 Gen. 4.20.21.22 Jesea. Selet and Gebat; but where Philo had this I know not. Now as Cain was the first

Jupiter, and from whome also the Ethnickes had the Luention of facrifice: so were Libal, Tubal and Tubalcain (inventors of pastorage, smiths-craft, and musick) the same, which were called by the ancient prophane writers Mercurius, Vulcan and Apollo: and as there is a likelihood of name betweene Tubalcain and Vulcan: fo doth Augufine expound the name of Noema or Naamath, the fifter of Tubalcain, to fignific Venusta, or beautifull Voluptas, or pleasure; as the wife of Vulcan is said to be Venus, the Lady of pleasure and beautie. And as Adam was the ancient and first Saturne, Cain the eldest Inpiter, Eua Rhea, and Noema or Naamath the first Venus: so did the fable of the dividing of the world betweene the three brethren the fonnes of Saturne arife, 50 from the true flory of the dividing of the earth betweene the three brethren the fonnes of Noah: so also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon taken from the Serpent, which tempted Enah: fo was Paradyfe it felfe transported out of Africa, and made the garden of the Hesperides: the prophecies, that Christ should breake the Serpents head, and conquer the power of Hell, occasioned the fables of Hereules killing the Serpent of Helperides, and descending into Hell, and captinating Cerberus: fo out of the taking vp of Henoch by God was borrowed the conversion of their Heroes (the Inventors of Religion and such artes as the life of man had profit by ) into flarres and heavenly fignes, and ( withall ) that leaving of the world, and afcention of Altraa; of which Ouid,

For although thereby the Ethnickes would understand Justice it selfe to have Nat. com. i.z. failed, as it is a vertue abstract, and may bee considered without a person; yet as it is viuall among the ancient Poets to describe vertues and vices by the persons of men and women as defire by Cupid, valour by Mars, beautie or luft by Venus, fo doe they also the persons of men by like vertues and vices; and therefore by Iustice and Aftrea, Enoch: the Iustice and pietie of Enoch being in the same manner exprest, as that of Noah was by Moses for Noah was faid to bee a just man; And Gones, 22,24 NO A H walked with God. And of Enoch it is written, that he walked with God, and he was no more leene: for God tooke him away.

From this storie also of the first Age, and from that part where Moses remembreth the Giants begotten by the fonnes of good men vpon the daughters of the wicked (whome Mo/es calleth mightie men, and men of renowne) did they steale those wondrous great actes of their ancient Kings, and powerfull Giants; and againe their warre vndertaken against the Gods, from the building of the Tower of Babel by the Giant Nimrod, as St. Augustine termeth him. Whereby was meant that Nimrod purposed to raise the building of Babel to that height, as God neither by drawing waters from the deepe, nor by any conjunction of the Starres, should burie them under the mousture of a second floud, but that by 40 this building (if they had beene herein victorious) they would have given the Law to Heauen it selfe. Also the making of leagues, peace and couenants among Heathen nations and Kings, confirmed by sacrifice, whereof Virgil both in the eight and twelfth of his Æneides hath atouch, was as it feemeth borrowed from Mofes, Exad. 24. Who when he read the Booke of the couenant sprinkled the people with blood,

We finde also many remembrances of Seth, the paternall Ancester of Henoch and Inseph.l. Leons. many men of good judgement have graunted) were the Princes of Thrace called 50 Seuthes, whereof there were many very famous. But herein was the memoric of Plutin Tide. Seth most manifestly preserved, that the Agyptians worshipped Seth, as their most ancient parent, and of the first tradition: in honour of whome they called a principall Province Setheitiea. Q. V
Of the three chiefest IV PITERS; and the strange storie of the third.

Vt of all those Armies of Inpiters remembred by the Ancients . Cicero maketh but three, because those were of most same; which other writers have also done, who sought out, and laboured in their 10

The first was Iupiter, the sonne of Ather and Dies, so called beconfethe one had reference to his caleftiall conditions (for ather is as much as shining or pure fire) the other discouered his naturall vertues, which daies and times make more perfect, and are the witneffes of mens actions.

The second was said to bee the sonne of Coelum or Heauen, for the same former respect; and this Jupiter was an Arcadian, and King of Athens.

The third of whom all the Gracian fables were denifed, was of Creete ( now Candie) the sonne of Saturne and Ops. The name derived from the Latine is taken of Jugans Pater, from the Greeke word Zeus, it signifieth life, but somewhat strayned. 20 Boccas in his genealogie of the Gods conceineth, that his name was borrowed from Jupiter the Planet; but whether that starre had such a name, before the same was gimen to men. I know not. Jupiter is hot and moift, temperate, modeft, honeft, aduenturous, liberall, mercifull, louing, and faithfull, (that is) giving these inclinations. And therefore those ancient Kings beautified with these conditions might be called there after Inpiter; but how socuer they were, or were not with those vertues enriched, yet, by imitation, all Kings in the eldest times assumed those titles and sirnames: great Princes affecting as high titles of honour and reputation in the world. (howfocuer descrued) as the worthiest, that ever were, acquired by their well descruings. Joues omnes Reges vocarunt antiqui, The Ancients called all Kinges IVPITERS as 30 TZETZES in his Variahistoria confirmeth: Reges olim Ioues vocarunt omnes: In old times all Nations called their Kings IVPITERS. But where this last and most remembred Jupiter was borne it is vncertaine. Some there are that make him of Creet: o-Mat. com. la. c.7 thers, that he was but fent thither by his mother opsor opis, to be follered and hidden from the fury of Titan his vncle: because it was conditioned betweene Saturne and Titan, that Saturne being a yonger brother, and raigning (for his owne life) by Titans permiffion, he should put to death all his male children, least the Titans might be interrupted by any of them in their fuccession; which agreement because Saturne performed in his first borne, it is fained that Saturne denoured his owne children. Hercof Lycophron, thus turned into Latine.

SATURNE to be the fatter is not knowne By being the graue and buriall of his owne.

This composition betweene Titan and Saturne, Sybilla also witnesseth in these. Conceptis verbis : TITAN iurare coegit SATVRNVM, de se natum ne nutriat vllum, Quo possintregnare senis post fata Nepotes.

> Things thus agreed: TITAN made SATVENE fweare No Sonne to nourish; which by raigning might Viurpetheright of TITANS lawfull Heire,

But opis, the mother of Impiter, being deliuered at once both of Impiter and Imp. connected Inpiter (first called Lyfanias) into Crete, as shee did afterwards his two brothers, Neptune and Pluto: where hee was brought vp in Gnoffus, the chiefe Citie of that Island, by Cresta the King, or by the Curetes, a people and nation thereof. Essis, a Temp.

CHAP. 6. S.5.

Others challenge him to be of Thebes, and a Thebane: others call him an Arcadian: others make him of Melsena. The like contention is found among the Greekes touching his education and first fostering. Some affirme, that he was fed by honic-bees in recompence whereof he changed their black coats and skinnes into yellow; a reward well fitting fuch a God: others, that he was nourished by Beares: others, by Goats: and of all these the idle Greekes haue many prettie tales. But in the end when Titan had knowledge, that Saturne had broken his faith, he set on him, and tooke him and his wife prisoners, whom Jupiter againe rescued and deliucred. But lastly, the Father and the Sonne æqually ambitious, the one doubted the other. Saturne being the leffe powerfull fled into Italie, and left his Kingdomes in Greece to his sonne. And although this Prince at the first purchased great honour, and for his many vertues the name of Inpiter was given him; yet, after he was once fetled and became potent, he gaue himfelfe ouer wholly to palliardize and adulterie, without all respect of honour, law, or religion. And it is reported by such, as doe ascribe the actions of many to one Inpiter, that not therewith satisfied, he was after-

20 wardes knowne to offend in the finne of Sodome with Ganimedes and others; and did not onely begin with incest, marrying his owne fister Iuno, but he rauished, betrayed, stole away, and tooke by strong hand all the beautifull women borne in his time. within the limits of his owne kingdomes, or bordering them. Among whom these hereafter written were of greatest fame, Niobe, Laodemia, and Alemena the wife of Amphitryon, by whom he had Pelasgus, Sarpedon, Argus, and Hercules: by Taggete he had Taygetus, of whom the mountaine Taygetus tooke name, with another sonne called Saon, of whom Sauona: by Antiope he had Amphion and Zetus: by Lada, Castor & Pollux, Helen & Clytemnestra: by Danae Perseus: by Iordana Deucalion: by Charme (the daughter of Eubulus) Britomartis, by Protogenia he had Athlius the fa-20 ther of Endymion; and by 10 (the daughter of Inachus) Epaphus, the Founder of Memphis in Agypt: which Epaphus married Lybia, of whom that Countrie tooke name, for fo the Greekes afterward called Africa. He rapished Agina, the daughter of Afopus, and carried her into the Island Oenopia or Oenotria, afterward called Agina, on whom he begat Lacus: by Torrhebia he had Archestlaus and Carbius: by Ora Colaxes: he had also Dardanus by Electra, who built Dardanium, afterward Ilum

Hee had besides these (if they belie not their chiefe God) Phileus and Pilummus, inuentors of Bakers craft; and I know not how many more; but I know well that hee could not bee father to all these, who were borne in ages so farre diffe-40 ring. And of these his seuerall rauishments, betrayings, stealing away of mens wines, daughters and fonnes, buying of virgins, and the likecame in all those ancient fables of histransformations into showers of gold, Eagles, Buls, birds, and beafts; and of him, and by him (in effect) all that rabble of Græcian forgerics. And yet did not the Greekes and Romanes feare to entitle this monster, Optimus Maximus, though Cicero in his second booke de natura Deorum affirme, that he descrued nothing leffe, and in his Oration pro domo fus reprocheth Clodius for his incest, by the Latin Garif. name of Jupiter. His buriall was in Crete (faith Lucian) Cretenfes non folum natum and Troy. Hee begat the brothers Talici, on Thalia, and on Garamantis Hiarhas,

The Cretians or Candians doe not onely auow that IVPITER was borne and buried among them, but 30 they flow his graue and fepulsher: which Epiphanias also confirmeth, for in his time there remained the monuments of his tombe in the mountaine taffus. This Callimachus in his hymnes also witnesseth, but as offended thereat saith thus.

Diodorus Siculus tels by way of report from the Lybian fables, confirmed (as he faith) by some Greeke writers, that the original of these Gods was from the westerne parts of Africk. For there among the Atlantide raigned one Vranus (which fignifieth heauen) called fo for his great skill in Astrologie, and for his knowledge, and benefits to the people, honoured by them as a God after his death. He had by many wines 45. fonnes; but by his principall wife Tites he had 17. fonnes and two daughters, all which were called after their mothers name the Titanes. Of Titealikewise it is said, that thee for her goodnesse was canonized as a Goddesse, being dead, and called the Earth, as her husband was stiled Heauen. But of all the children of Tites, her daughter Bafflez (which name founding as Queene in English, shee is by the Latine tran-10 flator of Diodorus called Regina) excelling therest as far in vertue as in yeeres, was by generall confent of her brethren, and of the people, appointed torule as Queene after her fathers death, being as yet a virgin. Shee tooketo husband her brother Hyperion, to whom thee bare a fonne and a daughter, called Sun and Moone. The beautie and towardlinesse of these children mooned her brethren to enuie, and bred in them a feare of being excluded from the fuccession: wherefore they tooke the boy and drowned him in the river Eridanus, now called Poe. The loffe of this childe caufed his fifter to breake her owne neck; and the loffe of both her children made the mother to play many mad prankes, dancing with Cymbals, after a wilde falhion, in fight of all the people, before whom thee is faid to haue vanished away. Ere shee 20 died, her sonne (as the sable hath it) signified unto her in a dreame, that he and his filter by the providence of God should become immortall, that also the Sun and Moone should be called by their names, and that their death should be reuenged vpon the murderers. According to which it is faid, that the people did fo call those two Planets, and withall held her felfe as a Goddesse, and tearmed her the great mother, which name they had formerly given to her, for her motherly care in cherithing her brethren whileft they were yong. Hyperim and hisrace being extinguished, the other fonnes of Pranus divided the kingdome. Of these Atlas and Saturne were chiefe. Atlas raigned ouer the Countries lying about the mountaines, which afterward bare his name; a inft and wife Prince, deeply skilfull in Aftrologie, 20 and for invention of the sphere faid to have supported Heaven. He had many fonnes; but the principall of them called Hefterus, being of his fathers qualities and studies, was faid to have beene carried away by the winde, from the top of an high hill in the midst of his contemplations, and his name in honour of him, imposed by the people vpon the morning starre. The seuen daughters of Atlas were also said to haue bene excellent Ladies, who accompanying fuch as came to be defield, orregifted among the Worthies, brought foorth children, answerable in qualitie to those that begat them. Of these it is held, that the seuen starres called Pletades tooke name. Saturne the brother of Atlas raigned in Sieilia, part of Africk and Italie. Iupiter another of the sonnes of Vranus, raigned in Crete; who had tenne sonnes which he 40 called Cureres; he called that Iland after his wives name Idea; in which Ile he died, and was buried. But this Inpiter must not have beene that great one, but vncle to the great Inpiter, if these fables of the Lybians were true. Saturne (as these Lybians tell the tale (was a great tyrant, and fortified firong places, the better to keepe his people in fubication. His fifter Rhea was married to Hammon, who raigned in some part of Africk. Hammon louing others as well as his wife, or better, got a daughter, called Minerua, neere to the river Triton, who thereupon was called Tritonia. Hee also begat on Amalthea a sonne called Bacchus, whom he caused secretly for feare of his life to be brought up at Nyla, an Iland in the river Triton, under the tuition of his daughter Minerua, and certaine Nymphes. To Amalthea he gaue in reward a goodly 50 Countrie, that lay on the Sea coast, bending in forme of a horne, whence grew the tale of Amaltheas plentifull horne, famous among the Poets. When Rhea heard these newes, she fled from her husband to her brother Saturne, who not onely entertained her as a lifter, but tooke her to wife, and at her infligation made warre vpon

Hammon, vanquished him by affiftance of the Titanes, and made him flie into Crete, The Caretes, Jupiters children before mentioned, held the Iland at that time; which was new named Crete by Hammon, after the name of Creta the Kings daughter, whom he tooke to wife, and had with her (women as may feeme being very gratious in those times) the kingdome. Bacchus was growne a proper yong man, had found out the making of wine, the art of planting trees, and many things eife commodious for mankinde, before the flight of his mother in law. Now therefore hearing report of all that had happened, and that Saturne was comming against him with the Titanes; he leuied an Armie, to which the Amazons living not farre from 10 Nyla, added great forces, in loue of Minerua, who was entred into their profession. So Bacchies leading the men, and Minerua the women, they fet forward against Saturne, met him, ouerthrew him, and taking many of the Titanes prisoners, returned to Avfa; where pardoning the prisoners, that promised to become his true followers, he prapared for a fecond expedition. In the fecond expedition he behaued himselfe so well, that he wanne the loue of all the people by whom he passed; insomuch that partly for good affection to him, partly in hatred of Saturnes rigorous gouernment, he was greatly strengthened, and the enemie as much enfecbled by daily revoltes. Comming to the Cittie of Hammon, he wanne a battaile of Saturne, before the very wals. After which Saturne with his wife Rhea fled by night, fetting

20 the Towne on fire to despight Bacchus. But they were caught in their flight, pardoned by Bacchus, and kindly entreated. Saturne had a yong sonne by Rhea, called Jupiter. This childe Bachus tooke with him in a great expedition that he made into the East countries; and comming into Agypt, he left this Jupiter, being then a boy, gouernour of the Countrie; but appointed vnto him as an Ouerfeer, one Olympus, of whom Jupiter grew to be called Olympius. Whilest Bacchus transiled through all nations, as far as into India, dooing good in all places, and teaching many things profitable to the life of man; the Titanes had found out his father Hammon in Crete, and began to warre vpon him. But Backhus returned out of India; with whom Iupiter from Agent, and his fifter Mineria, together with the rest that afterwards were held

30 as Gods, joining all their forces, went into Crete, ouerthrew the Titanes, chafed them, tooke, and flew them, and freed the world of them all. After all this, when Hammon and Bacchus were dead, they were deified; and the great Jupiter the sonne of Saturne fucceeding them, raigned Lord alone over all the world, having none of the Titanes left aliue, nor any other to disturbe him. Betweene this tale of the Lybian Gods, and the Agyptian fables of Ofiris, there is a rude refemblance, that may cause them both to be taken for the crooked images of some one true historie. For the expeditions of Ofiris, and of Bacchus; the warres of the Giants in the one storic, of the Titanes in the other; the kingdome of Agypt given by Hercules Lybicus to Orus, by Bacchus to Iupiter, the rattles of Isis, and the Cymbals of Basilea, with many pettie circumstan-

Sanchoniato (as Eusebius cites him) would have all these to be Phanicians, Eusebili.1.6.7 and is earnest in saying, that it is a true storie, and no Allegorie. Yet he makes it feeme the more allegoricall, by giving to Vranus or Heaven for daughters, Fate and Beautie, and the like, with addition of much fabulous matter, omitted by Diodorus. though Diodorus haue enough. To the genealogie he addes Elius or the Sun, as father of Vranus, and among the children of Vranus, Iapetus, Batilus, and Dagon, (whom Diodorus doth not mention by their names) giving withall to Vranus the proper name of Terrenus or Indigena, and of Illus to Saturne, but omitting Jupiter of Crete, The Pedigree of them is this section in the land of the section

Of CHAM, and other wicked ones, whereof some gat, some affected the name of Gods.

F Jupiter Belis, the sonne of Saturnus Babylonicus, otherwise Nimrod, it seemeth that Cicero had not heard, (at least by that name) who was more ancient than any of the former three by him remembred : for long after these times were the Greekes but Saluages, if they seeke no farther off for their Gods.

But the Ægyptians, euen after the floud, began (somewhat before this Chaldaan Jupiter) to intitle Cham, the parent of their owne Mizraim, Jupiter Chammon, or Hammon. For the Etymologie of this word (Hammon) which the Greekes deduce abarenis, from the fandes, is ridiculous (faith Pencer); neither yet is his owne much Снар.б. §.7. of the Historie of the World.

better, who brings it from Hammath, which fignifieth heate; because the faid Temple of Iupiter Hammon was feated in Lybia, where the ayre is exceeding hote and fcortching. And as for the antiquitie of the latter Jupiter (among the Greekes and Romans the most renowned) it is certain that he was borne not long before the war of Troy, as by many of his fonnes is made manifest; namely, Castor, Pollux, Hercules, Sarpedon, and others, which lived in that age of Priamus, vnder whom, and with whom Trey was destroied.

Now feeing that mortall men, and the most wicked, were esteemed immortall among the Heathen; it was not to be wondred at that Alexander Macedon, Tyberius. 10 Nero, Caligula, and others fought to be numbred among them, who were as deformed monsters as the rest: For by what reason could the same Deitie be denied vnto Laurentia and Flora, which was given to Venus? feeing they were as notorious and famous harlots as the was.

ð. V I I.

That the wifer of the ancient Heathen had farre better opinions of God.

Vt that euer Pythagoras, or Plato, or Orpheus, with many other ancient and excellently learned, belieued in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected, though some of them (ouer busily) have mixed their owne inuentions with the Scriptures: 10r, in punious of the fictions, did Pythagorus hang both Himer and Hefiolus in Hell, where hee fained that they were perpetually stung and pinched with Serpents. Yet it cannot be doubted, but that Homer had read ouer all the bookes of Mofes, as by places ftolne thence, almost word for word, may appeare; of which Iustine Martyr remembreth many in that Treatife converted by Mirandula. As for Plato, though he diffembled in some things, for feare of the inquilition of the Arcopagites, yet St. Augus

The first of all is God, and the same last is he. God is the head and midft, yea from him all things be; God is the Base of earth, and of the starred skie. He is the male and female too, shall neuer die. The spirit of all is God, the Sunne, the Moone, and what is higher. The King, th'originall of all, of all the end. For close in holie brefthe all did comprehend, Whence all to bleffed light, his wondrous power did fend,

Now besides these former testimonies, that all the learned men of ancient times were not so stupid and ignorant, as the Egyptians, Gracians, and other Nations by them infected were, I will only repeate two or three other opinions, and leaue the Reader to those large and learned Collections of Instine Martyr, Clemens, Lactantius, Eusebius, Eugubinus, Peucer, Plessis, Daneus, and others. For Cleanthes the Stoick, being demaunded of what nature God was, described him by these attributes and 30 properties. Bonus, iustus, sanctus, seipsum possidens, vilis, speciosus, optimus, seuerus, liber, semper commodus, tutus, gloriosus, charitas, &c. Good, iust, holy, possessing himselfe, profitable, beautifull, best, seuere, frée, alwaies doing good, safe without seare, glarious, and selse-charitie. Epicharmus affirmed, that God who beheld all things, and pierced cuery nature, was only and every where powerfull: agreeing with Democritus. Rex omnium ipse solus, He is the only King of all Kings; and with Pindarus the Poet; Deus vnus, Pater, creator fummus, atque optimus artifex, qui progressus singulis diversos secundum meritaprabet, One God, the Father, the most high creatour, and best artificer, who giueth to enery thing divers proceedings ascording to their deferts. This God (faith ANTIS-

Hieron. in Com. Therefore was it faid by St. HIEROME, Sienim cunctos Philosophorum renoluas liis Dan. In prin- bros, necesse est witness reperias aliquam partem vasorum Dei, vt apud PLATONEM, fabricatorem mundi, Deum: apud ZENONEM Stoicorum Principem, inferos & immortales animas, &c. If thou consider all the bookes of the Philosophers, thou canst not but finde in them some part of the Vessels of God, as in PLATO, God the creatour of the world: in ZENO Prince of the Stoicks, Hell and immortall foules, &c. And this is certaine, that if we looke into the wisedome of all ages, wee shall finde that there never was man of folid vnderstanding or excellent judgement: neuer any man whose minde the art of education hath not bended; whose eyes a foolish superstition hath not afterward blinded; whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensiue inspection aduised; but 10 that he hath found by an vnresistable necessitie, one true God, and enerlasting being, all for euer cauling, and all for euer fultaining; which no man among the Heathen hath with more reuerence acknowledged, or more learnedly exprest, then that Agyptian Hermes, how soeuer it failed afterward in his posteritie: all being at length by deuilish pollicie of the Ægyptian Priests purposely obscured; who inuented new Gods, and those innumerable, best forting (as the Denill persuaded them) with vulgar capacities, and sitted to keepe in awe and order their common people.

à. VIII.

That Heathenisme and Indassime, after many wounds were at length about the same time under IVLIAN miraculously confounded.

X O Vt all these are againe vanished: for the inventions of mortall men are no leffe mortall then themselves. The Fire, which the Chaldeans worshipped for a God, is crept into enery mans chimney, which the lacke of fewell flarueth, water quencheth , and want of aire fuffocateth : Inpiter is no more vexed with Innoes ielousies; Death hath perfinaded him to chastitic, and her to patience; and that Time which hath denoured it selfe, hath also eaten vp both the bodies and images of him and his : yea, their 20 stately Temples of stone and durefull Marble. The houses and sumptuous buildings crected to Baal, can no where bee found vpon the earth; nor any monument of that glorious Temple conscerated to Diana. There are none now in Phanicia, that lament the death of Adanis; nor any in Lybia, Creta, Theffalia, or elsewhere, that can aske counfaile or helpe from Impiter. The great God Pan hath broken his Pipes, Apolloes Priests are become speechlesse; and the Trade of riddles in Oracles, with the Deuils telling mens fortunes therein, is taken vp by counterfait Agyptians, and cousening Astrologers.

But it was long ere the Deuill gaue way to these his ouerthrowes and dishonours: for after the Temple of Apollo at Delphos (one of his chiefe Mansions) was 40 many times robbed, burnt, and destroyed; yet by his diligence the same was often enriched, repaired, and reedified againe, till by the hand of God himfelfe it received the last and otter subuersion. For it was first robbed of all the Idols and ornaments therein by the Eubwan Pyrates: Secondly, by the Phlegians vtterly fackt: Thirdly, by Pyrrhus the Sonne of Achilles: Fourthly, by the Armie of Xerxes: Fiftly, by the Captaines of the Phocenfes: Sixtly, by Nero, who carried thence fine hundred brazen images : all which were new made, and therein againe set up at the common charge. But what soeuer was gathered betweene the time of Wero and Constantine, the Christian Armie made spoile of, defacing as much as the time permitted them; notwithstanding all this it was againe gloriously rebuilt, and so remained till such 50 time as Iulian the Apollata fent thither to know the successe of his Parthian enterprife, at which time it was vtterly burnt and confumed with fire from Heauen; and the image of Apollo himselfe, and all the rest of the Idols therein molten downe and Jost in the earth.

thevassembled themselves to rebuild the Temple of Hierusalem: for while they were bussed to lay the foundations, their buildings were ouerthrowne by an Earthquake, and many thousands of the Lewes were ouerwhelmed with the ruines, and others flaine, and scattered by tempest and thunder: though Am. Marcellinus report it more fauourably for the lenes, ascribing this to the nature of that element. ... For, faith he, Allypius and the Ruler of the Prouince of Iudea, being by Iulian bufied in the reedifying of this Temple, flaming bals of fire iffuing neare the foundation, and oft confuming the workemen, made the enterprise frustrate.

Of the last refuges of the Deuill to maintaine his Kingdome.

Ow the Deuill, because he cannot play upon the open stage of this world (as in those dayes) and being still as industrious as euer, findes in the day of the first carry and the minds of men, and in-habiting in the Temples of their hearts, workes them to a more effe-chall adoration of himfelfe then cuer. For whereas hee first taught

20 them to facrifice to Monsters, to dead stones cut into faces of beasts, birds, and other mixt Natures; hee now fets before them the high and shining Idoll of glorie. the all-commanding Image of bright Gold. Hee tels them that Truth is the Goddesse of dangers and oppressions : that chastitie is the enemie of nature ; and lastly, that as all vertue (in generall) is without taste: so pleasure satisfieth and delighteth euery sense : for true wisedome (saith he) is exercised in nothing else, then in the obtaining of power to oppresse, and of riches to maintaine plentifully our worldly delights. And if this Arch-politician finde in his Pupils any remorfe, any feare or feeling of Gods future judgement, hee perswades them that God hath so great neede of mens foules, that he will accept them at any time, and vpon any conditions; inter-20 rupting by his vigilant endeuours all offer of timefull returne towards God, by laying those great blockes of rugged pouertie, and despised contempt in the narrow passage leading to his divine presence. But as the minde of man hath two ports, the one alwaies frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other desolate and ouergrowne with graffe, by which enter our charitable thoughts and diuine contemplations: fo hath that of death a double and twofold opening: worldly miferie passing by the one, worldly prosperitie by the other: at the entrance of the one we finde our fufferings and patience, to attend vs: (all which have gone before vs to prepare our ioyes) at the other our cruelties, couetousnesse, licentiousnesse, iniustice, and oppressions (the Harbingers of most fearefull and terrible forrow) staying forvs. And as the Deuill our most industrious enemie was euer most dili gent : fo is he now more laborious then cuer : the long day of mankinde drawing fast towards an euening, and the worlds Tragedie and time neare at an end.

CHAP. VII. Of Noahs Floud.

Of Gods fore-warning : and some humane testimonies : and some doubting touching the truth of No AH's Floud.

F this destruction it pleased God to give warning vnto Neah: who (faith lofephus) fearing to perish among the rest, secedens cum suis in aliam regionem migrauit, He departed with his children, and trauailed into another Region. And of these Giants from whom Noah withdrew himselfe, Berolus writeth in this manner, That they exceeded in all forts of inhumane and unnaturall wickednesse, and that they were contemptores & religionis & Deorum , contemners of religion and of the Gods: a- 20 mong which mightie men (faith Berofus) vnus erat aui Deorum venerantior, & prudentior cunctis, &c. huic nomen erat NOAH. There was one more wife and reverencing the Gods then therest, whose name was No AH: who with his three sonnes Sem, Iaphetus, and Cham, and with their wines, and the wife of Noah, (namely Titea the great, Pandora, Noela, and Noegla) preserved themselves in the Arke. This Arke God commanded Noah to prepare: And God Said unto No AH, make thee an Arke of pine trees: thou Shalt make cabines in the Arke, and shalt pitch it within, and without, with pitch. For God made Noab to know that an end of all flesh was at hand, and that the graues of the rebellious and cruell generations were already fashioned in the cloudes, which soone after 20 should swallow up and couer all liuing creatures, which breathed in the aire: Noah

But this vniuerfall graue of waters, and generall deluge bath not been received by all for divine testimonies doe not perswade all natural men to those things, to Lett. in Prefide which their owne reason cannot reach: dum obvoluta in observo veritas latet, whilest the truth lyeth wrapped op in obscuritie. Many there are who have disputed against the universalitie of this overflowing, and have judged that this floud of Noah fell but on some particular places and Kingdomes: moued so to thinke, because in elder ages there have beene many other floudes (as they suppose) of that nature. Hereof Nicholaus Damascenus writeth in this manner, as his wordes are cited by I osephvs. 49

Istepant.l.s.c.4. Est super Minyadam excelsus mons in Armenia, qui Baris appellatur, in quo multos consugientes sermo est diluui temporeliberatos, & quendam simul in Arca deuectum in huius vertice halisse, lignorumá, relliquias multo tempore conseruatas, qui fortasse is suit, de quo eilam Moses Inderum Legislator scribit : thus farre this Authour. There is (faith he) aboue Minyada (or the Countrie of Minya) an exceeding high Mountaine in Armenia, called Baris : on which it is reported, that many having fled thither were faued in the time of the deluge: and that one was carried in an Arke, and rested upon the toppe of the mountaine, whereon there remained a long time after certaine peeces thereof; and this might be the same, of which Moses the Law-giver of the lewes maketh mention. And of this opinion were the Thalmudists (faith Annius) that many Giants faued themselues 59 vpon Mount Syon.

But Berofus (who after Moses was one of the most ancient, how socuer hee have beene fince deformed and corrupted) doth in the fubstance of all agree with Moses as touching the generall floud, taking from thence the beginning of his Historic in these words. Ante aquerum cladem famosam, qua universus perin arbis éce. Before that samous destruction of Waters, by which the World Konersali perisped ::witnessing withall, that Woah with his wife Titea, and his three fonnes with their wives (in all eight persons) were onely sauce and the same of the same of the of the floud in the time of Octobers and that this was not NOAHS floud.

Vt from the vanity of the Greekes, the corrupters of all truth (faith Lactantius) who without all ground of certainty vaunt their Antiquitie, cane the errour first of all; who therein flattering themselves also, sought to persuade the world, that there was no floud praceded the floud of ogges, king of the Theban in Baotia, or rather of Attiea; and therefore faith Rhodoginus Ogygiumid appellant Poeta, tanquam pernetus dixeris, abalias, e. 33 ab OGYGE vetulissimo. The Poets gave the name of OGYGIA to things exceeding ancient, as of OGYGES the most ancient.

But let ogyges be as ancient as those men can make him, yet it is manifest that he 20 liued but in Incobstime (though Eufebius makes him later, and in Mofes time) and Eufebius makes him later, and in Mofes time and Eufebius makes him later and time and (and then was he farre later) as Rhodoginus in the ninth booke of his antiquities remembreth : funt tamen qui in Egypto regnaffe autument hung : unde fit CADMYS aui in Graciam profectus Thebas condidit, aboue iugulato fic nuncunatas; quoniam Syrorum lingua bos dicitur Thebe. There are (faith bee) who thinke that this OGYGES did raigne in Agypt, whereby he should be CADMV s, who traucling into Greece built Thebes. to named of a beefe flame : because in the Syrian language a beefe is called Thebe.

But this floud of ogyges fell in the years of the world 3440. according to Eulebius, who followed the account of the Septuagint : and the floud of Noah in the yeare 30 2242. after the same account; and so there came 1200, yeares betweene these flouds, wanting but two, though heerein Eusebius was much mistaken, and corrected this opinion in his Chronologie, Now although the very yeare and time of this ouerflowing in Achaia, or rather Attica, be not præcifely fet downe, but that there is a great difference among writers, yet who foeuer makes it most ancient, findes aboue

500. yeares difference betweene that and the generall floud.

For Paulus Orofius affirmes, that this tempest fell upon the Athenians but 1040. Linear veares before Rome built. Bucholzerus faith it was 1043, elder then Rome; which was founded (according to the same Bucholzerus) in the worlds yeare 3210 though after the account which I follow (and whereof I will give my reasons in the storic of 40 Abraham) it was built in the worlds yeare 3280. Now the generall floud præceded the building of Rome (laith Bucholzerus) 1563, yeares: and the floud of Ogyges (as before) 1043. Hence it followeth by calle calculation, that (if he place Ogyges in his true age) the difference betweene these two flouds must be $20. yeares, to which we (allowing 60 more) finde 780. And that this of ogyees was not the fame of Noah (except we call Noah Ogyges prifcus, as some doe) it appeares by this, that xenophon Asi the floud of Ogyges then king of Attica or Ogygia, did not extend it selfe any further manus. then the bankes of Archi-pelago, or the Legwan Sea. For whereas Mela, Plinie, and Mela line Solinus witnesse, that the Cittie of Joppe in Judea was founded before the floud; and Plindis. that (notwithstanding the waight of waters) there remained on certaine Altars Solea 47. 50 of stone the title of the King, and of his brother Phineus, with many of the antiquissimum grounds of their religion : fure, it is no where found among prophane Historians or the total purpose nor in the scriptures, that ever the floud of Ogyges spread it selfe over any part of Sy-tionem terraria, much leffe ouer all the earth. But that it drowned both the Regions of Attica rum conditum. about Athens, and that of Achaia in Peloponnesus, it is very probable. For it see-

Of this floud of ogyges was invented the fable of Apollo and Diana. For Latona 10 the daughter of Caus, the sonne of Than, being beloued and forced by Inpiter, and by him gotten with childe, Juno thereat enraged permitted her (as they fay) no part of the earth to be delinered on; and withall caufed the monstrous serpent Python to follow and affright her, wherefocuer the transiled, till at length arriving at the the of Ortreio the was there received : in which the was delivered, first of Diana, and then of Apollo, being Twinnes; whereof Barlaam makes this expolition: That at fuch time as the deluge (which happened in Ogyges his raigne) ceased, out of the abundant moisture of the earth (heat by putrefaction being thereto mixed) there were exhaled fuch thicke mifts and fogges, that in Attica, and along the coasts of the Legan fea, neither the beames of the Sunne by day, nor of the Moone by 20 night could pierce the ayer, or be perceived by the inhabitants: so as when at length (the earth being dried, and these vapours dissipated) the aver began to be cleare, and the people of Ortygia espied the light of the Moone somewhat before day, and Phin. 14.46.11. and in the same morning the Sunne also appeared : sabulously (because Diana repræsented the Moone, and Apollo the Sunne) they were reported to be borne in the Ile of Ortygia thereof afterwardes called Delos : which fignifieth manife-

And furely it is not improbable, that the floud of Ogyges, being fo great, as Hi-Brories have reported it, was accompanied with much alteration of the ayre fenfibly discerned in those parts, and some vnusuall face of the skies. Varro in his bookes De 20 gente populi Romani (as he is cited by S. Augustine) reporteth out of Castor, that so great a miracle happened in the starre of Venus, as neuer was seene before, nor in after times: For the colour, the greatnesse, the figure, and the course of it, were changed. This fell out as Adrastus Cyzicenus, and Dion Neapolites, famous Mathematicians affirmed in the time of ogyges.

Now concerning the course of that or any other planet, I doe not remember, that I have any where read, of fo good Astrologers flourishing among the Greekes, or else where in those daies as were likely to make any calculation of the revolutions of the Planets fo exact, that it should neede no reformation. Of the colour and magnitude. I fee no reason why the difference found in the starre of Venus should bee 40 held miraculous; confidering that leffer miftes and fogges, than those which couered Greece with folong darkneffe doe familiarly prefent our fenses, with as great alterations in the Sunne and Moone. That the figure should vary, questionlesse it was very ftrange: Yet I cannot hold it any prodigie: for it ftands well with good reason, that the fide of Venus which the Sunne beholdes, being enlightened by him, the op. posite halfe should remaine shadowed; whereby that Planet, would vnto our cies, descrying onely that part whereon the light falleth, appeare to bee horned, as the Moone doth sceme; if distance (as in other things) did not hinder the apprehension Galilaus, Galilaus, a worthy Astrologer now living, who by the helpe of perspective 50 glasses hath found in the starres many things viknown to the ancients, affirmeth 6 much to have beene discouered in Venus by his late observations. Whether some waterie disposition of the aire might present as much to them that lived with ogyges as Galileus hath seene through his instrument; I cannot tell: sure I am, that the difcouerie of a truth formerly vnknowne, doth rather conuince man of ignorance, then nature of errour. One thing herein is worthy to be noted, that this great, but particular floud of ogyges, was (as appeareth by this of St. Augustine) accompanied with fuch vnufuall (and therefore the more dreadfull, though naturall) fignes testifying the concurrence of causes with effects in that inundation; whereas the floud of Noah which was generall and altogether miraculous, may feeme to have had no other token, or forelhewing, then the long preaching of Noah himselfe, which was not regarded : for they were eating and drinking, when the floud came fodainely, and Links 17, 22.71 tooke them all away.

of DEVCALIONS floud: and that this was not NOAHS floud: nor the Vmbri in Italie a remnant of any vniner fall floud, Second floud of great fame, and of which the time is more certaine, was that of Deucalion in Theffalia, of which S. Augustine out of Varro. His temporibus (vt V ARRO scribit) regnante Atheniensibus CRANAO. Successore Cecropis (vt autem nostri, Evsebivs & Hierony-

MVS) adhuceodem CECROPE permanente, diluuium fuit, quod appellatum est Deucalionis: (that is) In these times (as VARRO reporteth) CRANAVS the Succession of CECROPS governing the Athenians, or (as our EVSEBIVS and HIE-ROME (ay) CECROPS yet living, that floud (called Deucalions) happened.

And in the beginning of the eleventh Chapter of the same eighteenth Booke, he vseth these wordes. Eduxit ergo Moses ex Egypto populum Dei nouisimo tempore CECROPIS Atheniensium Regis, cum apud Assyrios regnaret Ascatades, apud Sicyonios MARATHYS, apud Arginos TRIOPAS. MOSES led the people of God out of Egypt about the latter times of CECROPS King of the Athenians, ASCATADES raigning ouer the Assirians, ouer the Sicyonians MARATHUS, and ouer the Argines 30 TRIOPAS: fo as leauing the curiofitie of a few yeares, more or leffe, it appeareth, that this floud of Deucalion was either at the egreffion of the children of Ifrael out of Azypt, or neare it: and then after Noah 753. yeares, according to Functius, who makes Cecrops to live in the yeare of the world 2409. or if we follow Mercator, then 739 yeares after Noah, and in the yeare of the world 2395. But if Deucalion were borne in the age of the world 2356. according to Codoman; then giving vnto Deucalion fourtie yeares of age when this floud happened, it falleth within one yeare of Mercators account. But Deucation by all approued Historians is faid to have beene 82. yeares old at that time. Now Clemens Alexandrinus dates the time of this floud of Deucalion, and the conflagration and burning in Phaetons time, by the raigne of 40 Crotopus King of the Argines; but Crotopus lived King of the Argines fixe yeares after Ifrael departed Ægypt, which makes twentie yeares difference according to Funetius, who will have this floud and burning to have fallen fourteene yeares before

Moses left Agypt: for hee gaue of the worldes yeares to the floud and burning the yeare 2440 and to Mofes his egreffion the yeare 2454. And yet Cedrenus thinks that cedron I. Gas Moses was more ancient, and lived with Inachus; but that cannot be true: for then had the floud of Deucalion, and the burning of Phae:on, preceded the floud of Ogrees, which is denyed by all: for that of Theffalie (called Deucations) followed that of Atties (called Ogygia) at least 250. yeares or thereabouts. Eusebius in his Chronologie makes it 230. and fo doth P. Orofius: Eusebius about the 50. yeare of Moses life, and 50 Cyrillus about the 67. and both after Washs floud 770. yeares: for these bee Clemens

Acxandrinus his wordes. Fuit autem in Gracia tempore quidem PHORONEI, qui clem. Alexa. fuit post IN ACHVM, inundatio que fuit tempore Ogygis, There happened in Greece in the Break City. time of PHORONEVS, who lined after INACHVS, the floud of Ogyges. Now if the floud of Ogyges in Atica were 1020. or 1016. yeares before the first Olympiad, according to Eufebius and Orofius; (as before) then is it manifest, that taking 763 out of this number of 1020, it fals out that Ogyges floud happened before the Hebrewes left £gypt 250. yeares, or 260. yeares, according to the difference between the o-Falch, in Chron. pinions of Eulebius and Orofius. And for my felte (who rather follow those Chronologers, which give 60. yeares more to Abraham after the floud, then the rest) I reckon the times which come betweene these flouds in this sort. The generall floud was in the yeare of the world 1656. Jacob was borne in the yeare of the world 2169. fo as from the beginning of the floud to Iacobs birth there were confumed 512. veares. Ogyges floud happened 100. yeares after Incob was borne; and therefore after the generall floud 613, yeares. Now Deucation was borne in the yeare of the 10 world 2356, and had lived 82, yeares, when his Kingdome of Theffalie was overwhelmed; (which added to 2356 make 2438) his floud was after Woals floud ended 782, yeares. And hereto Annius his Xenophon agreeth, who makes 700 yeares between the generall floud and Deucalions birth; to which adde 82. years of his age(as before) and then the floud of Theffalie followed the generall 782. yeares. The wordes of that Xenophon are these. Ab inundatione terrarum ad ortum Deventionis, (ecundo anno Sphari, septingenti supputantur anni, qui natus annos duos & octoginta Thes-(aliam vidit inundatam, From the drowning of the world to the birth of DEVCALION. in the second yeare of Spharus, are numbred 700. yeares, and when DEVCALION was 82. yeares old, he faw Thessalia drowned. This floud happened in the winter time a- 20 bout Parnaffus: witnesse Aristotle in the first of his Meteors. And Varro (whom St. Augustine so often citeth for his excellent learning, especially in antiquities) findeth this floud of Descalion to have happened in the time of Cranaus, who fucceeded Cecrops: Orolius thinkes it fomewhat later, Amphitryon raigning in Athens, the third from Cecrops. Onely this of Dencalion was very great, and reached not only ouer Thessalie it selfe, and the Regions adioyning Westward; but it couered the greatest part of Italie : and either the same, or some other particular floud then happening opprest £gypt, faith Enfebius. And therefore did the Greekes either thinke it or faine it to be vniuerfall; and Deucalion, then King, fauing himselfe and some others on the mountaines of Thessalie (of all other the highest, faith Solinus) was by reason 30 thereof (as Strabo witneffeth) faid to be the preseruer of mankinde. That this floud couered a great part of Italie, Plinie and Solinus make it probable: who affirme that the people then inhabiting Italie were therefore called sussess quia ab imbribus diluui Superfuissent; and therefore also were they esteemed the most ancient Nation, as Strabo confirmeth in his first Booke, and Trezenius in his second: which Vmbri these Authours make the Parents of the Sabines, and the Sabines to bee the Parents of the Samnies, Piceni, Lucani, Brutij, and all others inhabiting anciently the bankes of the Mediterrane Sea. But that these Vmbri were not the inhabiters of Italie before the floud of Noah, and so tooke name by saving themselves upon the Appenine mountaines, the Scriptures teach vs: shewing who, and who only then were preserued, 40 which is fufficient. Report hath adventured further, telling vs that the first people Attenues dipno- which after the generall floud inhabited Italie, were the Camefenes; (fo named from feet 1 15. out of Camele, whom Cato in originibus, another of Annius his Authours names for a con-Disco Congress faith that Ca. fort of Janus) which people lived altogether a favage life; till fuch time as Saturne mole was the arriving on those coasts, denised lawes to governe them by: the memorie of whose

Then came th' Aufonian bands, and the Sicanian tribes.

Of these Sicani (which left Spaine and sate downe in Italie) Thueydides and Pliniegiue Thueydile. testimonie: who were againe expelled by the Ligit, faith Thucydides. After all these Plinting. e.s. plantations and replantations came the Vmbri, descended of the Galles (faith Annius) Annius ex Sanot of those Galles of France, but of those of Systhia, who commanded a great part of Italie, euen all Hetruria and Campania; as Herodotus, Plinie, and Dionyfus, haue al. 20 fured vs; and therefore this floud of Deucalion was long after that of Noah. For all Plin.l.3.c.s. thole Nations were planted in Italie, and disposses of Italie againe; before the Vmbri were euer heard of, or had being. So that Kingdome was first called Camasene, then Latium or Saturnia, then Ausonia, then Sicania; before the Vmbri (in whose time Deucations floud happened) possess the same, about 306, yeares before the war of Troy: Lycaon then gouerning Areadia; who being the Father of two and twentie Sonnes, the youngest called Oenotrius invaded Italie, who gave it the name of Oe- Paulan Aread. notria. This name it held vntill Italius of the fame Nation changed it into Italie, lib. 3. after his owne name, about 250. yeares before the fall of Troy. After these came Arif polycator the Pelafgi, of whome Plinie in his third Booke and fift Chapter; and Strabo in his

Now that there was not anciently fuch a Nation, as these Vinbri, in those parts, I doe not affirme : having respect to the testimonies before repeated. And Stephanus thinkes, that the name was derived from the Greeke word ombros; but that these Vmbri of Italie were descended of the Nation of Soythians (called Galli) it shall bee

Of some other records testifying the universall sloud: and of two ancient deluges in Ægypt: and of some elsewhere,

Aint Augustine out of Varro affirmeth that the Greekes and Latines made not any mention of the vniuerfall floud, because they had nothing of antiquitie foregoing that of ogyges; and therefore (according to Rhodoginus before remembred) were all thinges among the ding to Khoaagamus before rememored ) were an uninger among enGreekes (which antiquitie had worme out of knowledge) called Ozygia, which we in English commonly call (worme-caten) or of defaced date. Cyrillus also affirmeth, that Alex. Polyhistor maketh mention of this generall floud. And Plate in Timee produceth an Egyptian Priest, who recounted to Solon out of the holy Bookes of Agypt, the storie of the floud vniuerfall, which (faith he) happened long before the Gracian inundations. Fryer Annius his Xenophon remembreth 20 a third floud, which also Diodorus Siculus confirmeth, somewhat more ancient then that of Ogyges in Attica. For he named the generall floud : for the first, which happened (faith he) vnder the old Ozyges, fub profes Ozyge, which was Wosh; he calleth the second Williams: Hercules and Prometheus then living, 44. yeares before that of Attics, in the 2.4. yeare of Belochus King of the Affyrians, though I doe not beleeue him as touching the time. But this floud concred a great part of the nether £qipt.

especially all that Region subject to Prometheus; and hereof came the fable of the 35st, Com. 14st. 6 Vulture on Prometheus his liver, afterward flaine by Hercules of £gypt: which fiction Diod. Siculus deliuereth in these wordes: Flunium propter cursus velocitatem, profunditatemá, aquarum Aquilam tune appellatum, HERCVLEM cum confilij magnitudine, 20 tum virtuse, volunt è vestigio compressisse, & aquarum impetum ad priorem cursum conuertisse: Vnde & Greci quidam Poete rem gestam in fabulam vertentes, HERCVLEM tradunt Aquilam PROMETHEL jecur depascentem occidiste, This floud (meaning of Wilus) for the swiftnesse of his course, as also for the depth, was in those dayes called the Eagle: but HERCVLES by his great judgement and vertue did againe compresse and Oxage ten this River, to farre extended and overfixed, turning it into the old channels: Whence certaine Greeke Pacts (connerting this labour and worke of HERCVLES into a fable) denifed that HERCVLES flew the Eagle, which fed on PROMETHEVS liner; meaning that he deliucred Prometheus of that forrow and torment, which for the Ioffe of his people and Countrie (by the waters destroyed and couered ouer) hee 40

A fourth floud chanced about Pharus in Agypt, where Alexander Macedon built Alexandria, as Annius conceineth out of his Xenophon, who in this briefe fort Remp. de aquin, writeth of all these inundations. Inundationes plures fuere : prima nonimestris inunda-Comm. per An- tio terrarum sub prisco Ogyge : secunda Niliaca, &c. There were many inundations (faith this fame Xenophon) the first which was universallof nine Moneths, and this happened under the first Ogyges: the second was Niliaca, and of one Moneths continuance in the time of Hercules and Prometheus Agyptians: a third of two Moneths under Ogyges Atticus: the fourth of three Moneths in Theffalia under Deucalion; and a fift of the like continuance (called Pharonica) vnder Proteus of Egypt, about the time of Helens 50 rape. Diodorus in his fift booke and eleventh Chapter, taking the Samothraces for his Authours, remembreth a floud in Afia the leffe and elfewhere, of no leffe destruction then any of the other particular inundations, faying, that the same happened before that of Deucalion : the Sea of Pontus and Hellefoont breaking in ouer the land.

But there have beene many flouds in divers times, and ages, not inferiour to any of thefe two last remembred . Miliaca and Pharonica in Agypt : as in the yeare of our redemption 190. when in October of the same yeare, Gregorie then being Bishop of Rome, there happened a maruailous ouerflowing in Italie, and especially in the Venetian territorie, and in Lyguria, accompanied with a most fearefull storme of thunder and lightning : after which followed the great plague at Rome, by reason of the many dead Serpents cast vp and left vpon the land, after the waters decreased and returned. And in the yeare 1446, there perifhed 10000, people, by the breaking Munfler. in of the Sea at Dordroch in Holland: of which kinde I take that floud to be of Achaia or Attica. Before that and in the yeare 1238. Trithemius speaketh of an earthquake Ecopoli, & towhich fwallowed many thousands: and after that of a floud in Frifeland, in which remains common there perished 100000 persons. Strozius Sigog, in his Magia omnifaria, telleth of mills bon non mills aprile. an inundation in Italie, in the time of Pope Damafus, in which also many Citties of runt, Friha quoq Sicile were swallowed another in the Papacie of Alexander the sixth: also in the yeare for martiness fluctus tota pene 1515. Maximilian being Emperour. Hee also remembreth a perilous overflowing [ubmersa sait of in Polonia, about Cracouia, by which many people perished. Likewise Viginier a perierunt plus-French Historian speaketh of a great floud in the South part of Languedoc, which fell quam 100000, in the yeare of our Lord 1557, with so dreadfull a tempest, as all the people attended therein the very end of the world, and judgement day; faving, that by the vio-

20 lent descent of the waters from the mountaines, about Nilmes there were removed diuers old heapes and mountures of ground, and many other places torne vp and rent: by which accident there was found both covne of filter and gold, divers neeces of plate, and veffels of other mettall, supposed to be hidden at such time as the Goths inuaded that Prouince, in the yeare 1156.

Q. V.
That the floud of No AH was supernaturall, though some say it might have, beene foreseene by the Starres.

Ow howfocuer all thefe flouds and many other, which have concred at seuerall times seuerall Regions, not only in these parts of the world, at retictation restriction. The state of the of the earth by a power aboue nature, and by the especiall commandement of God himfelfe, who at that time gaue strength of influence to the Starres, and abundance to the Fountaines of the deepe: whereby the irruption of waters was made more forcible, then any abilitie of nature could effect, or any fecond causes by whatsoeuer vnion could performe, without receiuing from the Fountaine of all power, 40 strength, and faculties supernaturall. Henricus Mediniensis, a Scholler of Albertus Magnus, in his Commentaries vpon the great conjunctions of Albu Mafar obserueth, that before the floud of 2 oah, the like conjunction of Jupiter and Saturne, happened in the last degree of Cancer, against that constellation since called the ship of Argos; by which the floud of Noah might be foretold, because Cancer is both a waterie figne, and the house of the Moone, which is the Ladie of the Sea, and of moisture, according to the rules of Astronomie, and common experience. And this opinion Petrus de Aliaco vpon Genesis confirmeth, affirming that although Alio de concer-Nonly did well know this floud by dinine reuelation, yet (this conjunction being no-dia 1 holes. et torious) he could not be ignorant of the second causes thereof: for those were not only fignes, but also working causes, by strength received from the first cause, which

properly fignifieth any place of stoppage, against which the force of the water being naturally carried downewards, dasheth and breaketh; of a page a little or frange. Hence, because windores doe not only open but also shut, the word hath been expounded (Windores) for barres or floud gates.

heauen) Moses meant this great and waterie conjunction; the word (Catarracta) fignifying flowing downe or comming downe. Now(faith P. de Aliaco ) it pleafed God to ordaine by the course of the Heauens such a constellation, by which all men might behold therein their destruction towards, and thereby for sake those wicked waies wherein they walked, and call vnto God for mercie.

Of this judgement was Gal. Parifienfis, who vnderstood that the wordes Catarratta cali, or windores of heaven were to be taken for the former conjunction, or for these wateriesignes, Cancer, Pisces, Pleiades, Hyades, and Orion, and of the Planets. Mars, Venus, and the Moone: which are the forcible causes of the greatest inundations. His owne words are these, Wondum intelligo Prophetam Hebraorum catarractas 10 cali voca se, nisi partes illas cali, que generative sunt pluviarum & inundationum aquarum, quales sunt signa aquatica, vt Cancer &c. as aforesaid. As yet (saith he) I perceive not what the Prophet of the Hebrews meaneth by those words (Catarralta celli, or windores of Heauen) sulesse to thereby understand those exclessing powers, by whose influences are en-gendred the raine, and inundations of waters, such as are the waterie Signes of Can-

But in a word, as it might please God, that in the course of his vnsearchable wisedome this coniunction should at such time be: so did he (as aforesaid) adde vigour and facultie, and gaue to euery operation increase of vertues, violent eruptions to Springs and fountaines, commaunding them to cast out the whole treasure and 20 heape of their waters; taking retention from the Cloudes, and condenling ayer into water by the ministeric of his Angels, or howsoener else best pleased his Al-powerfulnesse.

That there was no neede of any new creation of matter to make the universall floud : and what are Catarract a Cali. Gen. 7. verf. 11.

Owif it be objected, that God doth not create any thing of new; (for God resteth the seuenth day: (that is) he did not then after create any new (pecies) which graunted, it may feeme that then all the earth & ayre had not waters sufficient to couer the habitable world sifteene cubites aboue the highest mountaines. Of this proposition whether

God hath so restrained himselfe or no, I will not dispute; but for the consequent (which is) that the world had want of water to ouercouer the highest mountaines, I take that conceit to be unlearned and foolish; for it is written, that the fountaines of the great deepe were broken up (that is) the waters for look the very bowels of the earth; 40 and all what focuer was differft therein peirced and brake through the face thereof. Then let vs confider that the Earth had aboue one and twentie thousand miles: the Diameter of the Earth according to that circle feuen thousand mile, and then from the Superficies to the Center some three thousand fine hundred miles: Take then the highest mountaine of the world, Caucasus, Taurus, Olympus, or Atlas, the mountaines of Armenia or Soythia, or that (of all other the highest) in Tenuerif, and I doe not finde, that he that looketh highest stretcheth aboue thirtie miles vpright. It is not then impossible, answering reason with reason, that all those waters mixed within the earth three thousand fine hundred miles deepe should not well helpe to couer the space of thirtie miles in height, this thirty miles vpright being found in the 50 depths of the earth one hundred and sixteene times: for the fountaines of the great Deepe were broken vp, and the waters drawen out of the bowels of the earth. Secondly if we confider what proportion the earth beareth to the extension of the ayre ouer and aboue it, we shall finde the difference exceeding great. If then it pleafed God to condense but so much of this avre as euery-where compasseth and embraceth the earth, which condensation is a conversion of ayer into water, a change familiar in those elements, it will not seeme strange to men of judgement, yea but of ordinarie understanding that the Earth (God so pleasing) was coursed our with waters without any new Creation.

Lastly, for the opinions of Gulielmus Parisiensis, and Aliacensis, to which I may adde Berofus and others, That fuch a conjunction there was, foreshewing that defruction by waters which followed; and that by the word Catarract a call, or Windores of heaven, was meant this conjunction; there needes no other answere then to that observation of Ludonicus Vines, who affirmeth that by the gravest Astrologians it was observed, that in the yeare 1524, there should happen the like conjunction, as at Noahs floud, then which (faith he) there was never a more faire, drie, and feafonable yeare; the like destruction was prophecied of the yeare 1588. But Pieus Earle of Mirandula proueth that there could not bee any fuch conjunction at that

To conclude, I finde no other mysterie in the word Catarra Te cali, then that the clowdes were meant thereby: Moles vling the word Windores of Heaven (if that bee the fense of the word) to expresse the violence of the raines, and powring downe of waters. For whofoeuer hath feene those fallings of water, which sometimes hap-20 pen in the Indies, which are called the Spowts (where clowdes doe not breake into drops, but fall with a reliftleffe violence in one body) may properly vie that manner of speech which Moses did; That the windores or floud-gates of heaven opened; (which is) That waters fell, contrarie to custome, and that order which we call naturall. God then loofened the power retentine in the vppermost aire, and the waters fell in abundance : Behold (faith I o B) he which holdeth the waters, and they drie 100 1.12,015 up, or better in Latine, Et omnia siccantur, and all things are dried up; but when hee sendeth them out, they destroy the earth : and in the 26. Chapter. Hee bindeth the waters in the clandes; but these bonds God loosed at that time of the generall floud, and called up the waters which flept in the great deep : and these joyning together couered 30 the earth, till they had performed the worke of his will: which done, hee then com- Gen. 8.12 maunded them to returne into their darke and vaft caues, and the reft (by a winde) rarified againe into aire, formerly condenfed into drops:

O A H commaunded by God, before the fall of those waters, entred the Arke which he had built, with his owne wife, and his fonnes, and his former wince, taking with them of eueric recture, which tooke life by generation, feuen of the cleane, and of the vncleane, two. Neah, according to Philo, lignifieth quietneffe: after others, and according to the prophecie of his Father Lamech, ceffation; to whome after-times gaue many names answering his antiquitic, zeale, vertue, and other qualities: as, The first Ogyges, because in the time of the Grecian Ogyges there was also a great floud of Achaia: Saturne they called him, because hee was the Father of Nations: Others gaue him the name of Prometheus, who was faid to fleale away Iupiters fire; fire in that place being taken and understood for the knowledge of God and heauenly things. Others thinke that he was so called for his excellent wisedome and foresight. Hee had also '50 the name of Ianus, (idest) vinofus, because Iain, fignifieth wine in the Hebrew. And fo Tertullian finds him written in libris ritualibus, in the bookes of ceremonies, preceding both Saturne, Franus, and Joue: which three enjoyed an elder time then all the other ancientest fained Gods. And this name Iain is taken from the Hebrew and Syrian, and not from the Latine: for it was in vie before there was any Latine Nation, orany Kingdome by that name knowne. Of the antiquitie of Janus, Fabius Pictor giucth this testimonic. IANI atate nulla crat Monarchia, quia mortalibus pectoribus nondum haserat ulla regnandi cupiditas, &c. Vinum & far primus populos docuit I A NVS ad facrificia; primus enim aras cr. Pomæria er facra docuit. In the time of I A N v s (faith he) there was no Monarchie : for the delire of rule had not then folded it Celfe about the hearts of men. I ANV s first taught the people to (acrifice Wine and Meale : he first fet up Altars, instituted gardens and solitarie groves, wherein they veed to pray; with other holie rites and ceremonies. A greater testimonie then this there cannot be found among the Heathen, which in all agreeth fo well with the Scriptures. For first, whilest Noah flourished, there was not any King or Monarch : Nimrod being the first that 10 tooke on him four raigne authoritie. Secondly, 20 oah after the floud was the first that planted the Vine, and became a hulbandman; and therefore offered the first fruits of both (to wit) Wine and Meale. Thirdly, hee was the first that raised an Altar, and offered facrifice to God, a thanks-giuing for his mercifull goodneffe to-wards him. Noah was also fignified in the name of Biffons (which was given to Iz-Armsont,gent. nus ) because he beheld the times both before and after the floud, quia praterita nonerit, & futura prospexerit, saith Arnobius. Because he knew what was past, and provided for what was to come. He was also in the person of Innus shadowed by the name of Chaos, and semen orbis, the seede of the world; because as out of that consused heape was drawne all the kindes of beafts and plants; fo from Nosh came all mankinde; 20 whereof ouid in the person of Janus:

He was also intituled Calum and Sol. Heaven and the Sunne, for his excellent knowledge in Astronomic : Vertumnus, Batchus, and Liber Pater; not that latter, which 30 Diod. Siculus, and Alex. Aphrodifeus fo call, because he was the restorer of the Greekes to their former libertie, but in respect of the floud. For the Greekes called Liber 2"s, and his Nurses Hyades, of raine, because Noah entred the Arke, when the Sunne ioyned with the Starres Hyades, a constellation in the brow or necke of Taurus, and cuer after a monument of Noahs floud. He was also by others furnamed Triton, a Marine God, the Sonne of Neptune: because hee lived in safetie on the waters. So was he knowne by the name of Diony fus, quafi diariogou, mentem pungens, bite-braine, or wit-flinger, though Diodorus conceine otherwife, and deriue that name à patre esloce, of his Father, and the place of his birth, (to wit) of Joue, and Nifa a Towne of Arabia falix, faith Suidas out of Orpheus. He had also the by-name of Taurus, or Tauro- 15 phagus; because he first voked Oxen and tilled the ground, according to that of Moles. And No A H became an husbandman. Now how socuer the Gracians vaunt of their Theban Bacchus (otherwife Dionyfus)it is certaine that the name was borrowed. and the invention stollen from Noah. But this name of Bacchus, more anciently Boacus, was taken (faith Gul. Stuckius, and out of him Danaus) from Noachus, (N) being communations, & changed into (B); and it is the more probable, because it cannot bee doubted but Dancus depit that Noah was the first planter of the Vine after the floud : and of Noah (the first and ancient Bacchus) were all those fables deuised, of which Diodorus complaineth in his fourth Booke, and fifth Chapter. This first Bacchus (to wit) Noah was surnamed Nylius, of the mountaine Nylain India, where the Gracian Bacchus neuer came, what- 50 focuer themselves faine of his enterprises, and these mountaines of Nysioyne with those of Paropanises. And those other Easterne mountaines, on which the Arke of North rested after the floud.

Furthermore, to the end that the memorie of this second parent of mankinde might the better be preserved, there were founded by his issues many great Citties which bare his name; with many rivers and mountaines: which oftentimes forgat that it was done in his regard, because the many names given him brought the same confusion to places as to himselfe. Notwithstanding all which, we finde the Cittie of That Le. Noah vpon the bankes of the red Sea and elsewhere: the River of Noas in Thrace, Steph de Pris. which Strabo calleth Noarus; Ptolomie Danus; dividing Illyria from Panonia. Thus Strabol. 1. much for the name.

Of Sundrie particulars touching the Arke : as the place where it was made. the matter, fashion and name.

CHAP. 7. S.8.

Ow in what part of the world Noah built the Arke, it doth not appeare in the Scriptures, neither doe I finde any approved Authour A that hath written thereof : only Goropius Becanus in his Indo-Scythia conceiveth, that Noah built his Arke neare the mountaines of Caucalus. because on those hils are found the goodlieft Cedars: for when Alex.

Macedon made the warre among a people, called Nyfei, inhabiting the other fide of 20 Caucafus, hee found all their burials and Sepulchers wrought ouer with Cedar. To this place (faith Becanus) Woah repaired, both to separate himselfe from the reprobate Giants, who rebelled against God and Nature, as also because he would not be interrupted in the building of the Arke; to which allo hecaddeth the conueniencie of riuers, to transport the Timber which hee vsed, without troubling any other car-

Only this wee are fure of, that the Arke was built in some part of the Easterne world; and to my understanding, not farre from the place where it rested after the floud. For Noah did not vse any mast or faile (as in other ships) and therefore did the Arkeno otherwise moue then the Hulke or body of a ship doth in a calree Sea.

o Also because it is not probable, that during these continuall and downe-right raines there were any windes at all, therefore was the Arke little moued from the place where it was fashioned and set together. For it is written: Godmade a winde to passe Go.S.1. won the earth, and the waters ceased; and therefore it may be gathered, that during the fall of the waters, there was not any storme or forcible winde at all, which could drive the Arke any great distance from the place where it was first by the waters lifted vp. This is also the more probable, if that ancient opinion bectrue, as it is very likely, that the Arke had fundum planum, a flat bottome, and not raised in forme of a thip with a sharpnesse forward, to cut the waves for the better speede.

This kind of Veffell the Hebrewes call Thebet, and the Greekes Larnax, for fo they 40 termed Deucalions ship and some say, that the hill Parnassus, to which in eight dayes hearrived, was first called Larnassus, and by the change of (L) into (P) Parnassus, but suphaevro, Pausants thinks that it took name of a Sonne of the Nymphe Cleodore, called Par-solars, nassus, the inventour of Auguration. Pencerus findes the word ( Parnaffus ) to have no affinitie with the Greeke, but De Oracut folthinks it derived from the Hebrew word Nahas, which fignifieth Auguration and 94-Distination : or from Har or Parai, as in his Chapter of Oracles in the leafe before Iosephus cals the Arke Machina, by the generall name of a huge Frame: and Epi- Epiph, in Anow. phanius out of the Hebrew Aron; but herein lieth the difference betweene Aron 50 and Thebet, That Aron fignifieth properly the Arke of the Sanctuarie, but Thebet fuch a Veffell, as swimmeth, and beareth it selfe upon the waters.

Lastly, this Arke of Noah differed from the fallion of a ship in this, that it had a couer and roofe, with a creft in the middest thereof, and the sides declining like the roofe of an house; to the end, both to cast off the waters, and that thereunder Noals himselfe and his children might shelter, and separate themselues from the noysomneffe of the many bealts, which filled the other roomes and parts of the Arke.

Of what wood the Arke was built it is vncertaine. The Hebrew word Gopher once and in this place only yield is diverfly vnderflood; and though the matter bee of little importance, yet this difference there is, That the Genena Translation cals it Pinetree, the Rabbine Cedar, the Seuentie square timber, the Latine smooth timber. Others will haue it Cypres trees, as dedicated to the dead, because Cypres is worne at funerals. But out of doubt if the word Gopher fignific any speciall kinde of timber, Noah obayed the voice of God therein; if not, hee was not then curious as touching the kinde or nature of the wood, having the promise of God, and his grace to and mercie for his defence. For with Noah God promised to establish his conenant. Plin. Lac. 40. Plinie affirmeth that in Egypt it was the vie to build ships of Cedar, which the worme cates not; and he auoweth that he faw in Vica, in the Temple of Apollo Cedar beames, laid in the time of the foundation of the Cittie, and that they were still found in his time, which was aboue 1188. yeares after: prouing thereby, that this kinde of wood was not subject to putrifying or moulding in a very long time. But in that it is casie to cut, light to carry, and of a sweet sauour, lasting also better then any other wood, and because neare the place where the Arke rested, there are found great store of these Cedar trees, as also in all the mountaines of the East, befides those of Libanus, it is probable enough that the Arke might be of that wood: 20 which bath belides the other commodities the greatest length of Timber, and therfore fittest to build ships withall: Pererius conceineth that the Arke had divers forts of timber, and that the bottome had of one fort, the decke and partition of another; all which may be true or falfe, if Gopher may be taken for timber in generall. True it is, that Cedar will ferue for all parts of a ship, as well for the body, as for masts and vards. But Noah had most respect to the direction received from God: to the length, breadth, and heighth, and to the partitions of the Arke; and to pitch it, and to diuide it into Cabines, thereby to feuer the cleane beafts from the vncleane, and to preserve their severall forts of foode; and that it might be capable of all kinde of liuing creatures, according to the numbers by God appointed. All which when 30 Ness had gathered together, hee call his confidence wholly on God, who by his Angels fleered this ship without a rudder, and directed it without the helpe of a Compaffe or the North starre. The pitch which Noah vsed, is by some supposed to have beene a kinde of Bitumen, whereof there is great quantitie about the Valley of Sodome and Gomorra, now the dead Sea or Alphaltes: and in the Region of Babylon, and in the West India, and herein it exceedeth other pitch that it melts not with the

He Arke according to Gods commaundement had of length three hundred cubites, fiftie of breadth, and thirtie deepe or high : by which proportion it had fixe parts of length to one of breadth, and ten times in length to one of depth; of which St. AVGVSTINE. Procul dubio in length to one of deput; of which of the ceit ) Ecclefie, queft falua per lignum, in quo pependit Mediator Dei & hominum, homo Christus Iesus : nam & mensuraipsalongitudinis, altitudinis, latitudinis go eius significat corpus humanum, in cuius veritate ad homines pranunciatus est venturus, & venit, &c. Without doubt (faith he) it 50 is a figure of the Cittie of God, transiling in this world as a stranger (that is) of the Church, faued by the tree whereupon the Mediatour betweene God and Man, the man Iefus Christ did hang: for even the very measure of the length, heighth, and breadth, answereth the shape of mans body, in the truth whereof the comming of Christ was foretold and performed.

By what kinde of Cubite the Arke was measured, it hath beene a disputed queftion among the Fathers, and others; and the differences are in effect thefe. The first kinde of cubit (called the Common) containeth one foot and a halfe, measured from the sharpe of the elbow to the point of the middle finger. The fecond (the palme cubit) which taketh one handfull more then the common. The third is called Regius Cubitus, or the Persian Cubit, which exceedeth the common cubit three inches. The fourth is the facred cubit, which containeth the common or vulgar cubit double, wanting but a quarter or fourth part. Lastly there is a fift cubit, called Geometricall, which containeth fix common cubits. But of all these sortes.

10 which were commonly measured by the vulgar cubit, the alteration and diminution of mens statures hath made the difference. For as there is now a lesse proportion of bodies; fo is the common cubit, from the sharpe of the elbow to the point of the middle finger, of leffelength then it was in elder times.

St Augustine considering the many fortes of beastes and birds which the Arke held, with their food and water, was sometimes of opinion, that the Arke had proportion after the Geometricall cubit, which containeth almost fix of the Common. For measuring the Arke by the yulgar cubit, it did not exceed the capacitie of that Athen, dipnosoo, For measuring the zark by the voils at the state of the pater. But St Jugu. The strength with the of Systaulis, or the fluip of Ptolomic Philo-pater. But St Jugu. The films (who at the first was led by Origen) changed his indegenent as touching the Control, 20 Geometricall cubit; and found upon better confideration, that there needed not fo huge a bodie to præserue all sortes of creatures by God appointed to be reserved. For it was not needfull to take any kindes of filhes into the Arke, because they were kept liuing (faith St Augustine) in their owne element. Non fuit necesse conferuarein Arca qua poffent in aquis vivere; non folum mer fa ficut pifces, verum super-natantia, ficult mult a dites. It was not needfull to conferue those creatures in the Arke, which could line in the waters ; and not onely fiftes which can live under water, but also those fowles which sit and finimme on them : and againe, Terranon aqua, maledicta, quià Adam non huius, fed Aug de Civili. illius fruotum vetitum comedit. It was the earth, and not the waters, which God curfed for Dellis as 37 of the feebidden fruit of the earth and not of the Sea, did Adameat; fo as St Augustine 30 gathereth hereupon, (as aforefaid) that so huge a Frame needed not.

And if wee looke with the cies of judgement heereunto, wee shall finde nothing monstrous therein; although the imaginations of men, who (for the most part) haue more of mischiese and of ignorance, then of any reuerend reason finde many impossibilities in this worke of God. But it is manifest, and vndoubtedly true that many of the Species, which now feeme differing and of feuerall kindes, were not then in rerum natura. For those beafts which are of mixt natures, either they were not in that age, or else it was not needfull to præserue them : seeing they might bee generated againe by others, as the Mules, the Hyana's and the like: the one begotten by Affes and Mares, the other by Foxes and Wolues. And whereas by dif-

40 couering of strange landes, wherein there are found divers beastes and birdes differing in colour or stature from those of these Northerne parts, it may be supposed by a superficiall consideration, that all those which weare red and pyed skinnes, or seathers, are differing from those that are lesse painted, and were plaine russet or black: they are much mistaken that so thinke. And for my owne opinion I finde no difference, but onely in magnitude, betweene the Cat of Europe, and the Ounce of India; and even those dogges which are become wilde in Hispagniola, with which the Spaniards yied to denoure the naked Indians, are now changed to wolves, and begin to destroy the breed of their Cattle, and doe also oftentimes teare asunder their owne Children. The common Crowe and Rooke of India is full of red feathers in the deal bid India

50 drown'd and low Islands of Caribana; and the Blackbird and Thrush hath his feathers mixt with black and carnation: in the North parts of Virginia. The dogfish of England is the Sharke of the South Ocean: For if colour or magnitude made a difference of Species, then were the Negro's, which we call the Black-mores non animalia rationalia not men, but some kinde of strange beastes : and so the Giants of the South America should bee of an other kinde, then the people of this part of the World. Wee also see it daily that the natures of fruits are changed by transplantation, some to better, some to worse, especially with the change of Climate. Crabs may be made good fruit by often grafting, and the best Mellons will change in a yeare or two to common Cowcummers by being fet in a barren foile: Therefore taking the kindes præcifely of all creatures, as they were by God created, or out of the earth by his ordinance produced: The Arke, after the meafure of the common Cubit was fufficiently capacious to containe of all, according to the number by God appointed : For it we adde but halfe a foot of measure to the Common Cubit, which had a foot and a halfe of Giantlie stature ( and lesse ai- 10 lowance we cannot give to the difference betweene them and vs) then did the Arke containe 600 foot in length, and 100 foot in breadth, and 60 foot deepe.

But first of all to make it manifest, that the Geometricall Cubit is not vsed in the Scripture, the stature of the Giants therein named may suffice. For if the bed of og King of Bafan had been nine Geometricall Cubites long, it had taken 54. Cubites of the common, which make 80 foot : and Goliah, who had the length of 6. Cubites and a handfull, which makes nine foot and a handfull, a proportion credible) if these Cubites had beene Geometricall, then had beene 54 foot in heighth and vpwards, which were monstrous and most incredible: for (according to this proportion) had the head of Goliah been nine footlong, and farre waightier and big- 20

ger then all Dauids bodie, who carried it away.

Againe if the Geometricall Cubit had been yfed for a measure in the Scripture as many Commenters have obscrued, then had the Altar (appointed to containe five Cubites of length, fine of breadth and three of heighth) haue reached the length of 2.7. foot vpright, and so must their Priestes have ascended by steps or ladders to have performed their facrifices thereon, which was contrarie to Gods Commandement given in these wordes : Thou shalt not goe up with sleppes unto mine altar, that thy shame beenot discouered thereon; and therefore was the Altar but three Common Cubites high which make foure foot, that their Priests standing thereby might execute their office: Wherefore I may conclude, that the Cubit mentioned in the Scriptures was 30 not the Geometricall, but the ordinarie Cubit of one foot and a halfe, according to the measure of Giantly stature; which measure (doubtlesse) might give much the more capacitie to the Arke, although it be also probable, that as the men were. fo were the horses whereon they rode, and all other creatures of a correspondent size. And yet (as I take it) though by this meanes there were not any whit the more roome in the Arke, it were not hard to conceiue, how all the distinct Species of Animals, whose lines cannot bee præserued in the waters, might according to their præsent quantities bee contained in a vessell of those dimensions which the Arke, had; allowing to the Cubit one foot and a halfe of our now viuall measure: whence it followeth of necessitie, that those large bodies which were in the daies of 200th 40 might have roome fufficient in the Arke, which was meafured by a Cubit of length

How the appointed number of creatures, to be faued (that is) seuen of the cleane, two of the vncleane (with necessarie foode) might have place in the Arke, Butao hath very learnedly declared: the briefe fumme of whose discourse to that purpose is this. The length of the Arke was three hundred cubits, which multiplyed by the breadth, namely fiftie cubits, and the product by the heighth of thirtie cubits, sheweth the whole concautie to have beene 450000. Now whereas the posts, walles, and other partitions of lodgings may feeme to haue taken vp a great part of the hollow: the heighth of the roofe which (the perpendicular being one cubit) contained 7500. cubicall cubes, was a 50 fufficient recompence : If therefore in a ship of such greatnesse wee seeke roome for 89. diffinct Species of beafts, or (leaft any should be omitted) for 100. seuerall kinds, we shall easily finde place both for them, and for the birds, which in bignesse are no away answerable to them, and for meate to sustaine them all. For there are three forts of beafts, whose bodies are of a quantitie best knowne; the Beefe, the Sheepe. and the Wolfe: to which the rest may be reduced, by saying, (according to Arilletle) that one Elephant is answerable to foure Becues, one Lyon to two Wolues, and fo of the rest. Of beasts, some feede on vegetables, others on flesh. There are one and thirtie kinds of the greater fort, feeding on vegetables: of which number, onely three are cleane, according to the law of Moses, whereof seuen of a kinde entred into the Arke, namely three couples for breede, and one odde one for facrifice: the other eight and twentie kindes were taken by two of each kinde, fo that in all there were in the Arke one and twentic great beafts cleane, and fixe and fiftie vncleane, estimable 10 for largenesse as 91. Beeues; yet for a supplement (least perhaps any Species becomitted) let them be valued, as 120. Beeues. Of the leffer fort, feeding on vegetables were in the Arke fixe and twentie kinds, estimable with good allowance for sunplie, as fourescore Sheepe. Of those which denour flesh were two and thirtie kinds. answerable to three score and soure Wolues. All these 280, beasts might be kept in one storie or roome of the Arke in their seuerall Cabbines; their meate in a second: the Birds and their prouision in a third, with place to spare for Noah and his familie, and all their necessaries.

That the Arkerested upon part of the hill Taurus (or Caucafus) betweene the East Indies; and Scythia.

A praterition of some questions lesse materials: with a note of the vse of this question; to finde out the Metropolis of Nations;

Hat time Noah tooke to build the Arke, I leave to others to dispute; but he received the Commandement from God 100 yeares before the waters fell: and had therefore choice of time and leifure fufficient. As for the number of decks & partitions, which origen deuides into fource

St. Augustine into three, I will not trouble the Reader with the controuersie: or whether those creatures which sometimes rest on the land, other times in the waters, as the Crocodiles (now called Alegartos) the Sea-cowes or Sea-horses, were kept in the Arke, or no, I thinke it a needleffe curiofitie; and yet to this faith Pererius, and others before him, that a fish-poole might bee made aswell within the Arke, as in Hiero his ship of Syracuse. Lastly, to consider or labour to disproue the foolerie of the Hebrewes, who suppose that the Arke was lightened by a Carbuncle, 40 or had windores of Cristall to receive in light, and keepe out water, were but to reuiue the buried vanities of former times. But that which I feeke most to satisfie my felfe and others in, is in what part of the world the Arke rested after the floud : because the true vnderstanding of some of these places (as the seate of the terrestrials Paradife, and the refting of the Arke) doe only and truly teach the worlds plantation, and the beginning of Nations, before and after the floud; and all storie, as well generall as particular, thereby may be the better understood.

A proposall of the common opinion, that the Arkerested upon some of the hils of Armenia.

Nd first, for the true place where the Arke rested after the floud, and from A Nd first, for the true place where the Arke rened and their first settlement what part of the world the children of Noah trauailed to their first settlement and writers were vtterly mistaken. And I am not led so to thinkeout of my humour or newnesse of opinion, or singularitie; but doe herein ground my selfeon the originall and first truth, which is the word of God, and after that vpon reason, and the most probable circumstances thereon depending. For whereas it is written, that the Arke flaved upon one of the mountaines of Ararat, which the Chaldean Paraphraft hath converted Kardu, meaning the hils Gordai or Gordiai in Armenia the greater: (as the wordes Gordai and Kardu feeme to bee one and the fame) of which opinion also the most of our Interpreters are ; I finde neither Scripture nor reason which teacheth any fuch thing: (to wit) that it rested on that part of Ararat, which is in the greater 10 Armenia. Nicolaus Damascenus cals this mountaine of Ararat, Baris, being the same which the Chaldean nameth Kardu, to which mountaine the Fryer Annius (citing this place out of Infephus) makes him finde another adioyning, called Ocila, and to fay that the Arke (of which Mofes the Lawginer of the Hebrewes wrote) did first take ground on this Ocila. But I doe not finde any fuch mountaine in being, as this Ocila; neither is there any mention of it in the place of Iofephus. Strabo remembreth a Promontorie in Arabia falix, of that name, and Plinie findes a Mart-towne fo called in the same, which Ptolomie cals Ocilis, Pinetus Acyla, and Niger Zidon. But this Ocila of Damascenus, or rather of Annius, seemeth to be one and a part of the Armenian mountaines. Berofus calleth those mountaines of Armenia Cordiai, and Cur- 20 tius Cordai: Ptolomie Gordai and Gordiai: of which the Countrie next adioyning is by this Nicolaus Damascenus called Ninyada, perhaps (as Becanus coniectures) for Hierem 51.27. Milyada or rather Minni: which word is vied for Armenia Minor. And the very and plantation, I am refolued ( without any prefumption ) that therein the most

Washifuls.c.12 we should say Minni of Syria; for that Armenia also was a part of Syria, Plinic witnesseth. Epiphanius placeth the Cardyes about these mountaines, whom others call Gordieni or Gordeni. The mountaines are feated a part from all other to the North of that Ledge of mountaines called Taurus, or Niphates in the plaines of Armenia the great, neare the Lake Thospitis: whence the River of Tigris floweth in 75. degrees of longitude, and 41. and 42. degrees of latitude. One of the mountaines 30 Gordiei (that which furmounteth the rest) Epiphanius cals Lubar, which in the Artoteph. de Antiq. menian fignifieth a place of descent: but this out of Iosephus; which name (faith Iunius) was of the euent, because of Noshs comming downe with his children. But this alfo I take to be a supposed euent; seeing any hill, from whence on euery side wee must descend, may thus be called: as Junius corrects the place in Iosephus Aus Capie (Kubaris.) That the place is thus to be read, he coniectureth, because Ioseph 1.1.0.4. faics, the place is called disofartions (as it were the descent or comming downe) and Epiphan.l. 1. cont. Heref. cals it Adoug: which word in the Armenian and Egyptian tongue signifieth descent, of Lubar, which is to descend; whence also Lubra is a Synagogue, because it was commonly built on some high place; whereof also the Latine Delubrum may seeme to be derived; and Ast. 6.9. they that belonged to the word of Armenia seemes to be compounded of this word Minni, and Aram: as if

The first argument against the common opinion. They that came to build Babel, would have 50 come sooner, had they come from so neare a place as Armenia.

Synagogue of the Agyptims are called Libertini, for Lubratenu. Yet this opinion hath beene embraced from age to age: receiving a habit of strength by time, and allowance without any farther examination; although the name of Lubar might otherwise rightly be given, especially to that mountaine, by reason that the passage was more faire, vp and downe vnto it, then to any of the rest adioyning.

For first, it is agreed by all which follow Berofus, that it was in the 130. years, or Berofit. in the yeare 121 after the floud, when Wimrod came into the valley of Shinar, which Valley was afterward called Babylonia, Chulb, and Chaldea. If then the Arke had first found land in Armenia, it is very unprobable, that the children of Noah which came into that valley could have spent so many yeares in so short a passage; seeing the Region of Melopotamia was onely interiacent, which might by easie journeles haue been past ouer in 20 daies; and to hasten and help which passage the nauigable riuer of Tieris offered it felfe, which is cueric where transpaffable by boats of great burden : fo as where the Defart on the one fide refifted their expedition, the river on 10 the contrarie fide ferued to advance it; the river rifing out of the fame Ledge of mountaines, or at the foot of them, where the Arke of Noah was first supposed to fettle it felfe: Then, if the Nations which followed Nimrod still doubted the furprife of a fecond floud (according to the opinions of the ancient Hebrewes) it foundethill to the eare of reason, that they would have spent many yeares in that low and ouerflowen Valley of Melopotamia, so called of the many Rivers which imbroider or compasse it : for the effects witnessed their affections, and the workes, which they vndertooke, their vnbeliefe; being no fooner arrived in Shinar, but they beganne to prouide themselves of a defence (by creeting Babel) against any future or feared inundation. Now at Babelit was that Nimrod beganne his Kingdome, the 20 first knowne Cittie of the world founded after the floud, about 121, yeares, or (as others suppose) ten yeares later: though (for my selfe) I rather thinke, that they vndertooke that worke in two respects; first, to make themselves famous, Toget vs a Gento, to name (faith the Text: ) Secondly, thereby to viurge dominion over the reft.

t. IIII.

The second argument, That the Easterne people were most ancient in populositie, and in all humane glorie.

30  $F^{\rm Or}$  a fecond Argument : The civilitie, magnificence and multitude of people (wherein the Eaft parts of the world first abounded) hath more waight then any thing which hath beene, or can be faid for Armenia, and for Noahs taking land there. And that this is true, the vse of Printing and Artillerie (among many other thinges which the East had) may easilie perswade vs, that those Sunne-rising Nations were the most ancient. The certaintie of this report, that the East Indians (time out of minde) haue had Gunnes and Ordinance of batteric, confirmed by the Portugals and others, makes vs now to vnderstand, That the place of Philostratus in vata Apollonij Tianai, 1.2.c. 14. is no fable, though express in fabulous wordes: when he faith, that the wife men, which dwell betweene Hyphafis and Ganges, vie not themselves to goe forth into battaile : but that they drive away their enemies with thunder and lightning fent from Jupiter By which meanes there it is faid, that Hercules Apyptius and Bacchus, joyning their forces were defeated there; and that this Hercules there cast away his golden shield. For the invention of letters was ignorantly ascribed to Cadmus, because he brought them first into Greece : of which the people (then rude and fauage) had reason to give him the honour, from whom they received the benefit. But it is true, that letters are no leffe ancient then Seth or Henoch were: for they are faid to have written on pillers of flone (as before remembred) long before the floud. But from the Easterne world it was that John Cuthenberg a Germane, brought the deuise of Printing: by whom Conradus being instructed, brought the practise thereof 50 to Rome: and after that Nicholaus Gerson a Frenchman, bettered both the letters and inuention. And notwithstanding that this mysterie was then supposed to bee but newly borne, the Chinaos had letters long before either the Agyptians or Phanicians; and also the Art of Printing, when as the Greekes had neither any civill knowledge; or any letters among them.

And

And that this is true, both the Portugals and Spaniards have witneffed, who about an hundred yeares fince discouered those Kingdomes, and doe now enjoy their rich trades therein : for the Chinaos account all other Nations but Saluages, in respect of

And to adde strength to this argument, the conquest and storie of Alex. Macedon may justly bee called to witnesse, who found more Citties and sumptuositie in that little kingdome of Porus, which lay fide by fide to the East India, then in all his other travailes and undertakings. For in Alexanders time learning and greatneffe had not travailed fo farre to the West as Rome: Alexander escerning of Italie but as a barbarous Countrie, and of Rome as of a Village. But it was Babylon that stood in his 10 eye, and the fame of the East pierced his eares. And if we looke as farre as the Sunriling, and heare Paulus Venetus what he reporteth of the vttermost Angle and Island thereof, we shall finde that those Nations have sent out, and not received, lent knowledge, and not borrowed it from the West. For the farther East (to this day) the more civill, the farther West the more faluage. And of the Isle of Japan (now Zipingari) Venetus maketh this report. Incolereligioni, literis, & sapientie sunt addictisimi, & veritatis indagatores acerrimi; nibilillis frequentius oratione, quam (more nostro) facris in delubris exercent : vnum cognofcunt Principem, vnum Deum adorant, The Ilanders are exceedingly addicted to religion letters, and Philosophie, and most diligent searchers out of truth : there is nothing among them more frequent then prayer, which they we in their 20 Churches, after the manner of Christians. They acknowledge one King, and worship one God. The antiquitie, magnificence, civilitie, riches, fumptuous buildings, and pollicie in gouernement, is reported to be fuch by those who have beene employed into those parts, as it seemeth to exceede (in those formerly named, and divers other particulars) all other Kingdomes of the world.

The third argument, From the wonderfull relistance which SEMIRAMIS found in the East Indies.

B Vt for a third argument, and also of a treble strength to the rest, I lay the inuasi-on of Semiranis before the indifferent and adulted Reader: who may consider in what age sheelined, and how soone after the worlds new birth shee gathered her Armie (as Diodorus Siculus out of Ctelias reporteth) of more then three Millions to inuade India, to which headioyneth alfo 500000. Horse, and 100000. Waggons: whereof if we beleeue but a third part, it shall suffice to proue that India was the first planted and peopled Countrie after the floud. Now as touching the time wherein thee lived: All Historians confent, that shee was the wife of Ninus; and the most approved Writers agree, that Ninus was the Sonne of Belus, and Belus of Nimrod, 40 that Wimrod was the Sonne of Culb, Culb of Cham, and Cham of Noah. And at fuch time as Nimrod came into Shinar, he was then a great Nation, as by the building of the Cittle and Tower of Babel may appeare; and being then so multiplyed and increased, the two descents cast betweene Nimrod and Semiramis, brought foorth in that time those multitudes, whereof her Armie was composed. Let vs then see with whome shee encountred in that warre with this her powerfull Armie : euen with a multitude, rather exceeding, then equalling her owne, conducted by Staurobates King of India beyond Indus; of whole multitudes this is the witnesse of Diod. Siculus. STAVROBATES, auitis maioribus quam que erant SEMIRAMIDIS copis. STAVROBATES gathering together greater troups then those of SEMIRAMIS. If then 50 these numbers of Indians had been encreased but by a Colonie sent out from Shinar, (and that also after Babel was built, which no doubt tooke some time in the performance) this encrease in the East, and this Armie of Staurobates must have been made of stone, or somewhat else by miracle. For as the numbers which Semiramis gathered might easily grow up in that time, from so great a troupe as Nimrod brought with him into Babylonia (as shall be demonstrated hereafter in the storie of Israel) so could not any fuch time, by any multiplication naturall, produce so many bodies of men, as were in the Indian armie victorious ouer Semiramis, if the Colonies sent thirther had beene so late as Babel ouerturned, and the confusion of languages. For if we allow 67. yeares time after the floud, before Nimrod was borne: of which, 30. yeares to Culb ere he begat Seba, after whom hee had Hauilah, Sabtah, Raamah, and Sabtecha: Gen. 10.71. and then 30. yeares to Raamah, ere hee begat Sheba and Dedan, both which were borne before Nimrod: and fine yeares to his fine elder brothers, which make 65, and then twice 30. yeares for two generations more, as for Nimrod, Sheba and Dedan with others, to beget their sonnes; and that a third generation might growe vp, which makes in all 125, yeares, there will then remaine fixe yeares to have beene spent in trau illing from the East, ere they arrived in Shinar in the yeare after the floud 121. And so the followers of Wimrod might bee of sufficient multitude. But as for those which make him to have arrived at Shinaar in the yeare 101: and the confusion to haue beene at Pelegs birth, these men doe all by miracle: they beget whole Nations without the helpe of time, and build Nimrods Tower in the averand not on those low and marish groundes (which require sound foundations) in the Plaines of Shinaar. For except that huge Tower were built in a daie, there could 20 be no confusion in that yeare 101. of at Pelegs birth. And therefore it is farre more probable, that 2\immad vsurped regall authority in the 131. yeare after the floud, (according to Berofus) and that the worke of Babel lasted fourtie yeares (according to Glycas)hominibusin ea perficienda totis 40. annis incassum laborantibus : Men labou- Glycin Gen. en to Giyeas hommibusm ea perfectned tous 40, mmn months and the state it was 170, de Turis ex-ring in vaine 40, yeares to finish it. By which account it fals out, that it was 170, de Turis exveares after the floud, ere a Colonie was fent into East India; which graunted (the one 173.

being the maine body, and the other but a Troupe taken thence) it can hardly bee belieued, that Stair obates could have exceeded Semiramis in numbers : who being then Empresse of all that part of the world, gathered the most of Nations into one

†. V I4. The fourth Argum, from divers considerations in the person of No A.H.

 $\mathbf{F}_{ ext{and had}}$  lived therein the long time of 600 years, was all that space 130, years after the floud without any certaine habitation. No, it will fall out, and better agree with reason, that Nimrod was but the conducter of those people, by Noah destined 40 and appointed to fill and inhabite that middle part of the earth and the westerne world'; (which trauailes Noah put ouer to yong and able bodies) and that Noah him-felfethen couered with many yeares planted himfelfe in the same place which God had affigned him; which was where he first came downe out of the Arke from the waters: For it is written, that after Noah came downe out of the Arke he planted a vineyeard, and became a husbandman: whose businesse was to dresse and manure the earth, and not to range ouer fo many parts of the world, as from Armenia into Arabia fælix, where hee should (if the tradition be found) haueleft certaine Colonies; thence into Africa towards Triton; then into Spaine, where they fay he fetled other companies, & built Citties after the names of Noela and Noegla his fons wives : from 30 thence into Italie, where they say hee found his sonne Cham the Saturne of Agypt, who had corrupted the people and subjects of Gomer in his absence : with whom Noah (as they make the storie) had patience for three yeares; but then finding no amendment they fay hee banisht him out of Italie. These be but the fancies of Berofus Annianus, a plaine imitation of the Gracian fables. For let euery reasonable man conceine, what it was to trauaile farre in such a forrest as the World was, when after fo great a rotting of the earth by the floud the same lay wast and ouer-growne for 130. or 140. yeares, and wherein there could hardly be found either path or paffage through which men were able to creepe for woods, bushes and bryars that in those yeares were growne vp.

And there are so many reasons, prouing that Woah neuer came into the valley of Shinaar, as we need not suspect his passage into Italic or Spaine: For Noah, who was Father of all those Nations, a man reuerenced both for his authoritie, knowledge, experience and pietie, would neuer haue permitted his children and iffues to haue wndertaken that vnbeleeuing prefumptuous worke of Babel. Rather by his prefence 10 and prevalent perswasions he would have bound their hands from so vaine labours. and by the authoritie which he received euen from God himfelfe, hee would have held them in that awfull subjection, as what socuer they had vainely conceived or feared, yet they durft not have disobayed the personall commandement of him, who in the beginning had a kinde of Regal authoritie ouer his children and people. Certainely, Noah knew right well, that the former destruction of mankinde was bv themselues purchased through crueltie and disobedience; and that to distrust God, and to raife vp building against his Almightie power, was as much as in them lay, a prouocation of God to lay on them the fame, if not a more sharpe affliction. Wherefore, there is no probabilitie, that euer he came so farre West as Babylonia; but ra- 20 ther, that he fent those numbers which came into Shinaar (being the greatest troupe, because they had the greatest part of the world to plant) vnder 2 mred, or those vppon whom he vsurped. Nauclerus and Caleslinus take the testimonie of Methodius Bishop of Tire for currant, that there were three Leaders of the people after their encrease (to wit) Nimrod, Suphene, and Ioctan: of which Nimrod commaunded theiffues of Cham, Joetan of Sem, and Suphene of Japhet. This opinion I cannot judge of, although I will not doubt, but that so great a worke as the worlds plantation, could not be effected without order and conduction.

Of the Sonnes of Sem: 10ct an Hauilah, and Ophir, are especially noted to haue dwelt in the East india. The rest of Sems issues had also the Regions of Persia and 30 the other adjoyning to Indus, and held also a part of Chaldea for a time: for Abraham inhabited Vr, till hee was thence called by God; and whether they were of the Sonnes of lectan, or of all the reft a certaine number (Cham and his iffue only excepted) that Noah kept with himfelfe, it cannot be knowne. Of which plantation I shall

Now another reason which moues me to beleeue, that Woah stayed in the East far away from all those that came into Shinar, is that Moses doth not in any word make mention of Noah in all the storic of the Hebrewes, or among any of those Nations which contended with them. And Noah, being the Father of all mankinde, and the chosenseruant of God, was too principall a person, to be either forgotten or negle- 40 Red, had he not (in respect of his age and wearisome experience of the world) with drawne himfelfe, and refted a part with his best beloued, giving himfelfe to the fernice and contemplation of God and heavenly thinges, after he had directed his children to their destined portions. For hee landed in a warme and fertile soile, where hee planted his Vineyard, and dreft the earth; after which, and his thanks-giuing to God by facrifice, hee is not remembred in the Scriptures, because hee was so farre away from those Nations of which Moses wrote : which were the Hebrewes chiefly, and their enemies and borderers.

Of the senselesse opinion of ANNIVS the Commentor upon BEROSVS; who finds divers places where the Arke refled; as the Caspian and Gordiean hils which are three hundred miles a funder; and alfo some place of Scythia.

T remaineth now that we examine the Arguments and authorities of Frier An-1 nius, who in his Commentaries vpon Berofus and others, laboureth maruailously 10 to proue, that the Arke of Noah rested upon the Armenian mountaines called Caspy; which mountaines separate Armenia from the upper Media, and doe equally belong to both. And because all his Authours speake of the mountaines Gordiei, hee hath no other shift to vnite these opinions, but by vniting those farre-distant mountaines together. To effect which, he hath found no other invention, then to charge those men with errour which haue carefully ouerfeene, printed, and published Ptolomies Ptol.tab. Asia. 3. Geographic, in which they are altogether differenced. For that last edition of Mercators, fets these hils fine degrees (which makes three hundred English miles) afunder. And certainly, if we looke into those more ancient copies of Villanouanus and others, we shall finde nothing in them to helpe Annius withall: for in those the mountaines

20 Caspij stand seuen degrees to the East of the Gordies, which make 420 miles. And for those Authours by whose authoritie Annius strengtheneth himselfe. Diodorus whom he so much followeth, giveth this judgement vpon them in the like dispute. Aberrarunt vero omnes, non negligentia, sedregnorum situs ignorantia, They have allerred Diod. 1.32 (faith he) not through negligence, but through ignorance of the lituation of Kingdomes. But for an induction, to proue that the Arke of Noah flood on the mountaines of Armenia, he beginneth with the antiquitie of the Seythians: and to proue the same hee citeth Marcus Portius Cato, who anoweth that 250 yeares before Nimus, the earth cato devite. was ouerflowne with waters, oin Scythia Sagarenatum mortale genus, and that in Scy- parsprima thia Sagathe flocke of mortall men was renewed. The fame Authour also teacheth that

30 the Vmbri before remembred (who were so called, because faued from Deucalions floud) were the Sonnes of the Galli, a Nation of the Scythians. Ex hijs venisse I ANVM cum DYRIM & Gallis progenitoribus Vmbrorum; From thefe Scythians, he faith, that IANVS came with DYRIM and with the Galli the progenitours of the Vmbri; And againe, Equidem principatus originis femper Scythis tribuitur, Certainely, the Prime antiquitie of off-spring is alway given to the Scythians. And herein truly I agree with Annius, that those Regions called Scythia, and now Tartaria, and by some Writers Sarmatia Afiatica, were among the first peopled : and they held the greatest part of Asia vndertribute till Ninus time. Also Plinie calleth the Imbri which long fince inhabited Plinia call Italie, Gens antiquissma, a most ancient Nation, who descended of these Scythians. Now

40 that which Annius laboureth, is to proue that these ancient Scythians (meaning the Nephewes of Woah) did first inhabite that Region of the mountaines, on which the Arkerested; and confessing that this great ship was grounded in Armena, he faineth a nation of Seythians called Araxea, taking name of the mountaine Ararat, neare the River of Araxes. And because his Authour Cate helpeth him in part (to wit, That in Scythia mankinde was restored after the great floud, 250, yeares before Ninus) and in part vtterly destroyeth his conceit of Armenia, by adding the word Saga, as in Scythia Saga renatum mortale genus, in Scythia Saga mankinde was restored, hee therefore in the Proame of his Commentarie vpon Berofits, leaueth out the addition Berofits. of Saga altogether in the repetition of Cato his wordes, and writes homines in Scythia

50 Saluatos. For Scythia Saga or Sace, is vindoubtedly vinder the mountaines of Paropa- Pio. Afee. tal. 2. nifus, on which, or neare which it is most probable that the Arke first tooke ground; and from those East parts (according to Moses) came all those companies which ere-Eted the Tower of Babel in Shinaar or Babylonia.

But now the best authoritie which Annius hath is out of Diodorus : where he hath read, that the Soythians were originally Armenians, taking name à Soytha Regeeorum, from Scythatheir King. But (in a word) we may see his vanitie, or rather (indeede) his fallhood in citing this place. For Diodorus a most approved and diligent Authour beginneth in that place with these wordes. Fabulantur Scytha, The Scythians fable: and his Interpreter in the table of that worke giveth this title to that very Chapter. Scytharum origo & successive, fabula, The originall and successe of the Scythians, a fable. And (indeede) there needes no great disproofe hereof, since Ptolomie doth directly delineate Seythia Saga, or Sasa, and fets them in 130. degrees of longitude: and the Perlians (faith Herodotus ) call all the Seythians, Sace, which Plinie confirmeth: for in respect that these Sace (faith Plinie) are the next Scythians to the Persians, there- 10 fore they give all the reft that name. Now that any Nation in Armenia can neighbour the Persians, there is no man beleeueth. But this supposed Scythia Araxea in Armenia lyeth in 78. degrees of longitude (that is) 42. degrees distant from the Sace; and the Countrie about Araxes Ptolomie calleth Colthene and Soducene and Sacapene, without any mention of Seythia at all: and yet all those which are or were reputed Soythians, either within Imaus or without, to the number of 100. feuerall Na-Tab. Alia 7.6 3 tions are by Ptolomie precifely fet downe.

But to come to those later Authours, whereof some have written, others have Seene a great part of those North-east Regions, and searched their antiquities with great diligence : First, Marius Niger boundeth Seythia within Imaus, in this manner: 20 (for Scythia without these mountaines is also beyond our purpose.) Scythiaintra Imaum montem ea est, que proprio vocabulo Gassaria hoc tempore dicitur : ab Occasu Sarmatia Asiatica: ab Oriente Imao monte : à Septentrione terra incognita : à Meridie Saccis, Sogdianis, Margianis, v/g, ostia Oxa amnis in Hyrtanum mare exeuntis; & parte iplius maris hine vfg, ad Rha fluminis offia terminatur, Scythia within the mountaine Imaus is that part of the world, which in their owne freech is at this time called Gaffaria; and the fame is bounded on the West side by Sarmatia Asiatica, (or of Asia) on the East by the Imaan mountaines : on the North by unknowne lands : on the South by the Sacce (which are the Sace) the Sordiani, and the Margiani, to the mouth of Oxus, falling into the Hyrcan Sea, and by a Rha now Wolga. Part of the same Sea as farre as the mouth of Rha.

Com. 2 Afic.

Now if Niger lets all Sarmatia Afiatica, to the West of Scythia, then Sarmatia (qua magna lane rezio est, & que innumer as nationes complectitur, Which is a great Region, comprehending innumerable Nations, (faith Niger, much of it being betweene Seythia and Armenia, doth fufficiently warrant vs, that Armenia can be no part of Scythia; and to make it more plaine, he diffeuereth Sarmatia it felfe from any part of Armenia, by the Regions of Colchis, Iberia, Albania, which hee leaueth on the right hand of Sarmatia, and yet makes Sarmatia but the West bound of Soythia.

Ad meridiem flexo Boffboro pars (eptentrio-nalis ponte Euxini viā, in oftin Coracis Runiy: unde relichs à Colchis Iberis, maris prouenit. Spec.bifl.l.30.

And for Paulus Venetius, he hath not a word of Armenia among the Tartarian, or Scythian Nations; neither doth his fellow Frier Iohn Plancarpio (cited by Vincentius in his description of Seythia) make any mention of Armenia; neither doth Haytonus 40 an Armenian borne, of the bloud of those Kings; (though afterward a Monke) euer acknowledge himselfe for a Tartarian, or of the Scythian races descended : though he write that storic at large, gathered by Nicholaus Saleuni, and (by the commandement of Pope Clement the fifth) in the yeare 1307. published. Neither doth Mathias a Michou (a Canon of Cracouia in Polonia) a Sarmatian borne, and that trauailed a great part of Sarmatia Afiatica, finde Armenia any way within the compasse of Tartaria, Seythia, or Sarmatia; and yet no man (whose trauailes are extant) hathobserued so much of those Regions as he hath done: prouing and disprouing many thinges, heretofore subject to dispute. And among others hee burieth that ancient and received opinion. That out of the mountaines Riphai, and 50 Hyperborei in Seythia, fpring the Rivers of Tanais or Don, Volga or Edel; prouing by vnanswerable experience, that there are no such mountaines in rerum natura; and (indeede) the heads and fountaines of those famous Rivers, are now by the trade of :Musconia knowne to every Merchant, and that they arise out of Lakes, low, wooddie, and marish grounds. The River of Tanois or Don, ariseth to the South of the Cittie Tulla some twentie English miles, out of a Lake called Iwanowesero in the great wood Okenitzkilies or Iepiphanolies, Volga, which Ptolomie cals Rha, and the Tartars call Edel, rifeth out of a Lake called Fronow, in the great wood Vodkonzki: from which Lake the two other famous Rivers flow of Borysthenes (now Nyeper) and Defina or Signer Rivers Dividna. And this learned Polonian doth in this fort bound the European Sarmatia. In Sarmatia Europiana, &c. are the Regions of Russians, Lithuanians, Muscoujans, and those adiovning, bounded on the West by the River of Vista (the name perchance Crisens called misprinted Vissa for Vistula, a River which parts Germanie and Sarmatia) and for the this River 11-10 East border he nameth Tanais or Don. Sarmatia Asiatica he cutteth from Europe by [121,Niger Drathe same River of Tanais and the Caspian Sea, to with-hold it from stretching farther Pom. Mela, Vi-East: this Asian Sarmatia being part of that Soythia which Ptolomie calleth Soythia India & Clin.

intra Imaum montem, Scythia within the mountaine Imaus. And the same Mathias Michon farther affirmeth, that the Seythians (which Frier Annius would make Armenians) came not into Sarmatia, Aliatica it felfe aboue three hundred and a few odde veares before his owne time : thefe be his wordes. Conflat camefie gentein nouam e aduentitiam à partibus Orientis, (mutatis sedibus), paulo plus abbine trecen is annis . Asia Sarmatiam ingressam, It is manifest (faith he, speaking of the Seythian Nation) that this is a late planted Nation, come from the coasis of the East : from whence they entredinto A-20 fia, and gat new feates a little more then three hundred yeares fince. For (indeede) before that time the Gothes or Pouloci inhabited Sarmatia Afiatica. And this Mathias lived in the yeare 1511 and this his discourse of Sarmatia was printed at Augustain the year 1506. as Buch olzerus in his Chronologie witneffeth. Now these Seythians (faith he) came from the East, for in the East it was that the Arke of Noah rested; and the Sevthe Sace were those people which lived at the North foote of those mountaines of Taurus or Ararat, where they encounter or beginne to mixe themselves with the great Imais. And were there no other testimonie then the generall description of the earth now extant, and the witnesse of Ptolomie, it is plaine, that betweene all parts of Armenia and Scythia, there are not only those three Regions of Colchis, Ibe-30 ria, and Albania, but the Caspian Sea : on the East shore of which Sea, but not on the West, or on that part which any way toucheth Armenia, there are (indeede) a Nation of Scythians (called Ariace) betweene Inxartus and Inctus; but what are these Serthians to any Ariaca, or Soythia Araxea which Annius placeth in Armenia, more then the Seythians of Europe?

t. VIII.

The fift argument, The Vine must grow naturally neare the place where the Arke rested.

TO this if we adde the confideration of this part of the Text, That No A H plan- Gomg. 20, ted a Vineyard, we shall finde that the fruit of the Vine or Raysin diel not grow naturally in that part of Armenia, where this resting of the Arke was supposed: for if the Vine was a stranger in Italie and France, and brought from other Countries thither, it is not probable that it grew naturally in Armenia, being a farre colder Countrie. For Tyrrhenus first brought Vines into France, and Saturnus into Latium : yea Servius Encid, at fuch time as Brennus and the Gaules invaded Italie, there were few or no Vines in Entropus, France. For (faith Plutarch in the life of Camillus) the Gaules remained betweene the Pyrensi and the Alpes, neare vnto the Senones, where they continued a long time, vn-50 till they drunke Wine, which was first brought them out of Italie; and after they tafted thereof they hafted to inhabite that Countrie, which brought forth fuch pleasant fruit: so as it appeared, that the Plant of the Vine was not naturall in France, but from Italie brought thither; as by Saturne from elsewhere into Italio.

Now it is manifest that Woah trauailed not farre to seeke out the Vine. For the plantation thereof is remembred, before there was any counfaile how to dispose of the world among his children; and the first thing he did was to till the ground, and to plant a Vineyard, after his facrifice and thanks-giuing to God; and wherefocuer the Arke rested, there did the Vine grow naturally. From whence it doth no where appeare that he trauailed farre; for the Scriptures teach vs, that he was a Hulbandman, and not a Wanderer.

Answere to an objection out of the wordes of the Text. The Lord scattered them from thence upon the face of the whole earth.

No that all the children of Noah came together into Shinar, it doth not appeare, fauing that it may be inferred out of these wordes (from thence) because it is written : So the Lord feattered them from thence upon all the earth; which hath no other sense, but that the Lord scattered them (to wit) those that built this Tower: for those were from thence dispersed into all the regions of the North and South, and to the Westward. And by these wordes of Sybilla (as they are converted) it seemeth that all came not together into Shinaar, for they have this limitation. 20 Ouidam eorum turrem adificarunt altisimam, quasi per exm calum essent ascensuri, Certaine of them built a most high Tower, as if they meant thereby to have scaled the heavens.

An answere to the objection from the name of Ararat, taken for Armenia : and the heighth of the hilles there.

D Vt before I conclude this part, it is necessarie to see and consider, what part of D Scripture, and what reason may be found out to make it true or probable, that 30 the Arke of Noah was forfaken by the waters on the mountaines of Armenia. For the Text hath only these wordes. The Arke rested on (or vpon) the mountaines of Ararat or Armenia, faith the marginall note of Geneua, the Chaldean Paraphrast cals it Kardu; of which the highest bath the name of Lubar, saith Epiphanius. Now this Ararat (which the Septuagint doe not convert at all, but keepe the fame word) is taken to be a mountaine of Armenia, because Armenia it selfe had anciently that name : fo as first out of the name, and secondly out of the heighth (which they suppose exceeded all other) is the opinion taken, That the Arke first sate thereon.

But these suppositions have no foundation: for neither is Ararat of Armenia allone, neither is any part, or any of those mountaines of equal stature to many other 40 mountaines of the world; yet indeede it doth not follow, that the Arke found the highest mountaine of all other to rest on : for the Plaines were also vncouered, before Noah came out of the Arke. Now if there were any agreement among Writers of this Ararat, and that they did not differ altogether therein, wee might give more credit to the conceit. For in the bookes of the Sybils it is written, that the mountaines of Ararat are in Phrygia, vpon which it was supposed that the Arke stayed after the floud. And the better to particularize the place and seate of these mountaines, and to proue them in Phrygia, and not Armenia, they are placed where the Cittie of Caelenes was afterward built. Likewise in the same description finee maketh mention of Marsyas, a River which runneth through part of Phrygia, 50 and afterward ioyneth it selfe with the River Meander, which is farre from the Gordinan mountaines in Armenia. Wee may also finde a great mistaking in Iosephus, (though out of Berofus, who is in effect the Father of this opinion) that Io-Sephus sets Ararat betweene Armenia and Parthia toward Adiabene, and affirmeth affirmeth withall, that in the Prouince of Caron by others Kairos and Arnos, fo called byreason that the waters have from thence no descent, nor iffue out, the people vaunt that they had in those dayes referred some peeces of Noahs Arke. But Parthia toucheth no where vpon Armenia, for Armenia bordereth Adiabene, a Pronince of Affria: fo that all Media and a part of Affria is betweene Parthia and Armenia. Now whereas the discoucrie of the mountaines Cordiei was first borrowed out of Berofus by Iosephus; yet the Text which Iosephus citeth out of Berofus, differs farre from the wordes of that Berofus, which wandereth vp and downe in these dayes, set out by Annius. For Berosus cited by Josephus hath these wordes, 10 Fertur & nauigy huius pars in Armenia, apud montem Cordiscorum [uperesse, & quos dam bitumen inde abrasum secum reportare, quo vice amuleti loci hunus homines vii solent. (which is) It is reported also that a part of this ship is yet remaining in Armenia upon the Cordinan mountaines; and that divers doe scrape from it the bitumen or pitch, and carrying it with them, they we it in steade of an amulet. But Annius his Edition of the fragment of Berofus vieth these wordes. Nam eleuata ab aquis in Gordiaimontis vertice quieuit, cuius adhuc dicitur aliqua pars esse, & homines ex illa bitumen tollere quo maxime vtuntur ad expiationem. For the whole Arke being lifted up by the waters, rested on the top of the Gordiaan mountaines, of which it is reported that some parts remaine, and that men doe carry thence of the bitumen to purge by facrifice therewith foas in thefe two Texts 20 (besides the difference of wordes) the name is diversly written. The ancient Berosus writes Cordiai with a (C) and the Fragment Gordiai with a (G:) the one that the Bitumen is vsed for a preservative against poyson or inchantment; the other in sacrifice; And if it be faid that they agree in the generall, yet it is reported by neither from any certaine knowledge, nor from any approued Authour: for one of them yfeth the word (fertur) the other (dicitur) the one, that foit is reported, the other. that foit is faid; and both but by hearefay; and therefore of no authoritie nor credit. For common bruit is so infamous an Historian, as wise men neither report after it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it. Furthermore, these mountaines which Ptolomie cals Gordiei, are not those moun-30 taines which himselfe giueth to Armenia, but he calleth the mountaines of Armenia Molchici. These be his owne words: Montes Armenia nominantur ij, qui Moschici ap- Pio Afictib, pellantur, qui protenduntur v [q, ad superiacentem partem Ponti Cappadocum ; & mons qui Paryardes dicitur, The mountaines of Armenia are they which are called Moschici, which stretchalong to the higher part of Pontus of the Cappadocians : also the hill which is called Paryardes; which mountaines Plinie calleth Pariedri; and both which lye to the Plin 16.6.6 North of Gordiei of Baris, in 43, and 44, and a halfe; and the Gordiean mountaines in 39. and a halfe: from the Northermost of which did the Georgians take their names, who were first Gordians and then Georgians, who amidst all the strength of the greatest Infidels of Persia and Turkie; doe still remaine Christians. Concerning 40 the other suppositions, that the mountaines of Gordiai, otherwise Baris Kardu or Lubar, (which Ptolomie calleth Togordiaion) are the highest of the world, the same is ab-

Againe, the mountaine of Antandrus in Mysia, not farre from Ida, whence the River Scamandrus floweth, whichrunneth through Troy, is also of a farre more admiration then any in Armenia, and may bee feene from Conftantinople. There are also in Mauritania neare the Sea, the famous mountaines of Atlas, of which Herodotus. Extat in hoc mari Mons, cui nomen Atlas. ita sablimis esse dicitur, vt ad illius verticem oculi mortalium peruenire non possint, Vpon this coast there is a mountaine called Atlas, whose heighth is said to be such, as the eye of no Arifot Met. cor. mortall man can different the top thereof. And if we may believe Ariflotle, then are all these inscriour to Cancalus, which hee maketh the most notorious both for breadth 10 and heighth. Caucasus mons omnium maximus, qui assiuum ad ortum sunt, acumine atá, latitudine, cuius iuga à Sole radiantur v (q, ad conticinium ab ortu : & iterum ab occafu, Caucasus (saith Aristotle) is the treatest mountaine both for breadth and heighth of all those in the North-east, whose tops are lightned by the Sunne beames, of and conticinium (which is faith Macrobius) betweene the first crowing after midnight and the breake of day : Others affirme that the top of this mountaine holds the Sunne beames when it is darke in the Valley; but I cannot believe either; for the highest mountaine of the world knowne is that of Tenerife in the Canaria: which although it hath nothing to the Westward of it for 1000. leagues together but the Ocean Sca, yet doth it not enioy the Sunnes companie at any fuch late houres. Befides, these mountaines which A- 20 ristotle calleth Cancasi, are those which separate Colchis from Iberia; though (indeed) Caucasus doth divide both Colchis, Iberia, and Albania, from Sarmatia: for heacknowledgeth that the River of Phasis riseth in the same mountaine, which himselfe calleth Caucasus, and that Phasis springeth from those hilles which sunder Colchis from Iberia, falling afterward into Euxinus: which River (it is manifest) yeeldeth it selfe to the Sea two degrees to the North of Trapezas (now Trabefunda) howfocuer Mercator bring it from Peryardes.

Of divers incongruities, if in this storie we should take Ararat for Armenia.

CO as it doth first appeare, that there is no certainetic what mountaine Ararat Dwas: for the bookes of the Sybils set it in Phrygia: and Berosus in Armenia: and as for Berofus authoritie, those men haue great want of proofes that borrow from

Secondly, that Baris was the highest hill, and therefore most likely that the Arke grounded thereon, the affertion and supposition have equall credit: for there are many hils which exceede all those of Armenia; and if they did not, yet it doth not 40 follow (as is before written) that the Arke should fit on the highest.

Thirdly, it cannot be proued that there is any fuch Hill in Armenia, or in rerum natura, as Baris: for Baris (faith Hierome) fignifieth high Towers: and so may all high hils be called indifferently; and therefore wee may better give the name of Baristo the hils of Caucasus (out of which Indus riseth) then to any hils of Armenia. For those of Caucafus in the East, are undoubtedly the highest of Asia.

Fourthly, the Authours themselves doe not agree in what Region the mountaines Gordiai stand: for Ptolomie distinguisheth the mountaines of Armenia from the Gordinan, and calleth those of Armenia Moschici and Paryardes, as aforesaid. Now Paryardes is seated neare the middle of Armenia, out of which on the West sideri- 54 feth Euphrates, and out of the East fide Araxis : and the mountaines Moschiei are those hils which distoyne Colchis, Iberia, and Albania (now the Countrie of the Georgians) from Armenia. t. XIII.

Of the contrarie situation of Armenia to the place noted in the Text: and that it is no maruaile that the same ledge of hils running from Armenia to India should keepe the same name all along : and even in India be : called Ararat

Astly, we must blow up this mountaine Ararat it selfe, or else wee must digge it L downe, and carrie it out of Armenia; or finde it elfewhere and in a warmer counto trie, and (withall) fet it East from Shinaar: or else wee shall wound the truth it selfe. with the weapons of our owne vaine imaginations.

Therefore to make the mistaking open to every eye, weemust understand, that Ararat (named by Mofes) is not any one hill, fo called, no more then any one hill among those mountaines which divide Italie from France is called the Alpes: or any one among those which part France from Spaine is the Pyrenian; but as these being continuations of many hils keepe one name in diuers Countries : fo all that long ledge of mountaines, which Plinie calleth by one name Taurus, and Ptolomic both Plinie in his Taurus, Miphates, Coatras, Coronus, Sariphi, vntill they encounter and croffe the description of mountaines of the great Imaus, are of one generall name, and are called the moun-20 taines of Ararat or Armenia, because from thence or thereabout they seeme to arise,

So all these mountaines of Hyrcania, Armenia, Coraxis, Caspij, Moschici, Amazonici, Heniochi, Scythici, (thus diverfly called by Plinie and others) Ptolomie cals by one name Caucasus, lying between the Seas Caspium and Euxinus: as all those mountaines which cut a funder America, cuen from the new Kingdome of Granado, to the streight of Magellan, are by one name called Andes. And as these mountaines of Ararat runne East and West: so doe those maruailous mountaines of Imaus stretch themselves North and South; and being of like extent well neare are called by the name of Imaus, euen as Plinie calleth these former hils Taurus, and Moses the hils of Ararat. The. reason of seuerall names given by Ptolomie was thereby the better to distinguish the 20 great Regions and Kingdomes, which these great mountaines bound and diffeuer = as Armenia, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Media, Susiana, Persia, Parthia, Caramania, Aria, Margiana, Bactria, Sogdiana, and Paropanifus: having all these Kingdomes either on the North or South fide of them. For all the mountaines of Asia (both the leffe and the greater) have three generall names, (to wit) Taurus, Imaus, and Caucafus: and they receive other titles, as they sever and divide particular places and regions. For these mountaines which sunder Cilicia from the rest of Asia the lesse on the North fide, are called Taurus; and those mountaines which part it from Comagena (a Prouince of Syria) are called Amanus: the mountaines called Taurus running East and West, as Imaus doth North and South. Through Taurus the River of Euphrates for-40 ceth her paffage, leaving the name of Amanus to the mountaines on her West bankes and on her East fide the mountaines are sometimes knowne by the name of Taurus, (as in Ptolomies three tables of Asia) and sometimes Niphates: (as in the fourth) retaining that vncertaine appellation fo long as they bound Armenia from Mesopotamia: and after the River of Treris cutteth them asunder, they then take the name of Niphates altogether, vntill they separate Affria and Media; but then they call themselues Coatras, though betweene the vpper and nether Media, they doe not appeare, but altogether discontinue. For at Mazada in Media they are not found, but runne through the Easterne Media by peeces: in the middle of which Region they call themselines Orantes, and towards the East part Coronus; out of the Southerne 50 part whereof the River of Bagradus rifeth, which divideth the ancient Persia from Caramania: and then continuing their course Eastward by the name of Coronus, they giue to the Parthians and Hyreanians their proper Countries. This done, they change themselues into the mountaines of Sariphi, out of which riseth the River Margus, afterward yeelding her felfe to Oxus: (now Abia) and drawing now nearetheir waies end, they first make themselues the South border of Bactria, and are then honoured with the title of Paropanisus; and lastly of Cancali, euen where the famous River of Indus with his principal companions Hydaspis and Zaradrus spring forth, and take beginning. And here doe these mountaines build themselues exceeding high, to equall the strong hils called Imaus of Scythia, which encounter each other in 35. 36. and 37.degrees of latitude, and in 140. of longitude: of the which the West parts are now called Delanguer, and the rest Nagracot; and these mountaines in this place onely are properly called Caucasi (saith Ptolomie) that is, betweene Paroponisus and Imaus: and improperly, betweene the two Seas of Caspium and Pontus.

of the best vine naturally growing on the South side of the mountaines Caucast and toward the East Indies : and of other excellencies of the Soile.

N Ow in this part of the world it is, where the mountaine and River <code>Ianus</code>, and the mountaine Nyfeus ( fo called of <code>Bacehus</code> Nifeus or Nos) are found: and on these highest mountaines of that part of the world did Goropius Becanus conceiue 29 that the Arke of Noah grounded after the floud: of all his conjectures the most probable, and by best reason approued. In his Indoscrethica hee hath many good arguments, though mixt with other fantasticall opinions of this subject. And as the same Becanus also noteth; that as in this part of the world are found the best Vines: so it is as true, that in the same line, and in 34. 35. and 36. degrees of Septentrional latitude are the most delicate Wines of the world, namely, in Iudaa, Candia, and other parts of Greece: and likewise in this Region of Margiana, and under these mountaines, Strabo affirmeth that the most excellent Vines of the world are found; the clusters of grapes containing two cubits of length: and it is the more probable, because this place agreeth in climate with that part of Palestina, where the searchers of 30 the land by Moses direction found bunches of equall bignesse at Escol.

The fruitfulneffe of this place (to wit) on the South bottome of these hils, Curtins witneffeth. For in Marginan neare the mountaine of Meros did Alexander feath himselfe and his Armie ten dayes together, finding therein the most delicate wine of all other.

t. X V.

The conclusion, with a briefe repeating of diners chiefe points.

A Nd therefore to conclude this opinion of Ararat, it is true, that those mountaines doe also trauerse Armenia: yea, and Armenia it selfe sometime is knowne by the name of Ararat. But as Plinie giveth to this ledge of high hilles, even from Cilicia to Paroponifus and Caucafus, the name of Taurus : and as the hils of France and Germanie are called the Alpes: and all betweene France and Spaine the Pyrenes: and in America the continuation of hils for 3000. miles together, the Andes: fo was Ararat the generall name which Moses gave them; the diversitie of appellations no otherwife growing, then by their dividing and bordering divers Regions and divers Countries. For in the like case doe we call the Sea, which entreth by Gibraltar, the 50 Mediterran and inland Sea; and yet where it washeth the coasts of Carthage, and ouer against it, it is called Tyrrhenum: betweene Italic and Greece, Ionium: from Venice to Durazzo Adriaticum: betweene Athens and Asia Ageum: betweene Sestus and Abydus Hellesport : and after ward Pontus , Propontis , and Bosphorus . And as in

For a final end of this question we must appeale to that Judge which cannot erre-

these. so is the Ocean to the North-east part of Scotland called Deucaledonroum: and on this fide, the Brittan Sea: to the East, the Germane and Baltick, and then euen to the word of truth, which in this place is to be taken and followed according to the plaine sense : seeing it can admit neither distinction, nor other construction then the wordes beare literally, because they are vsed to the very same plaine purpose of a description, and the making of a true and precise difference of places. Surely where the sense is plaine, (and being so understood, it bringeth with it no subseto quent inconvenience or contrarietie) we ought to be warie, how we fancie to our felues any new or ftrange exposition; and (withall) to resolue our selues, that euerie word (as aforefaid) hath his waight in Gods Booke. And therefore wee must respect and reuerence the testimonies of the Scriptures throughout, in such fort as St. Augustine hath taught vs touching the Gospell of Christ Iesus ( which is ) Neguis aliter accipiat, quod narrantibus di (cipalis Christi) in Eu angelio legerit, quam si ipsam manum Dei, quam in proprio corpore gestabat, conspexerit. That no man otherwise take or onderstand that which hee readeth in the Gospell, (the Disciples of Christ having written it) then if he had seene the verie hand of the Lord, which hee bare in his owne bodie, setting it

20 The wordesthen of Moses which end this dispute are these. And as they went Govern V. to from the East they found a Plaine in the land of Shinaar, and there they abode, which proueth without controuerfie, that Nimord and all with him came from the Eaftingo Shinaar; and therefore the Arke of Noah rested and tooke land to the Eastward thereof. For wee must remember, that in all places wherefocuer Moses maketh a difference of Countries, hee alwayes precifely nameth toward what quarters of the world the same were feated: as where he teacheth the plantation of ToEtan he nameth Sephar, a mount in the East: where hee remembreth Cains departure from the presence of God, he addeth. And Cain dwelt in the land of Nod towardes the East- Gen. 10,30; fide of Eden: And when he describeth the Tents and Habitations of Abrahamaf- Gen.4.16.

30 ter he departed from Sechem, he vied these wordes. Afterwardes remoduing thence Guilas. unto amountaine Eastward from Bethel, he pitched his Tentes : having Bethel on the Westfide, and Hai on the East: and afterwarde in the ninth verse of the same chapter it is written. And Abraham went forth iournying towardes the South: also when Ezechiel Excels 28.6. prophecied of Gog and Magog, hee sheweth that these nations of Togorma were of the North quarters: and of the Queene of Saba it is written, that shee came from the Mat. 12.42; South to vifite SALOMON: And the Magi (or wifemen) came out of the East to offer pre- Mat. 2.V.14 fents unto Christ. And that all Regions, and these travailes were precisely set downe vpon the points of the Compasse and quarters of the World, it is most manifest:

for Eden was due East from Judaa, Saba South from Hierusalem: the way from An Bethel to Agypt directly South; and the Calefyrians, the Tubalines and Magogians inhabited the Regions directly North from Palastina : and so of the rest. But Armenia answereth not to this description of Shinaar by Moses. For to come out of Armenia, and to arrive in that valley of Babylonia, is not a journying from the East, nor so neare vnto the East as the North: for Armenia is to the West of the North it selfe; and we must not say of Moses ( whose handes the holy Ghost directed ) that hee erred tota calo, and that he knew not East from West. For the body of Armenia standeth in fortie three degrees Septentrionall, and the North part thereof in fortie fine; and those Gordiean mountaines, whereon it was supposed that the Arke rested, standing in fortic one. But Babylonia, and the valley of Shinaar are fituated in thirtie five, 50 and for the Longitude (which maketh the difference betweene East and West) the Gordinan mountaines stand in 75 degrees, and the valley of Shinaar in 79. and 80. And therefore Armenia lieth from Shinaar Northwest ninetic five degrees from the East; and if Armenia had beene but North, yet it had differed from the East one whole quarter of the compasse. But Gregoric and Hierome warne vs, In ferrpturis ne

minuna disferentia omitti debet : nam finguli fermones , fyllabe , apices, et puneta in diuma minima aujer entia vimitis acver in am junguit jet mones, 1 junas, apiets, et puncia matuma fortplure plema funt fensibus, in the scriptures the least difference may not be comitted; for enery fpeech, flable, note, or accent, and point in dinine scriptures are replenished with their meanings. And therefore seeing Mojes teacheth vs that the children of Nosh came meanings. And therefore reeing suger teachers value the children of 1 mar and for freak by from the Eaft, we may not beleeue Writers (of little authoritie) who also speake by hearefay and by report, of fertur, o vi dietur, as Berofus and Nicolaus Damafeenus, determining herein without any examination of the Text, at all aduenture. But this is infallibly true, that Shinaar lyeth West from the place where the Arkeof Noah rested after the floud; and therefore it first found ground in the East, from Whence came the first knowledge of all thinges. The East parts were first civill, 10 whence came the first knowledge of all thinges. The East parts were first civill, 10 which had Noash himselfe for an instructer; and directly East from Spinsar in the which garden of 35, are the greatest grapes and the best Wine. The great Armics all fame degree of 35, are the greatest grapes and the best Wine. fo, which our topped in number those Millions of Semiramic, proue that those parts to, which our copped in number those various of seminants, so the that there pairs were first planted: And whereas the other opinion hath neither Scripture nor reason sufficient: for my self- I build on his wordes who in plaine termes hath told vs. that the Sonnes of Nouh came out of the East into Shinaar, and there they abode. And therefore did the Arkerest on those Easterne mountaines, called by one generall name Taurus, and by Mofes the mountaines of Ararat, and not on those mountaines of the North-well, as Berglin first fained, whom most part of the Writers haue followed therein. It was, I say, in the plentifull warme East where Noah rested, 20 where he planted the Vine, where heetilled the ground and lived thereon. # CHAP. VIII.

Of the first planting of Nations after the floud; and of the Sonnes of NOAH, SEM, HAM, and IA-PHET, by whom the earth was repeopled.

Whether SHEM and HAM were elder then IAPHET.

F these Sonnes of Noah, which was the eldest there is question made. St. Augustine esteemed Shem for August. de cinie. the eldest, Ham for the second, and Japhet for the yon- Della 6.0.3. geft : and herein the opinions of Writers are diucrs. But this we finde enery where in the Scriptures, and especially in Moses, that there was neuerany respect giuen to the eldest in yeares, but in vertue, as by the examples of Henoch, Abraham, Iacob, and Danid, is made manifest. In a few wordes, this is the ground of the controuerlie? The Latine translation, and so the

Geneua, hath converted this Scripture of Genelis the 10.2.21. in these wordes. Vnto SHEM also the Father of all the Sonnes of HEBER. and elder brother of IAPHET, were children borne. But Iunius agreeing with the Septuagint, placeth the same wordes in this manner. To SHEM also the Father of all the 20 Sonnes of HEBER, and brother of IAPHET, the eldest some were children borne: So the transposition of the word (elder) made this difference. For if the word (elder) had followed after Japhet, as it is in the vulgar translation placed before it, then had it beene as plaine for Iaphet, as it is by these translations for Shem. Now (the matter being otherwise indifferent) seeing Gods bleffings are not tyed to first and last in bloud, but to the eldest in pietie, yet the arguments are stronger for Iaphet then for Shem. And where the Scriptures are plainely understood without any danger or inconuenience, it feemeth strange why any man of judgement should make valuation of coniccturall arguments, or mens opinions. For it appeareth that Noah in the fine hundreth yeare of his life, begat the first of his three Sonnes, Shem, Ham, and Iaphet: 40 and in the fixe hundreth yeare (to wit) the hundreth yeare following, came thegenerall floud; two yeares after which shem begat Arphasal, which was in the yeare 602. of Noah life, and in the yeare of shem life one hundred: so as shem was but 100. yeares old, two yeares after the floud: and Noah begat his first borne being 500. yeares old; and therefore, were shem the elder, he had then beene a hundred yeares old at the floud, and in the fixe hundreth yeare of Noahs life, and not two yeares after. Which feeing the Scripture before remembred hath denyed him, and that it is also written. Then No AH awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger sonne had Gonal was done unto him (to wit) HAM; of necessitie the first place doth belong to Taphet. This younger sonne so converted by the vulgar and Geneua, Junius turnes it filius minimus, 30 his youngest some; but St. Chrysostome takes it otherwise, and findes Cham to be the middle or second brother, and Imphet the youngest sonne of all: which Cham for his disobedience and the contempt of his Father, (whose nakednesse hee derided) was difinherited, and loft the preheminencie of his birth, as Efav and Reuben did. Pere-rus conceiveth that Ham was called the younger in respect of Shem the eldest, but augweth withall, that the Hebrew hath not that precise difference of rounger and youngelt, because it wanteth the comparative degree. It is true that Show himselfe was alwaies named in the first place, yet whereas in the first Verse of the tenth chanter of Genesis, Shem is accounted before Japhet : in the second Verse Moles leaveth to beginne with the iffue by Shem, and reciteth the children of Japhet first. So the first place was given to Shem for his election and benediction, and for this waightie refoest, that the Hebrew Nation, Abraham, the Prophets, David; and Christ our Sauiour were descended of him. And therefore, whether wee shall follow the Vulgar Pagninus, and the Geneua, who agree in this conversion, SHEM frater I APHET major: or with the Septuagint, Junius, and Tremelius, SHEM fratri IAPHET majoris: 10 OF with Pererius, SHEM frater IAPHET ille magnus: inferring that Shem was the great and famous brother of Iaphet, let the Reader judge. But for ought that I have seene to the contrarie, it appeareth to me that saphet was the eldest. For where Perevius qualifieth the strength of the former argument, That Shems age at the time of the floud did not agree with his eldership (with a supposition that the Scriptures tooke no account of smaller numbers) I doe not finde in the Scriptures any such Gen. 1. v. 10. neglect at all: for it is written, that SHEM was an hundred yeares old, and begat AR-PHAXAD two yeares after the floud; and againe in the 12. Verse. So SHELA lived after he begat EBAR, foure hundred and three yeares, &c. fo as the number of two yeares, of three yeares, of flue yeares, and afterward of two yeares were alwaies 20 precifely accounted.

ð. I I.

Of divers things that in all reason are to be presumed, touching the first planting of the world, as that all Histories must yeeld to Moses: that the world was not planted all at once, nor without great direction : and that the knowne great Lordes of the first ages were of the issue of HAM.

Vt let vs goe vnto the worlds plantation after the floud, which being rightly understood, we shall finde that many Nations have supposed or fained themselues those Ancestors and Fathers, which neuer faw or approached the bounds of their countries, and of whom they are by no way or branch descended. For it is plaine in the Scriptures howe the Sonnes and iffues of Noah were distributed, and what Regions were first planted by them, from whence by degrees the rest of the world was also peopled. And if amy prophane Authour may receive allowance herein, the same must bee with this caution, That they take their beginning where the Scriptures end. For so farre as the storie of Nations is therein handled, wee must know that both the truth and an- 40 tiquitie of the bookes of God finde no companions equall, either in age or authoritie. All record, memorie, and testimonic of antiquitie whatsoeuer, which hath come to the knowledge of men, the same hath beene borrowed thence, and therefore later then it, as all carefull observers of time have noted; among which thus writeth Eusebius in the Proceme of his Chronologie. Moses is found more ancient then all those whom the Gracians make most ancient, as Homer, Heston, and the Troian warre; and farre before HERCYLES, Mysaevs, LINYS, CHIRON, ORPHEVS, CASTOR, POLLYX, ÆSCVLAPIVS, BACCHUS, MERCURIUS, and APOLLO, and the rest of the Gods of the Nations, their ceremonies, or holy rites, or Prophets: and before all the deedes of IVPITER, whom the Greekes have feated in the toppe and highest Turret of their Divinitie.

For of the three Iupiters remembred by Cicero, the ancientest was the sonne of Æther, whose three sonnes begotten on Proserpina, were borne at Athens, of which Cccrops was the first King ; and in the end of Cecrops time did Atofes bring the children of Ifrael out of Egypt. Eduxit Mos Es populum Deiex Egypto nouissimo tempore CECROPIS Atheniensis Regis, Moses brought the children of Israel out of A gypt, in the last dayes of CECR OFS King of the Athenians (faith St. Augustine) and yet De Chill. Del. was not Cecrops the Founder of the Cittie it felfe, but Thefeus long after him. But 118.211, because the truth hereof is diversly proved, and by many learned Authours, I will not cut a funder the purpose in hand by alleading many authorities in a needlesse question, but leaue it to the proper place.

The Sonnes of Gomer were, Танап. The Sonnes of Iaphet were, Tubal. The Sonnes of Iauan were, Dodanim.

First, we are to consider that the world after the floud was not planted by imagination, neither had the children of Noah wings, to flie from Shimar to the vttermost border of Europe, Africa, and Asia in halte, but that these children were directed by a 20 wife Father, who knew those parts of the world before the floud, to which he dispofed his children after it, and fent them not as discouerers, or at all-aduenture, but affigned and allotted to every Sonne and their iffues, their proper parts. And not to hearken to fabulous Authours, who have no other end then to flatter Princes (as Virgil did Augustus in the fiction of Aneas) or else to glorifie their owne Nations; Let vs build herein vpon the Scriptures themselues, and after them vpon reason and nature. First, therefore wee must call to minde and consider, what manner of face the earth enery where had in the 130. yeare after the great inundation, and by comparing those fruitfullest valleys with our owne barren and cold ground, informe our felues thereby, what wonderfull defarts, what inpaffable fastnesse of woods, reedes, 20 bryars, and rotten graffe, what Lakes and standing Pooles; and what marishes, Fens and bogges, all the face of the earth (excepting the mountaines) was peftered withall. For if in this our climate (where the dead and destroying winter depresset all vegetative and growing nature, for one halfe of the yeare in effect) yet in twentie or thirtie yeares these our grounds would all ouergrow and be covered (according to the nature thereof) either with woods or with other offensive thickets and bushments: much more did all forts of plants, reedes, and trees, prosper in the most fruitfull Vallies, and in the climate of a long and warme Sommer, and having withall the flart of 130. yeares, to raife themselves without controlement.

This being confidered it will appeare, that all these people which came into Shiand ouer whome Nimrod (either by order or strength tooke the dominion, did after the confusion of languages, and at such time as they grew to bee a mightie people disperse themselues into the Regions adioyning to the said vally of Shinaar; which contained the best part of Mesopotamia, Babylonia and Chaldea; and from the borders thereof in time they were propagated: fome of them towards the South, others towardes the West and North. And although there were allotted to Shem many Regions, both East and West from Shinaar, with the Dominion of Palestina, which the Canaanites first possest; yet could hee not enjoy the lot of his inheritance on the suddaine, but by time and degrees. For we find, that Abraham the true succeffor of Shem dweltin Chaldea at Vr; and from thence (called by God) he refted 50 at Charran in Melopotamia: from whence after the death of Thare he trauailed to Sichem in Palestina; and yet there had passed betweene Shem and Abraham (reckoning neither of themselues) seuen descents, before Abraham moued out of Childea: where, and in Babylonia, all those people by Nimrod commanded inhabited for many yeares, and whence Nimrod went out into Affyria, and founded Niniuie. Indeed the great Masters of Nations (as farre as wee can knowe were, in that age of the iffues of Ham; the bleffing of God given by Noah to Shem and Japhet taking leffe effect, vntill divers veeres were confumed, and vntill the time arrived, which by the wisedome of God was appointed. For of Chus, Mizraim, and Canaan came the people and Princes, which held the great Kingdomes of Babylonia, Syria, and Ægypt for many descents together.

ð. III.

Of the Iles of the Gentiles in IAPHETS portion: of BEROSVS his too feedic feating GOMER the sonne of IAPHET in Italy; and an other of IA-PHETS Sonnes T VBAL in Spaine: and of the antiquitie of Longingue Nauigation.

O beginne therefore (where Moles beginneth) with the fonnes of Jatheth, among whom the Iles of the Gentiles were divided: which diuision, as well to Japhets sonnes as to the rest which came into Shinaar, was (if the divition were made at Phalegs birth) in the yeare of the world 1757. or 1 7 5 8. and (by that account) in the yeare after the floud one hundred and one, of which question elsewhere.

Now the habitations proper to the fonnes of Japhet were the Iles of the Gentiles. which include all Europe with all the Ilands adjoyning, and compaffing it about: Europe being also taken for an Iland, both in respect that the Sea Hellesport and Ageum, Bolthorus and Euxinus cut it off from the great continent of Alia, as also because Europe it selfe is (in effect) surrounded with water, saving that it is fastned to Alia by the North, for it hath those seas before named to the East, the Mediterran to the South and Southwest, the Ocean to the West, and Brittills, Germane and Baltick Sea, with that of Glaciale to the North Northeast, and Northwest. Besides, it hath about it all the Cyclades or Ileslying betweene Greece and the leffer Afia, and the Isles of Rhodes, Cyprus, Creet or Candia, Sicilia, Corfica, Sardinia, Malta, the Isles of 30 Brittanie and Zealand, with their yong ones adjacent.

This partition and portion of Lapheth, with the part which he held in Alia, and the North, which was also very great, answereth to that bleffing of God by Noah. Dilater Deus IAPHETH, Let God firead abroad (or increase the posteritie of ) IAPHETH, and let him dwell in the tents of SHEM. For though Junius here vieth the word (alliciat) and not dilatet: and the Geneua perfuadeat; yet the Septuagint have dilatet or amplificet; and fuch was the bleffing given to our Fathers, which God promifed to Abraham and his feed for euer. And the dwelling in the Tents or Tabernacles of Shem was a bleffing by God to the posteritie of Japheth: noting not onely an enlargement of territories; but that thereby they should beemade participant of Gods Church. 40 But to come to Lublets fonnes, of whome Gomer is the eldeft. This Gomer (if wee may believe Berglus and Annius, whose authoritie the greatest number of all our late writers have followed ) did in the tenth years of Nimrods raigne depart from Babylonia, and planted Italie: which also Functius confirmeth in these words. Anno decimo NIMRODI, ere, Inthe tenth yeare of NIMRODS raigne. COMERUS GALLUS planted a Colonie in that land afterward called Italie: and in the twelfth yeare of the same NIMRODS raigne TVBAL feated himfelfe in Asturia in Spaine (now called Bifcay) which was in the 140, and in the 142, yeares after the floud, according to BEROSVS. But this opinion is very ridiculous. For before the confusion of tongues the children of Noah did not separate themselves, at least so many of them as came with Nimrod in- 50 to Shinaar. Let vs therefore confider with reason, what time the building such a Cittie and Tower required, where there was no prepared matter, nor any readie meanes to performe fuch a worke as Wimrod had creeked (and as Functius himselfe out of his Authour Berofus witneffeth,) ad altitudinem & magnitudinem montium, to the heighth and magnitude of the mountaines. Sure that both this Cittle and Tower were almost builded the Scriptures witnesse. But the Lord came downe to fee the Cittie Gracette and Tower, which the Sonnes of men builded. Let vs then but allot a time sufficient for the making of bricke to fuch a worke, of the greatest heighth (and therefore of circuit and foundation answerable) that euer was. For where the vniuerfall floud couered the highest mountaines fifteene cubits; Let vs build vs a Cittie and a Tower (faith Nimrod) whale top may reach unto the heaven : meaning, that they would raife their worke about lifteene cubits higher then the highest mountaine, otherwise they could not affure themselves from the feare of a second inundation; a great part 10 whereof was finished before it fell, and before they left the worke. They also begannethis building upon a ground, the most oppressed with waters of all the world: as by the great ruine which these waters forceably overbearing and overflowing, made in the time of the succeeding Emperours, is made manifelt, approved also by the Prophet Hieremie, speaking of Babylon in these wordes. Thou that dwellest woon many waters. It cannot be doubted but that there needed a substantial foundation, for fo high a raifed building on a mariff ground : and to which Glyens youn Genelis giueth fortic yeares. For it feemeth, that the Tower was neare finished when God ouerthrew it : it being afterward written, So the Lord feattered them from thence upon all the earth, and they left to build the Cittie. Out of which place it may bee gathered 20 (because the Tower is not then named) that they very neare had performed the worke of their supposed defence, which was the Tower: and that afterward they went on with the Cittie adioyning, wherein they inhabited. It is also to bee noted that till fuch time as this confusion seized them (whereupon the tower was throwne downe) these nations did not disperse themselves: for from thence the Lord scattered General them upon all the earth, (that was) when they perceived not one an others speech. Now to thinke that this worke in the newnesse of the world ( wanting all instruments and materials) could be performed in ten yeares; and that Tubal and Gomer in the same yeare could creepe through 2000 miles of Defart, with women, children, and cattle : let those light beleeuers, that neither tye themselves to the Srin-20 ture, norto reason, approue it, for I doe not. And if the Arke of Noah was 100. yeares in building, or but neare fuch a time, (and then) when the world had food 1556. yeares, it were more then foolishnes and madnes it selfe, to thinke that such a worke as this could be performed in ten; when the world (from the floud to the arrivall at Babel, and beginning of this building there) had but 131, yeares, and whereof they had spent some part in tranailing from the East. Againe, if all Asia set to their helping hands in the building of the Temple of Diana, and yet they con-pan fumed in that worke 400. yeares (or beit but halfe that time) and in fuch an age as when the world flourished in all forts of Artificers, and with abundant plentie of materials and carriages: This worke of the Tower of Babel could hardly (with all 40 the former wants supposed) bee erected in those few yeares remembred. And for conclusion, let all men of judgement waigh with themselves how impossible it was for a Nation or familie of men, with their wives and children, and cattle, to travaile 2000 miles through woods, bogges, and defarts, without any guide or conductor; and we shall finde it rather a worke of 100, yeares then of 100, dayes. For in the West Indies of which the Spaniards have the experience, in those places where they found neither path nor guide, they have not entred the Countrie ten miles in ten yeares. And if Nimrods people spent many yeares by the account before remembred in passing from the East-India or the higher part thereof, which standethin 115, degrees of longitude, untill they came into Shinaar which lyeth in 79. degrees (the di-50 stance between those places containing 36. degrees, which make 720, leagues, which is 2 160. miles) and did all the way keepe the mountaines and hard ground: then the difference betweene Babylon and Bifeay is much more : for the bodie of Bifcay lyethin ten degrees, and Babylon or Shinaar, (as aforefaid) in 79. fo the length of way from Shinaar to Asturia or Bifeay is 69. degrees, which make 1380. leagues, or of miles 4140. And therefore if Nimrod tooke divers yeares to find Shinaar, which was but 2160. miles : or (supposing that the Arke rested in Armenia) little aboue 400 miles: there is no cause to the contrary, but to allow as many yeares to Gomer and Tuballto trauaile 2000 miles to countries leffe knowne vnto them by farre: then the land of Shinaar was to Nimrod. For Paradyle was knowne to Noah before the floud; and fo was the Region of Eden by Moles afterward remembred:

but what hee understood of most part of the world else it is unknowne. And therefore did Annius ill aduife himfelfe to plant Gomer in Italie, and Tubal in Spaine, in the 5(4),1.66.2.8. tenth and twelfth of Nimrods raigne: Shall the earth be brought forth in one day, or shall a nation be borne at once? But it may be objected. That the Sonnes of Japheth might come by Sea, and fo faue this great trauaile through Defarts by land. But we never read of any nauigation in those dayes, nor long after. Surely he that knoweth what it is to imbarque fo great a people as we may justly suppose those conductors carried with them, will not eafily believe, that there were any veffels in those daies to transport Armies, and (withall) their cattle, by whose milke they lived and fed their children; for milke and fruit were the banquetting diffees of our forefathers. And in the eldest times, even the Kings and Fathers of nations valued themselves by the heards and numbers of their Cattle; who had flocks of sheepe, and great drougs and heards of their owne, and their owne sheep-heards and heardsmen. Now if Tubal had past by Sea from any part of Palastina, Syria, or Cilicia, hee might have made good choice within the Streights, and not have overgone Granado, Valentia, and other Provinces in that Tract: past the Streights of Gibralter, disdained all Andalusia and Portugall, with all those goodly Ports and countries; and have fought out the yron, wooddie, and barren Countrie of the world (called Bifeay) by a long and dangerous nauigation. But before the journey of the Argonauta there were scarce any vessels that durst croffe the Seas in that part of the world : and yet that which Iason had (if the tale be true) was but a Galley, and a poore one (God knowes) and perchance fuch as they vse this day in Ireland: which although it carryed but foure and fiftie passengers, yet Died. Situl. 1.4. was it farregreater then any of the former times: Erat enim antea paruarum nauicularum vsus, For in former times they wsed very small Vessels. I denie not but that the Ty- 20 to Semiramis: Archimachus to Ageon: to which invention the Erythrai are faid to have added certaine numbers of Oares: and then Aminocles the Corinthian to have increased them: the Carthaginians afterwards to have brought them to foure banks: the Quing, Remi first to have beene vsed by Nesichthon the Salaminian, with which Vessels in those parts of the world, the Romans served themselves in the Punick war. But these be perhaps but the partialities of Writers, or their ignorance. For there are that as constantly cast the denising of these Gallies on Sefestris, though Semiramis vsed them in the passage of her Armie ouer Indus in Abrahams time. So it is said, that Danaus was the first that brought a ship into Greece: and yet the Samothracians others to Neptune; Thueydides to the Corinthians. And so ignorant were the people of those ages, as the Egyptians vsed to coast the shores of the red Sea vpon raffes, deuised by King Erythrus: and in the time of the Romans, the Brittans had a kinde of

And although it cannot be denyed, when Noah by Godsinspiration was instructed 20 in fo many particulars concerning the Arke, that then many things concerning nauigation were first reuealed; yet it appeares that there was much difference be-tweene the Arke of Noah, and such ships as were for any long nauigation. Yeaancient stories shew, that it was long after these times, ere any durst presume upon any long voyages to Sea: at least with multitudes of women, and children, and cattle: as also common reason can tell vs, that even now when this Art is come to her perfection, fuch voyages are very troublesome and dangerous. So as it doth appeare, that there was not in that age of Nimred any ship, or vie of ships, fit for any long pauigation. For if Gomer and Tubal had passed themselves and their people by Sea; the exercise of nauigation would not have beene dead for so many hundred 30 yeares after. Leauing therefore the fabulous to their fables, and all men else to their fancies, who have cast Nations into Countries farre off, I know not how, I will follow herein the relation of Moles and the Prophets: to which truth there is ioyned both nature, reason, pollicie, and necessitie: and to the rest, neither probabilitie, nor possibilitie.

Ow although many learned and reuerend men haue formed (Iknow not whereby led) a plantation of the world, which also hath beene in and streeting ten a plantation tile word, which also interested in the streeting type I hope I may be excused, if I differ altogether from them in many particulars. Certainely, that great learned man of this latter age, Arias Montanus was also in some thinges much mistaken: and for tafephus, as he hath many good things, and is a guide to many errours with-all, fo was he in this plantation of the world very groffe and fabulous, whereby both Eusebius, Hierosolymitanus, Epiphanius, and others, that have taken his testimonies for 30 currant, haue beene by him farre misled. But the better to conceiue what Regions of the world Gomer the first sonne of Japhet possest, as also Tubal, it is needfull to beginne with Magog: because the Scriptures take most knowledge of Gog and Magog, which two names haue troubled many Commentators, faith Matth. Beroaldus, who hath laboured herein with great diligence, and whom (of all that euer I read) I finde most judicious in the examination of this plantation. He takes authoritie from the Prophet Exechiel chiefly, who in the 38. and 39. Chapter directeth vs, what Nations the Gomerians, Tubalines, and Togormians were, together with the Magogians : of all which Gog was Prince or chiefe Conducter in their attempts against Ifrael. For belides the portions of Europe, and the North-east parts of the greater Asia, which Japheths iffues poffelt, all Alia the leffe was peopled by them. And that those of the iffue of Japheth ( whom Ezechiel speakes of ) were seated hereabout, it may best appeare if wee confider the circumstances of the place, and the dependencie vpon the former prophecie in the 37. Chapter. For in that 37. Chapter, Ezechiel prophecieth of the vniting of the two Kingdomes of Ifrael and Inda, after their deliterie from 10

By which prophecie of Ezechiel, it appeareth, that God purposed to gather together his people, to give life to dead bones, and to rule them by one Prince. For to that purpose it is written; And DAVID my servant shall bee King over them, and they shall have one sheepe-heard, (that is ) they shall bee writed as they were in Davids time. Hereupon in the 38. Chapter Exeshiel prophecieth against those Nations, which should seeke to impeach this Vnion, and disturbe the people of Israel, whom God purposed to receive to grace, and promised to restore. And so in the same Chapter are those Nations coupled together, which infested the Ifraelites after their returne, and fought to subject them : all which were the subjects or Allies of Gog, 20 Prince of the Magogians, or Cale/grians, next bordering Palastina or the holv Land. followed also by the rest of the Nations of Asia the lesse, which lay North from Indea. The wordes of Ezechiel are these: Sanne of man fet thy face against Go G, and against the land of MAGOG, the chiefe Princes of MESECH (Or MOSOCH) and Tv-BAL: and afterward. Behold, I come against the chiefe Prince of MESHECH and TV-BAL: and in the fixth Verse; Gomer and all his bands, and the house of Togorma of the North quarters. Hercin Ezechiel having first delivered the purpose of his prophecie, teacheth what Nations they were, that fhould in vaine affaile Ifrael. He joyneth them together under their Prince Gog, and sheweth that their habitations were on the North quarters of Juda, and how feated and joyned together. Gog fignifieth 30 in the Hebrew ( faith St. Hierome ) tectum or covering of a house and Pintus vpon Executed affirmeth, that by Goe is meant Antichrist : for (faith hee) Antichristus erit Diaboli tegumentum (ub specie humana, That Antichrist shall be the covering of the Deuill under humane form. Hee addeth that Magog is as much to fay as Gog: the letter (M) being an Hebrew Præpolition, and importeth as much as of or from: so he taketh Magog for those people which follow Antichrist. So farre Pintus; at least in this not amiffe, that he expoundeth Migog not for any one person, but for a Nation, with which agreeth this observation of Beroaldus. Magog (faith he) in Hebrewis written Ham-Magog, which sheweth Magog to bee a Region or Nation : for the letter ( He ) which is vied but for an Emphasis (which the Hebrewes call Heliaiedia) is neuer ad- 40 ded to proper names of men, but often to place. So as Gog was Prince of that Nation (called either Magog, or according to others the people of Gog) also Prince of Melbech. (or Moloch) and of Tubal: as by the first Verse of the 39. Chapter is made manifest. Behold, I come against thee Goo the chiefe Prince of MESHECH and Tv-BAL. This must needes be meant by the successours of Seleucus Nicanor, who did not (as other conquering Nations) feeke to make the Jewestheir Tributaries onely, but endequoured by all meanes, and by all kinde of violence to extinguish the religion it felfe (which the Hebrewes profest) and the acknowledging of one true God : and to force them to worship and serue the mortall and rotten Gods of the Heathen; of which nothing remained but the very name, and dead Images. St. Ambrofe and Isi- 50 dore take Gog for the Nation of the Goths: belike because they inuaded Europe, and facked Rome, and many other places and Citties thereabout. Hermolaus Barbarus out of Pomp. Mela deriues the Turkes from the Soythians, effected Magogians of Gog. Mamy take Gog for the proper name of a Man: others of a Region: others for a Nation inhabiting a Region, as Iunius, who faics that Gog is the name of a Nation, denominated from him whom the Greeke stories call Gyges: who in former time hauing flaine Candaules the Lydian, gaue his owne name to that Nation, thence after called Greades: and thereof also the Greens Lake: which Lake Strate also finderb in Lydia, (of which Gyges was King) fortie furlongs from Sardis. Plinie calleth Strabolio 12: it Gygeum stagnum, Herodotus and Nicander set it about the Rivers of Hyllus, and Mander; but the difference is not great. Marius Niger maketh mention of this Gyges King of Lydia: who after hee had fubdued the Countrie about the River Rhodius which runneth into the Hellesponte, called the Promontory Trapele after his Suid col 2075 10 owne name Gyges. These opinions doe also seeme to strengthen that of Junius, For Migog faith he, is that part of Alia the leffe, which Halyattes obtained, and after him his sonne Crassis; who (as Junius further notes) having maistred all those Regions Junin, Ezech, as farre South as Libanus in that border built the Cittie Gigarta or Gogkarta ( which 38. in the Syrian fignifieth the Cittie of Gog ) feated in Calefyria, whose people were the ancient enemies of the Jewes.

Now that Aggog is found in Calefyria, Plinie affirmeth faying; Calefyria habet Bambycen, que alio nomine Hierapolis vocatur, Syris verò Magog. Calefyria hath in it Bambyce, which by another name is called Hierapolis, but of the Syrians Migor, He further telleth vs that the monstrous Idoll Atergatis, called by the Greekes Derceto, was 20 here worshipped, Lucian makes mention hereof, faving that the Cittie had anciently another name, which yet he expresseth not; forbearing perhaps the word Magog, as founding nothing elegantly in the Greeke. But if wee may believe Strabe, Strab lib 16. then was Edella in Melopotamia the fame Bambyee or Hierapolis, where the fame Idoll was worshipped. Ortelius is doubtfull whether one of these Authours did not mistake the place of this Bambyce or Hierapolis. It may well enough bee that the fame name and Religion was common to them both. Certaine it is, that both of them lay due North from Palestina, and were both subject vnto the Kings of the race of Seleucus. Now I doe not condemne the opinion of Hermolaus Barbarus following Iosephus, but grant that perhaps Magog might also bee the Father of the 30 Soythians; notwithstanding that in this place, where Gog is made the Prince of Magog, the nations of Gwlefyria and the North partes adjoyning bee meant by Magog: for by a latter plantation from these partes they might bee propagated into Scythia. Yet it is not to bee denied, that the Seythians in olde times comming out of the Northeaft wasted the better part of Anthe lesse, and possest Calefyria, where they built both Seythopolis and Hierapolis, which the Syrians call Magog. And that to this

standeth due North from Ind.ea, according to the wordes of Ezeehiel, that from the North quarters those Nations should come. For as the Kings of the South which insested the Israelites were the Ptolomies Kings of Azypt: so those of the North were the Kings of Asia and Syria, the successions of Seleneus, the succession of Alexander Macedon. Gulielmus Tyrius thinkes that this Hierapolis is that Rages, men- Lib 4, cap de tioned in the florie of Tobias, Plinie takes it not onely to have been called Bambreo belle Sacro. as we have faid, but also Edessa: not that by Euphrates; but another of the same name; now the knowne name is Allepo: for fo Bellonius expounds this Hierapolis, or Magog. This Cittie had the title of facred as the facred Cittie, ( for fo the word Hierapolis fignifieth) yet was it a place of most detested Idolatrie; and wherein was worlhipped the Idoll of the Mermaide Atergatis, or Attraitis, according to Plinie,

If then we conferre the wordes of Ezechiel in the third verse of the thirty eight 50 chapter, wherein he joyneth together Gog Mefech, and Tubal: and withall remember that Hierapolis was the Cittie of Magog, which also is seated directly North from Index: with whome also Ezechiel coupleth Gomer, and all his bandes of the North quarters; we may (as I conceiue) fafely conclude, that these followers and vasfals of Gog (which were Northerne Nations in respect of Iudea) were not the Gomerians of France, nor the Tubalines of Spaine, but a people of the leffer Afia, and Calefyria; and therefore that the opinions of Berofus, Iofephus, and who foeuer else hath followed them therein are to be rejected. But if tolephus referre himselse to later times, and thinke that some Colonie of the Tubalines might from Iberia and Alia passe into Spaine (to wit from that peece of land betweene Colchis (or Mengrelia) and Albania: (most part possest by the Georgians) then is his iudgement of better allowance. For without any repugnancie of opinions, it may be granted, that in processe of time these people might from their first habitation passe into the Countries neare the Euxine Sea, and from thence in after Ages into Spaine.

Josephius makes mention of the Ibert, faying, that they were anciently called Thobe- 10 los, as of Tuball; from whence ( fayth Instine ) they passed into Spaine to search out the mines of that Region: having belike vnderstood that it was a Southerlie Countrie and mountainous. For it feemeth that the Tubalines called Chalybes lived altogether by the exchange of iron, and other mettals, as Apollonius witnesseth in these following verses, telling how the Argonautes did visit them.

H.c gens tellurem rigido non vertit aratro, Sed ferri ven as feindit fub montibus altis: Mercibus hac mutat, que vite alimentaministrant:

The Calybes plough not their barren foile, But vndermine high hilles for iron Veines: Changing the purchase of their endlesse toile For merchandize, which their poore lines fultaines.

But it is more probable, that Spaine was first peopled by the Africans, who had ever fince an affection to returne thither, and to repeople it anew. This appeared by the Carthaginians of old, who were callly drawne to passe ouer the Streights into that Countrie; and after by the Moores who held Granado, and the South parts eight hundred yeares, till the time of Ferdinand and Isabel. And either of these opinions are 30 more probable, then that in the twelfth yeare of Nimrods raigne, Tubal past into Spaine, and therein built St. Vual: a poore Towne, and a poore deuice, God knowes. Certaine it is that we must finde Mosoch or Mesech, and Tubal neighbours, and Gomer and Togorma not farre off, or elfe we shall wrong Ezechiel: for he called Gog the Leader or Prince of Mefech and Tubal, and maketh Gomer and Togorna their affiftants. And that Mefech inhabited Afia, Functius (though he followed Berofus) confesseth, forthese be his wordes. Mesacvs, qui à Mose Mesech, priscos Mesos de Adula monte ví ja ad Ponticam regionem poluit : hacregio posteà Cappadocia dictaelt, in qua wrbs Mazica, Go. hacest terra M AGOG principalis. MESACVS, whom Moses calleth MESECH, placed the ancient Mesians from the mount Adulas, unto the coast of Pontus. 40 This Region was afterward called Cappadocia, in which is the Towne Mazica, &c. this is the principall Countrie of MAGOG. And this doth Annius also anow, and yet forgets that Gog was Prince both of Melech and Tubal : and therefore, that the one was a Nation of Spaniards, the other of Cappadocians, is very ridiculous; Spaine lying directly West, and not North from Iudea. Also Ezechiel in the 27. Chapter, where he prophecieth of the destruction of Tyre, nameth Mesech and Tubal ioyntlie. And for a finall proofe, that these Nations were of a Northerne neighbour land (how farre soeuer stretched) Ezechiel in the 38. Chapter makes them all horsemen. Thou, and much people with thee, all shall ride upon horses, even a great multitude and a mightic. Then if any man believe that these troupes came out of Spaine over the Pyrenes, and 50 first passed ouer a part of France, Italie, Hungarie, and Sarmatia, and imbarqued againe about the Hellefont, or else compassed all Pontus Euxinus, to come into the lesser A-(in, which is halfe the length or compaffe of the then knowne world, he may be called a strong beleeuer, but he shall neuer be instifted thereby. But on the contrarie it is knowne, that Seleucis was a Prouince neighbouring Palesting or Judga, and that Hierapolis (or Magog) joyned vnto it : whose Princes commanded all Syria, and Afia the leffe, (namely the Seleucida) and held it, till Scipio Afiations ouerthrew Antiochus the great : after which they yet possest syria till the time of Tigranes : and whether Meshech be in Cappadocia, or vnder Iberia, yet is it of the Tubalines, and one and the same Dominion.

Of Gomer the like may be faid. First hee seated himselfe with Togorma, not farre from Magog and Tubal, in the borders of Syria and Cilicia. Afterward hee proceeded further into Asia the leffe; and in long tract of time his valiant iffue filled all 10 Germanie, rested long in France and Brittaine, and possessed the ytmost borders of the earth, accomplishing (as Melaneton well notes) the fignification of their parents name, which is Vimost bordering. But when these borderers wanted further place, wherinto they might exonerate their fwelling multitudes, that were bounded in by the great Ocean, then did they returne vpon the Nations occupying the Countries, through which they had formerly paffed, oppreffing first their neighbours, afterwardes the people more remote. Hereupon it was (as the worthy reftorer of our antiquities, M. William Cambden hath noted) that they were called Cimbri, which in their old language doth fignifie robbers; necessitie inforcing them to spoile their neighbours, to whom in their originall they were as neare joyned, as afterwardes in 20 the seates which they possessed. For that the warlike Nations of Germanie were in elder ages accustomed to be beaten by the Galles, the authoritie of Casar affirming it is proofe fufficient. But in times following they purfued richer conquests, and more easie though further distant, by which (to omit their other enterprises not here to be spoken of) they were drawne at length into Asia the lesse, and occupied those partes, which had formerly beene held by their progenitours. I say not that they claimed those lands as theirs by descent; for likely it is, that they knew little of their owne pedigree. Neither can any man therefore denie, that they were of old feated in Asia, because in late ages they returned thither; vnlesse hee will thinke, that all those Nations which from farre partes have invaded and conquered 30 the land of Shimaar, may by that argument bee prooued not to have iffued from thence at the first.

Now concerning Samothes for his excellent wifedome firnamed Dis, whome Annius makes the brother of Gomer and Tubal ( which brother Moles neuer heard of, who spake his knowledge of Inphets sonnes) they must finde him in some old Poet: for Functius a great Berosian confesseth. Quis hic Samothes fuerit incertum est, Who this Samothes was it is uncertaine; neither is there any proofe that he was that same Dis, whome Cafar sayth the Gaules suppose to be their Ancestour; Getar comment. yea and Vignier confesseth with Functius. Mais on ne scayt qui il estoit. no man knowes Vigin. pars 1, who hewas.

Against the fabulous Berosys his fiction. That the Italian IANVS WAS NOAH.

Vt before I goe on with Noah his sonnes, I thinke it necessarioto disproue the fiction which Annius hath of Nonh himselfe : an inuention (indeed) very ridiculous, though warranted (as he hath wrefled) by those Authours of whom himselfe hath commented:
as the fragment of Berofus, Fabius Pictor, Cato, Laninius and others.

Annale Heaviste.

For Annius seekes to perswade vs, that Noah (sirnamed Ianus) was the same which Pitt. deaur. Jafounded Genoa, with other Citties in Italie, wherein he lived 92. yeares. This to dif. culo. Cato de origin. proove, by Mofes filence, is a sufficient argument to me, if there were nothing else Lavinithial.de to disprooue it. For if he vouchsafed to remember the building of Babel, Erec, Achad, Gall.

Chalne and Niminic by Aimred , Neah was a man of too great marke to be forgotten. with all the actes he did in 62, yeares. But it were a needleffe labour for me to difproducthe authoritie of that Berofus, on whom Annius groundeth, feeing fo manie learned men haue fo demonstratiuely prooued that fragment to be counterfeit. Befides that, Tatianus the Affrian in his oration against the Greekes augweth, that the ancient and true Berofus wrote onely 3. Bookes, dedicated to Antiochus the fueceffour of Selencus Nicanor : but Annius bath deuifed v. Bookes, wherewith hee honoureth Berofus. And whereas Berofus handled onely the effate of the Chaldxans and Affyrians, Annius hath filled this fragment with the businesse of all the world. And if we may beleeue Eulebius better then Annius, then all the Kinges of the La- 10 tines (before **Eneas) confumed but 1 50. yeares: whereas no man bath doubted. but that from Noah to Aneas arrival into Italie there past 1126. (after the least rate of the Hebrewe account) and (after Codoman) 1291. For Ianus (who was the first of their Kinges) lived at once with Ruth, who married Booz, in the worldes yeare (as some reckon) 2717, after the floud 1064, and Noah died 350, yeares after the floud : and fo there past betweene Innus of Italie and Noah sirnamed Innus 704. yeares. For Saturnus lucceeded Janus, Pieus after Saturnus, Faunus after Pieus, and Latinus followed Faunus: which Latinus lived at once with Tautanes the 27. King of Affria: with Pelafgus of Peloponnesus: with Demophoon of Athens; and Samplon Judge of Ifrael. Now all these fine Kinges of the Latines having confu- 20 med but one hundred and fifty yeares; and the last of them in the time of Samplon; then reckoning vpwards for one hundred and fifty yeare, and it reacheth Ruth, with whome Janus lined.

True it is, that the Greekes had their Janus; but this was not Noah; fo had they Ion the fonne of Xuthus, the fonne of Deucalion, from whom they drawe the Iones. Egeth. 27.19.13 who were indeed the children of Janan, the fourth forme of Japheth. For the vul-& fo the place gar Translation (where the Hebrew word is Iauan) writes Greece, and the Septuaot E(18.00.19. gint Hellas; which is the fame. So had they Medus the fonne of Medea, whom they lide: and (for make the parent of the Medes, though they were descended of a farre more ancient the Piurall Ja-thanin) Hellene. Father (to wit) Madai the third sonne of Iapheth.

Laftly we fee by a true experience, that the Brittifb language hath remained among vs about 2000, yeares, and the English speech ener since the intuation of the Angles: and the same continuance have all Nations observed among themselves, though with some corruption and alteration. Therefore, it is strange if either 200ab (by them called Janus ) had left in Italie his grandchild Gomer after him, or Tubal in Spaine, that no plaine refemblance of the Hebrew, Syrian, or Scythian (which no time could have quite extinguished) should have beene found in the languages of those Countries. For which reasons we doubt not but these personall plantations of Ianus, Gomer, Tubal, &c. in Italie, Spaine, or France, are meerely fabulous. Let the Italians therefore content themselves with the same Græcian Ianus, which commaun- 40 ded them and planted them, and who preceded the fall of Trey but 150, yeares. (faith Eulebius) which was in the time of Latinus the fift King; which also St. Augustine and Iulline confirme; and this agreeth with reason, time, and possibilitie. And if this bee not sufficient to disproue this vanitie, I may out of themselves adde thus much: That whereas some of them make Vesta (others Camasena) the wife of this Ianus, who instituted the holie Fire of the Vestal Virgins in Rome (the Latines and Romans taking from Janus all their idolatrous and heathenish ceremonies ) there is no man fo impious, as to beleeue that North himselfe, (who is faid by Moses to have walked with God, to be a just man, and whom God of all mankinde made choice of) could be either ignorant of the true and only God, or fo wicked and vngratefull, to 50 fet vp or denife any Heathen faluage, or idolatrous adoration, or haue instituted any ceremonic, contrarie to that which he knew best pleasing to God himselfe.

ð. V I.

That GOMER also and his Sonne TOGORMA of the posteritic of IAPHETH were first seated about Asia the lesse: and that from thence they spread Westwardinto Europe: and Northwardinto

Lake Lucrinus.

O turne now to the Sonnes of Woah, and the worlds plantation after the floud : therein I obserue, that as both reason and necessitie taught them: fo, when they multiplyed in great numbers, and diffeerfed themselves into the next countries bordering to their first habitations, and from thence fent forth Colonies elfewhere, it was in fuch a manner as that they might repaire to each other, and keepe intelligence by River: because the land was yet Defart and ouerprest with woods, reedes, bogges, and rotten marishes. As when Nimrod Seated in Babylonia, Chus tooke the South part of Chaldea, downe the River of Gehon, by which he might passe too and fro from Babylon to his owne plantation; those also, which were of the race of Shem, inhabiting at Pror Orchogneare the Lakes of Chalden, might by the fame Riverget up to Babylon and receive firecour from thence. All which Tract of land vpon Gehon Southward, 20 Moles in the description of Paradife calleth the land of Chulb: because the Dominion and Empire was then in the hands of Nimrod a Culbite, by whom the children of Shem (which came into that Valley and flaved not in the East) were for a while onprest, till God afterward by the seede of Abraham made them his owne nation and victorious. Hauilah, the brother of Nimrod, and sonne of Cush, tooke both bankes of Tigris, especially on the East side of the River: by which river his people might alfo paffe too and fro to Babel.

The Imperial feate of which Region of Hauilah or Susian, was anciently called Chusian, or Chusan, afterward Susa. Cush himselfe tooke the bankes of Gehon, and planted those Countries Westward, and South-westward towards Arabia the sto-30 nie, and the Defart, where Ptolomie placeth the Cittie of Chulidia, first Chulia.

Seba, and Sheba with the rest that planted Arabia falix, had Tigris to convey them into the Persian Gulfe, which washeth the bankes of Arabia falix on the East side: fo as those somes of Culb might take land downe the Riverasthey pleased. Also the Cittie of Niniue was by Nimrod founded on the faid River of Tigris; and from thence a Colonie past to Charran, standing also vpon a nauigable branch of Euphrates. In like manner did Japheths formes fettle themselves together, and tooke their seates in Afia the leffe: from whence they might indifferently stretch themselves Northward, and Westward, into the next parts of Europe, called the Isles of the Gentiles. And it feemeth very agreeable to reason, that both Gomer, Magog, and Tubal, sate 40 downe first of all in that part of Syria, to the North of Palastina and Phanicia: and from thence Gomer or his children past on into Afia the leffe, as those of Magog and Tubaldid; from whence the Tubalines fored themselves into Iheria: and the Magogians more Northerly into Sarmatia. The first Gomerians, and first planters in Asia the leffe, held the Countrie of the Cymmerians (witnesse Herodotus ) the same Re- E 4. gion which was afterward by the Gallo-greekes called Galatia, to whom St. Paul wrote his Epiftle so intituled. This Nation of the Cymmerians (whom the inuincible Seythians afterwards dispersed, and forced from their first plantations) gaue names to divers places; as to the mountaines aboue Albania (called Cymmerini) and to the Cittie of Cymmeris in Phrygia: also Boshhorus Cymmerius tooke appellation from this 50 nation, in the outlet whereof was also a Cittle of that name called Cymmerian : which Plinie faith (mistaking the place) had fometime the name of Cerberion; but Cerberion was a Towne in Campania, so called of the vihealthfull waters, sauouring of brimstone: which Augustus caused to bee cleansed by letting in the water of the

The children of Tubal ranged as farre as Iberia, to whom the Moschici were neighbours, which others write Melhech. The Prophet Ezechiel (coupling them together) calleth Gog the Prince of Mcschech and Tubal. For these Meschi (which Ptolomie calleth Molchi) inhabite Syracena a Prouince of Armenia, directly South from the mountaines Moschiei, in the Valley between the mountaines Moschiei, and the mountaines Paryardes: out of whose North part springeth the River Phases; from the East part Araxis; and from the West Euphrates : and of this Meschere descended also the Moscouians (faith Melarchton,) and it may bee, that in processe of time fome of them inhabited those Regions also : For Melhech (faith Melanchton) fignifieth extendens, enlarging or fretching forth. Togorma also at first did inhabite a- 10 mongst his parents and kindred. The Togormians were also called Giblei, a people neighbouring the Sydonians in Gabala, a Tetrarchie of Phanicia, the fame which Plinie T. King. I. v. 18. calleth Gaben: from whence Salomon had his most excellent Masons, which hewed stones for the Temple of Hierufalem. Thence the Togormians stretched into the leffe Inn. in Gen. 10. Armenia, whose Kings were hence called Tigranes, and their Citties Tigranokarta: of which Citties Tigranes subdued by Lucullus the Roman, built one. Hierosolvmitanus hath planted the Togormians in Barbarie : forgetting the Prophecie of Exechiel against the Tyrians. They of the house of Togorma, brought to thy Faires horses, and horsefu. c. 27. 14. men, and mules, which could not well be driven over the whole length of the Mediterran Sea, but from the neighbour Countries by land. But Iofephus takes them for 20 the parents of the Phrygians; which I doe not denie, but they might bee in the enfuing ages; and so might the Tubalines be of the Spaniards; but it was from Iberia, and many hundred yeares after the twelfth of 2x imrods raigne. The Iewes conceine that the Turkes came of those Togormians, because their Emperour is called Togar. The Chaldeans make them the Fathers of the Germanes. But Laonicus affirmes that the Turkes descended of the Crim Tartar, which borders Muscouia. But for these subderinations it were infinite to examine them. Only of the first and second plantation, and of the first Nations after the floud is the matter which I labour to discouer : and therein to open the ignorance of some, and the corruption of other fabulous Writers. And this wee must Note, that those grand-children of Noah which were 20 of a more quiet (pirit, or (perchance) of leffe vnderstanding, and had not therefore the leading of Colonies fent out, their proper habitations can bee hardly knowne: only reason hath taught vs, that they dwelt among the rest, and were concred with the fame of others, who tooks on them the conduction and dominion over

> From Madai the third Sonne of Japheth, were the Medes. The Gracians bring them (as before) from Medus the Sonne of Medea.

Of I AVAN the fourth Sonne of I APHETH : and of MESCH, of ARAM. and Meshech of IAPHETH.

F Iauan the fourth Sonne of Iapheth came the Iones, which were afterwards called the Greekes; and fo the Latine and Greeke Interpreters for lauan write Greece, as in Efai; Et mittam ex ijs qui faluati fuerint ad gentes, in mare, in Italiam, & Graciam, And I will fend those that escape of them to Nations in the Sea, in Italie and in Greece. The Geneua here vieth the word (Tarshich) for Tarsus, a Cittie in Cilicia, though Tarsis in many places bee taken for the Sea. The Tigurine and the Geneua vie the names Tubal and 50 Iauan, and not Italie and Greece: keeping the fame Hebrew wordes. Of these Iones were the Athenians, though themselves dreame that they were Aborigines, or men without Ancestours, and growing (as it were) out of the soile it selfe: who abounding in people sent Colonies into Asia the lesse, of whom came the Iones of those parts. Others deriue the Athenians from Ion the fonne of Xuthus, the fonne of Deu- Iburyd. calion; but the antiquitie of Jauan marres the falhion of that supposition, who so many yeares preceded Xuthus, Ion, or Deucalion. Paufanias tels vs that Xuthus ftole out of Theffalie with all his Fathers treasure, and his brothers portions, and arriving at Athens, he was gratiously received by Eriotheus, who gave him his daughter in marriage; of whom he received two fonnes, Ion, and Acheus, the supposed Anceflours of the Athenians. For Attica was called Ionia (faith Plutarch in the life of Thefew) who, when he had joyned Megara to Attisa, crected a piller in that Illimos or Strait, which fasteneth Peloponnesis to the other part of Greece: writing on that part which looketh towards the East, these wordes. Hee non funt Peloponne fus. ast lonia, These Countries are not of Peloponnesus, but of Ionia; and on the other side which looked towards the South and into Peloponnesus, this. These parts are Peloponnesus, and Strabo out of Hecat aus affirmeth, that the Iones came out of Aliainto Greece, which is contrarie to the former opinion: That the Iones of Greece transporting certains companies into Asia the leffe, the name of Iones was thereby therein retained. And though Strabo knew no more thereof then he learned of the Greekes themselves, yet I finde this coniccture of Hecateus reasonable enough. For though it were to him vnknowne, yet fure I am that Asia the leffe had people before Greece had any : and 20 that Jauan did not flie from Babylonia into Greece, but tooke Alia the leffe in his paffage; and from thence past ouer the nearest way, leaving his owne name to some maritimate Province on that fide, as he did to that part of Greece so called. But yet Strabo himselfe beleeved, that Ionia tooke the name from Ion the Sonne of Xuthus: for so much he had learned from themselves; which was also the opinion of Paufanias. True it is, that the Greekes in after-times cast themselves into that part of Afin the leffe, opposite vnto them, which they held for divers yeares. And how socuer the Greekes vaunt themselues to be the Fathers of Nations, and the most ancient; yet all approued Historians (not their owne) deride and disproue their pride, and vanitie therein. For this dispute of Antiquitie (among prophaned Writers) rested 30 betweene the Seythians and the Agyptians, as Justine out of Troque, in the warre betweene Vexoris of Egypt, and Tanais of Seythia, witneffeth: which preceded far the raigne of Ninus, and was long before the name of Greece was ever heard of. And it is also manifest, that in Cecrops time the Greekes were all saluages without law or religion, liuing like brute beafts in all respects; and Cecrops (faith St. Augustine) lived to- L.18 de civit. gether with Moles. The fixth fonne of Japheth was Meshech, whom the Septuagint call Mosoch: (a part of those Nations commanded by Gog the chiefe Prince of Meshech and Tubal.) But this we must remember, that betweene Mesech the sonne of Aram, and Meshech (or Moloch) the some of Japheth, there is little difference in name, and both by divers in-40 terpreters diverfly written. Montanus with the Vulgar writeth Mefch, the fonne of Aram Mes; the Geneua Mash; Junius Mesch. But it may be gathered out of the 120 Plalme, that either Meshech the sonne of Japheth, was the parent of those people, or gaue name to that Province wherein Dauid hid himselfe: or else (which may rather feeme) that it tooke name from Mefch the fonne of Aram. For David bewailing his exile (while he liued among a barbarous and irreligious people) vseth these wordes. Woe is me that I remaine in Mefech, and dwell in the Tents of Kedar: which Iunius con-Palizzo, si uerteth thus. Heimihi quià peregrinor tam diù : habito tanquam Scenita Kedareni : The Septuagint gives it this sense. We is me because my habitation (or abode) is prolonged. who dwell with the inhabitants of Kedar; with which this of the Latine agreeth. Hen 50 mihi, quià incolatus meus prolongatus est, habitaui cum habitantibus Kedar: The Chaldaan otherwise, and in these wordes. O me miserum, quià peregrinatus sum Asianis, habitaui cum tabernaculis Arabum, O wretch, that Iam, for I have travailed among those of Asia: I have dwelt in the Tabernacle of the Arabians. But how socuer or which socuer conversion be taken for the best, yet all make mention of Kedar: which is a Province of Arabia petrea; and the Chaldwan putteth Alain flead of Melech; but the Hebrew it selfe bath Melech. And if it bee to bee taken for a Nation, (as it is most likely, because it answeres to Kedar, the name of a Nation) seeing Mells the sonne of Aram.

1. Chron, 17, is called Melhec, it is indifferent whether this Nation tooke name from Melbech or Melb, both bordering Judan, and like enough to be commanded by one

Prince; for fo Ezechiel makes Mefech and Tubal. But as for those that take Mefech out of the word Moloch (given by the Septuagint,) to be the Musconian: fure they profume much youn the affinitie of names, as aforefaid. And fore I am that Danid neuer transiled fo farre North; (for to him Muscouia was vtterly vnknowne) but about the border of Kedar (it may be) he was often in all the time of his perfecuti-on: the fame being a Cittle on the mountaines of Sanir or Galaad. And yet Arias

Montanus makes Moloch the Father of the Mulcouians : and herein also Melanchton runnes with the tide of common opinion, and fets Mefech in Mufconia, though with fome better adulfe of judgement; as, first seated in Cappadocia, and from thence trauailing Northward: expounding the places of the 120. Pfalme, (Hei mihi quod exulo in Melech) to lignifie, gentis eius feritatem insignem elle; that the feritie of that nation exceeded which herceneffe or brutalitie of the Mulcouians, David neuer project, or

(perchance) neuer heard of But the fame feritie or crueltie which those Northerne

Mulcouians had, may aswell be ascribed to the Arabians and Redgrens. For this quall fierceneffe to any of the world were begotten, both in those times and long after, even to this day, (if the Arabians, Ismaelites, and Saracens, may be accounted one people: ) the fame being foreshewed by the speech of the Angell to Hagar, Gen. 16.

V.12. And he shallbe a wild man : his hand shall be against cuery man, and eucry mans hand against him. Now Arabia the Desart (Saith Plinie) confronteth the Arabians Cochlei on the East, and the Cedrai Southward, both which iowne together vpon the Naba-thei, So it appeareth (as before) that Mefech, Tubal, Gomer, Togorma, and Magog, neighboured Canaan and Ifrael, and that Kedar also did joyne to Melech: all which were Regions of Syria, or of Alia the leffe, commanded by the fucceffours of Seleu-it might well be, that long after the first plantation the iffue of Melech (or Moloch) might paffe into Cappadocia, and thence into Hyrcania, and give names, both to Mazegain the one, and to the mountaines Moschiei in the other, and from thence might fend people more Northerly into Mulcouia: and fo all opinions faued. But all fal-

plantation, euen as ciuilitie, letters, and magnificent buildings, witneffe anticus, enemies of the reestablishment of Ifrael and Inda. But (as I have already faid) 20

Countrie tooke name of Kedar the second some of Ismael, of whom a people of e- 20

Of ASCANEZ and RIPHATH, the two elder Sonnes of GOMER.

SCANEZ was the Father of those which the Greekes call Regini, saith to soft phus but the giues no reason why.

Eufebiue makes Assanez the Father of the Goths. The Iewes in their thorques make him the roote of the Germane Mation, but their expositions are commonly very idle. Plinie findeth Ascania in Phrygia, neare the Rivers of Hylas and Cios: Melanchton being of the same opinion, that the Tuifcones were descended of the Ascanez, (for Tuiscones, faith he, is as much to fay, as of the Ascenez, praposito articulo die Ascanez) and that the word signifieth a Religious Keeper of fire : it being an ancient superstition to pray at the fire of Sacrifices, as af-Molameh.in car. terwards at the tombs of Martyrs. Not farre from Phrygia was the Lake Afcania, knowne by that name in the Romanes time. And among the Kings which came to the fuccour of Troy, was Ascanius (Deo similio, faith Homer) like unto God: because Homiliada, he was beautifull and strong : for in the same manner doth Virgil grace Aneas, Os humerofy, Deo similis, in face and body like one of the Gods. Virgil also remembreth such

20 a River together with the hilles Gargara: as, Illas dueit amor trans Gargara, tranfq, fo- Ving George 13. nantem Ascanium, Appetite leades them both ouer the mountaines Gargara, and the roring Ascanius. But this Plinie maketh more plaine in the description of Phrygia. For he placeth the Cittie of Brillion vpon the River Afranius, which is adioyning to Milia, and is neare the border of the Troian Empire : and the Lake Ascanez he directs ysto finde by the description of Prusia, founded by Hannibal at the foot of Olympus, which lyeth farre within the Countries of Bithynia : and then from Prusia to Nicca are accounted fine and twentie miles, in which way this Lake lyeth, even betweene Prulia and Wicea, And fo Junius (as I conceiue him) takes them of Ascanez, to be the inhabitants of Pontus, and Bithynia, and thole North parts of Asia. Stephanus de Vybibus

30 makes it a Cittie of Troas, built by Ascanias the sonne of Aneas: saying, that there was another of that name in Mylia. Of Ascania a Lake of Bithynia, Ptolomie witnesfeth; and Strabo gineth Ascania both a Lake, a Riner, and a Towne in Mysia, neare vnto Cio; which also agreeth with Plinie. For Plinie findeth Prusia (before spoken of) neare Cio, and calleth the Islands before Troy Ascanes.

Now, whether these places tooke name of Ascanez the sonne of Gomer, or of Ascanius the sonne of Anews, it might bee questioned: sure it is, that Afganius which brought fuccour to the Troians, could not take his name from Aneas sonne, who was then either exceeding young, or rather viborne; and it feemeth that the countries whence those succours came were not out of any part of Phrygia or Mylia, but 40 farther off, and from the North parts of all Afia the leffe, which by Hieremie is called Afranez, by the figure Synchdoche, as Iunius thinketh. Out of those testimonies therefore which deceiue not, we may confidently determine. For of the Propact Hieremie we shall learne of what Nation the Ascenez were, whose wordes are these. Set up a Standard in the land, blow the trumpel among the Nations against ber, call c.51.v.27. up the Kings of Ararat, Minni, and Ascanez against her, &c. meaning, against the Babylonians. Ararat was Armenia the greater, as most interpreters consent, so called of the mountaines of Ararat which runne through it : Minni the leffer Armenia : Armenia being compounded of Aram and Minni. For Minni was the ancient name: (faith Iunius and others before him) and Aram anciently taken for Syria, which con-50 tained all that Tract from Euphrates to the Sea-coasts of Phanicia and Palastina; and therefore Mesopotamia being in elder times but a Prouince of Syria, the Scriptures difference it in the storie of Iacob and Efau, and call it Aram-padam. Then if these two Nations were of the Armenians and Ascanez joyned with them (who altogether vnited vider Cyrus and Darius, came to the spoile of the Babylonian Empire) we shall erre

Tiras, the feuenth fonne of Japheth, which Montanus reckons among the fonnes of Gomer, was the Father of the Thracians, as all Authours (worthing the examination) affirme. Iofephus was the first that determined hereof: and because the Scriptures are altogether filent, what part of the world Tiras peopled, the coniectures are indifferent, and give no ground at all of dispute. It followeth now to speake of the Sonnes of Gomer, which were three:

much to call Askensz Germanie or Amaine, for we heare of no Swart Ruttiers at that fiege. But the Askensz were of those Nations which were either fubiced or allued to the Medes: of which, if any of them came afterward into Phyngia, I know not: for the differition of Nations was in aftertimes without account. But for the opinion of Englishms, who makes them to be Goths; or that of Diephns, who calls them Rhegins; or of the Enres, who will have them to be Admaines; when they confirme it either by Scribtures or Reason, I will thinke as they doe.

Of Riphath the second some of Gomer there is mention in the first of Chronicles. Beroaldus and Pererius thinke that hee wandered farre off from the reft of his brothers, and therefore no memorie of his plantation. But I fee nothing to the contrarie, but that he might seate himselfe with the rest of his familie: for there wanted no roome or foile in those dayes for all the sonnes and grand-children of Noah. Therefore I take it to bee well understood, that the Riphei were of Riphath, which the Greekes afterwards (according to Infephus) called the Paphlagones: and Riphei (faith Melanchton) (ignifieth Giants. These people were very famous in the North parts, and in Sarmatia: the most of number and power among them, Sarmatarum gens maxima Heneti, The greatest number of the Sarmatians were the Heneti; who spake the ancient Polac: which being first called Riphei (for the loue of some of their Leaders or Kings) changed their names and became Heneti, (a custome exceeding common in those times) and dwelt first in Paphlagonia, as Homer witnesseth, and so doth Apollo- 20 nius in his Argonauticks: Now, when these Riphei (afterward Heneti) sought new Regions, they came along the shores of Euxinus, and filled the North part of Europe, contaying Rusia, Lituania, and Polonia. From thence they croft thwart the Land, and peopled Illyria, defirous (faith Melanchton) of a warmer foile of fruit and Wine. These Heneti or Veneti, whom Melanchton taketh to be one people, filled all that land betweene the Baltick and Adriatick Sea; and to this day the name of the Gulfe Venedieus is found in Russia, This Nation, after they were possest of Lituania and Polonia, disturbed the plantation of the Boij and Hermondurij. Therefore, it seemeth to me, that of Riphath came the Riphei, afterward Heneti; and so thinketh Arias Montanus, first seated in Paphlagonia, but in course of time Lordes of Sarmatia, and those other 20 parts before remembred, chiefly betweene the Rivers of Vistula and Albis. The name (faith Melanchion) fignifieth wandering or wanderers, or Womades: a people which lived by white meates and fruits, as (indeede) all Nations did in the first

Of the third Sonne of Gomer, Togorma, I have spoken already; now therefore of Innanschildren, which were source:

Elifa, Tharfis, Cethim, Dodanim,

Of the foure Sonnes of I AVAN: and of the double fignification of Tharfis, either for a proper name or for the Sea.

F Elifa or Elipha, came the Loles: and of this Elifa all the Greeks were called Hellenes, faith Montanus. Melanchron makes Elifa the Father 50 of the Loles in Affa fide: others of Elisin Pelopomefus, or of both. What feelings the Greeks were descended in generall of Janan, it is pro-

Sonne. Ezechiel in the 27 speaking of Tyre, nameth the Illes of Elisa. Hyacynthus

Opurpura de infulia Elifa fueta funs operimensum tuum, Elew filke and purple, brought from the files of Elifa, was thy conceing: The Chaldeans for Elifa write Italia: but the Vulgar, the Tigurine, the Geneua, and Innun, keepe the word Elifa: and lo I thinke they might doe with reason. For there was not found any fuch purple Dev in Italia; in those dayes, nor fince, that I can reade of: but those files of Elfa, were by a better coniecture the files of Greece; and the best purple was found afterward at Tyre it felse, and before that, among the Cydades, and on the coast of Genelia.

Tharfit, the second Sonne of Islant inhabited Cilicia, of which Tharfit is the Metropolis. CMontanus for Tharfit in Cilicia, vnderslands Carthoge in Africa; but (reserving the respect due to so learned a man) he was much missaken in that considerine. The Chaldsan Paraphrasit puts Carthoge for Tharfit, but it hath no authoritie, nor warrant of reason therein. Solikewise, where it is written, that the ships of Salomon went curry three yeares to Tharfis, and brought thence Gold, Silver, Elephants seeth, &c. the Chaldsan Paraphrasit translates Tharfis (Africa.) But Salomons ships were prepared in the Red Sea at Esson Gabor, in the Bay of Elana, neare winto Macsian, where Island Carthoge Chassis et al., Islamon, or of the Chassis et al., Islamon,

20 And if to great riches might have beene found within the bounds of the Mediterrun Sea, all other neighbouring Princes would foone have entertayned that trade also. But this enterprise of Salomon is in this fort written of in the first of Kings. Alo King S A L O NO N made a Navie of fipps in Esson Gaber, which is befield estlab and the brinke of the Red Sean the land of Edom: and Hyrom sent with the Navie his servent was the season the land of Edom: and Hyrom sent with the Navie his servent, that were marines, and hadknowledge of the Sea, with the servants of S A L O NO N: and they came to Ophir, and set from thence 420. Idents of gold, &c. But as the Nations about Pontus thought no Sca in the world like vnto their owne, and doubted whether there were any other Sea but that only '(where of it came, that Pontus was a word yield for the Sea in generall) so, because the straight sand the Phamistans knew no vice of the sea in generally so, because the straight and the Phamistans knew no vice the season of the s

30 ther Sea then that of the Mediterran in the beginning; and that the people of Thur
fis had the greateff thips, and were the first nauigators in those parts with flich veffiels, they were therefore called men of the Sea: and the word Thurfis vied often for the Sea. And whereas it is faid that the lhips of Sulomon went cuery three yeares to Thurfis, that phrase is not strange at all: for we vieit ordinarily wherefoetier we na uigate, (namely) that the Kings ships are gone to the Sea, or that they are set out e uery yeare, or euery three yeare to the Sea, and therefore Thurfis was not therein named, either for Carthage, Africa, or India, but vied for the Sea it selfe. But in this place Thurfis truly taken for Thurfis, the chiefe Cittic in Ciliais, founded by Thurfis the second sonne of Jaum, or by his successions in memorie of their first parent. To 40 this Cittie arrued Alex: Macedon, before he gaue the first ouerthrow to Darius, and casting himselfe into the River to bathe and wash his bodie, he fell into an extreme feuer, and great danger of death: and in this Cittie of Tharsis was St. Paul borne. Now this agreeth with the reason and nature of a plantation. For (Gomer and his other sonnes inhabiting Asia the lesse, and that part of Syria adiopying.) Jauan who was to passe to make the Sea into Greece, tooke the edge of the same coast, and first planted the Iones on that thore: gaue the Islands between Asia the lesse and Greece, to Bissa, and less Tharsis you the Sea-slide in Ciliais; of whom that Cittie tooke name.

The third some of Isuan was Cethim, of whom were the Romans and Italians, 50 faith Beroaldus, but I allow better of Melanchens opinion, who makes Cethim the Father of the Asteedomins. Cethim is a voice plurall (faith the) and signifieth persulfores; though in that respective may be meant by either. But it seemeth more probable, that the place of Esla 2, (according to Melanchen) had relation to Alexarder and the Mecedonians. Hae calamitas ab Es 1 pradistagl, qui capite vice(mo tertio inquit).

venturos effe euerfores Tyriex terra Cittim, This calamitie (faith MELANCHTON) was foreshewed by Es At the Prophet, who in the three and twentieth Chapter pronounced, that the destroyers of Tyre were to come out of Cittim. And although the children of Israel efteemed all men Illanders, which came vnto them by Sea, and separate from that Continent; (and so also Cittim might be taken for Italie, faith Beroaldiss) yet we must take the sirst performance of the former prophecie, which tooke effect with the destruction of the Tyrians by Alexander: who after seuen Moneths siege entred that proude Cittie, and cut in peeces 7000. principall Cittizens; strangled 2000. and changed the freedome of 13000, others into bondage and flauerie. Now, that Maceden was taken for Cethim, it appeareth plainely in the first of the Maccabees, in these 10 wordes. After that ALEXANDER the Macedonian, the Sonne of PHILIP, went forth of the land of Cethim, and flue DARIVS King of the Persians and Medes. Iosephys fets Cethim in the Isle of Cyprus, in which (faith he) there remaineth the Cittie Citium, the Countrie of Zeno the Philosopher (witnesse Laertius) which Cittie Pintus vpon Exechiel affirmeth, that it stood in St. Hieromes time. So it may be that all the Illandes in ancient times by the Hebrewes were called the Illandes of cethim: and in that sense might Cyprus bee so called also; and yet because Tharsis was the very next Port to Coprus, and directly ouer against it, it is also very probable, that Cethim dwelt by his brother Tharfis: and finding that Island too streight for his people after they were increased, and that the rest of the coasts, both on Asia side and Greece, 20 ivere inhabited by his Father and Brothers, he fent Colonies ouer the Agaan fea, and inhabited Macedonia. Dodanim the fourth fonne of tauan, and the youngest brother (by the most opinions) fate downe at Rhodes, as neare Cethim, Tharfis, and Elifa, as he could. For Dodanim and Rhodanim are vsed indifferently by many translators : the Hebrew (D) and the Hebrew (R) are so like, as the one may easily bee taken for the other, as all Hebricians affirme. There is also found in Epirus the Cittie of Dodona, in the Prouince of Molosia. And as Cethim, when he wanted soile in Cyprus : so Dodanim (seated in a farre leffe Island) did of necessitie fend his people farther off; and keeping alongst the coast, and finding Peloponnesius in the possession of Elifa, he passed a little 30 farther on the Westward, and planted in Epirus. And though the Cittie of Dodona was not then built, or (perchance) not fo ancient as Dodanim himselfe, yet his posteritie might giue it that name in memorie of their first parent, as it hapned all the world ouer. For names were given to Citties, Mountaines, Rivers, and Provinces, after the names of Noahs children, and grand-children; not in all places by themsclues, but by their successours many yeares after: enery of their families being desirous to retaine among them by those memories, out of what branch themselues were taken, and grafted elsewhere. And because great Kingdomes were often by new Conquerers newly named, and the greatest Citties often fired and demolished: therefore those that hoped better to perpetuate their memories, gaue their owne 40 names, or the names of their Ancesters, to Mountaines and Riuers, as to things (after their judgements) freelt from any alteration.

Thus then did Iauan fettle himfelfe and his children, in the edge and frontier of Affathe leffe, towards the Sea-shore: and afterward in Greece, and the Islands, and neighbour Provinces thereof, as Inpheth their Father had done in the body of the leffer Afia, together with Iauans brethren, Gomer, Magog, Madai, Tubal, Mefech, and the restround about him. And in like fort did Chush (the sonne of Cham) people Babylonia, Chaldea, and the borders thereof towards the West and Southwest: and the fonnes of Chulb (all but Nimrod, who held Babylonia it selfe) travailed Southward in Arabia falix, and Southwestward into Arabia peirea: the rest of his children holding 50 the Regions adioyning to Nimrod. Mizraim the brother of Chush in like manner tooke the way of Agypt and his brother Canaan the Region of Palastina adioyning. The Sonnes of Canaan had their portions in Canaan, of whom all those Nations came, which were afterward the enemies both to the Hebrewes, and to those of the fonnes of Shem, which fored themselves towards the West, and the borders of the Mediterran Sea: of which I shall speake hereafter. But first of the sonnes of Chim or Ham, which were foure:

That the feate of CHVSH the eldest sonne of HAM was in Arabia, not in Athiopia: and of firange fables, and ill translations of Scripture, grounded voon the mistaking of this point.

of Iosephus his tale of an Athiopeffe wife to Moses, grounded on the mistaking of the feate of CvsH.

Hat Ham was the Father of the Agyptians, it is made manifest in ma-ny Scriptures, as in the 105. Psalme v. 51. Then I sa A E L came to Agpt, and I A C OB was a franger in the land of H A M: and in the 78.

Pfalme. He flue all the first-borne in Asppt, eurn the beginning of their firength, in the Tabernaeles of H A M. There is also found a great Cittie in Thebaida, called Cheramis; (asit were the Cittie of Ham) of which name Herodo-Heredin Es tus also discouers an Island in the same Region. But because Chully is the elder sonne ture. 20 of Ham, it agreeth with order to fpeake first of him. Now though I have already in the description of Paradise handled this question, and (I hope) proved that Chush could not be Ethiopia : yet feeing it commeth now to his turne to speake for himfelfe, I will adde some farther proofe to the former. For the manifestation hereof fets many thinges straight, which had otherwise very crooked constructions, and fenfeleffe interpretations. Surely, howfocuer the Septuagint and Infephius have herein failed, yet it is manifest that Chush could not be Athiopia, but Arabia: (to wit) both that Arabia called Petraa, and a part of Arabia the Happie and the Defart: which Regions Chush and the Chustes presently planted, after they left Babylonia to Nimrod, wherein they first sate downe altogether. And there is nothing which so 40 well cleareth this controuerfie, as the true interpretation of the place,  $\mathcal{N}um.12. \ v.1.$ where Moses his wife is called a Chuste; together with some places which speake of Nabuchodonofors conquests. For whereas Infephus and the Septuagint in the place, Num. 12. v. 1. as also elsewhere, viderstand Chulb for Athiopia, we must give credit to Mofer him lefte herein; and then it will appear that Iofephus was grolly milhaken; or vainely led by his owne inuention. For Iofephus prefuming that Chufh was  $\mathcal{L}$ thiopia, and therefore that the wife of Moles (which in Scripture Num. 12. v. 1. is called a woman of Cush) was a woman of the land of Ethiopia, faineth that Tharbis the daughter of the King of Athiopia, fell in loue with the person and same of Mofes, while he befieged Saba her Fathers Cittie; and to the end to obtaine Mofes for 50 her husband, shee practised to betray both her parents. Countrie, and friends, with the Cittie it selfe, and to deliuer it into Moses handes. The tale (if it bee worth the reciting) lyeth thus in Iosephus. After he had described the strength of the Athiopian Cittie Meroe, which he faith at length Cambyles called fo from the name of his fifter, (the old name being Saba) he goeth on in these wordes. His cum Moses de- Aniig.L.s. 5.

sidere exercitum otiosum agrè ferret, hoste non audente manus conserere, tale quiddam accidit. Erat Athiopum regi filia, nomine T H ARBIS, &c. which tale hath this lenfe in English. When MosEs was grieved that his Armielay idle, because the enemie believed. durst not fallie and come to handie strokes, there hapned this accident in the meane while. The Athiopian King had a daughter called T HARBIS, who at some assaults given beheld the person of Moses, and withall admired his valour. And knowing that Moses had not only up-held and restored the falling estate of the Ægyptians, but had also brought the conquering «£thiopians to the very brincke of subucrsion: these thinges working in her thoughts, together with her owne affection, which daylie encreased, shee made meanes to send wato him by one of her trustiest servants to offer her selfe unto him, and become his Wife: 10 Which Moses on this condition entertained, that thee thould first deliver the Cittie into his possession: whereunto shee condescending, and Moses having taken outh to performe this contract, both the one and the other were instantly performed.

†. II. A dispute against the tale of Iosephus.

T His tale (whereof Moles hath not a word) hath Iosephus fashioned, and therein also viterly misselven himselfe in remine a few parts. also vtterly mistaken himselfe, in naming a Cittie of Arabia, for a Cittie of A- 20 thiopia: as he names Athiopia it selfe to have beene the Countrie of Moses his Wife, when (indeede) it was Arabia. For Saba is not in Athiopia, but in Arabia, as both Strabo and all other Geographers, ancient and moderne teach vs, faying that the Sabeans are Arabians, and not Ethiopians; except Iofephus can perswade vs, that the Queene of Saba which came from the South to heare the wifedome of Salomon, were a Negro, or Black-Moore. And though Damianus a Goes speake of certaine letters to the King of Portugall from Prester John, of the Abisines : wherein that Athiopian King would perswade the Portugals that hee was descended of the Queene of Saba, and of Salomon; yet it doth no where appeare in the Scriptures, that Salomon had any Sonne by that great Princeffe; which had it beene true, it is likely that 20 when Sifhac King of Ægypt inuaded Roboam, and fackt Hierufalem, his brother (the fonne of Saba and Salomon) who joyned upon Egypt, would both have impeached that enterprize, as also given aide and succour to Roboam against Ieroboam, who drew from him ten of the twelue Tribes to his owne obedience. Neither is it any thing against our opinion of Moses his wife, to have beene an Arabian, that the Scriptures teach vs. that Moles married the daughter of lethro Priest of Midian or Madian: which standing on the North coast of the Red Sea, ouer against the body of Agrpt, and neare Esion Gaber, where Salomon prouided his Fleet for India, in the Region of Edom, may well be reckoned as a part of Arabia, as the Red Sea is called Sinus Arabicus. For Edumaa joyneth to the Tribe of Inda by the North, to Arabia Pe- 40 trea by the East, to the Mediterran by the West, and to the Red Sea by the Southeast. And if we marke the way which Moses tooke when he left Agypt, and condu-Sted Israel thence, it will appeare that hee was no stranger in Arabia: in the border whereof, and in Arabia it felfe, hee had formerly lived fortic yeares; where it feemeth, that belides his carefull bringing vp in Egypt, hee was instructed by Iethro in the Egyptian learning. For Iosephus confesseth, and St. Stephen confirmeth, that he was learned in all the wisedome of the Agyptians. But on the other side this Text makes much against Josephus, where it is written in Exodus the second. Therefore MOSES fled from PHARAO, and dwelt in the land of Madian or Midian, and not in Æthiopia. And in the third Chapter it is as plaine as wordes can expresse, in what 50 Region Madian was, where it is written. When Moses kept the sheepe of IETHRO his Father in law, Priest of Madian, and draue the flocke to the Defert, and came to the mountaine of God in Horeb. Now that mount Horeb is not in Athiopia, every Infant knoweth. And if wee may beleeve Moles himselfe, then was not the Wife of

Moles purchased in that manner which Iosephus reporteth (which was for betraying her Countrie and friends) neither had shee the name of Tharbis, but of Sippora, or Zippora: neither was shee a Negro, but a Madianitish. And as God worketh the greatest thinges by the simplest meanes: so it pleased him from a sheep-heard to call Moles, and after him Dauid, and by them to deliver his people first and last. For Moles litting by a Well (as disconsolate and a stranger) defended the daughters of Requel Find 2. from the other sheep-heards, and drew them water to water their sheepe : vpon which occasion (by God ordained) hee was entertained by Iethro, whose daughter he married : and not for any betraying of Townes or Countries. From hence also came lethro to Moses at Rephidim, not farre from Idumaa, and finding the insupportable government of such a multitude, hee advised him to distribute this waightie charge, and to make Gouernours and Judges of every Tribe and Familie. And if Iethro had beene an Athiopian, it had beene a farre progreffe for him to have passed through all £gypt with the Wife and Children of Moles, and to have found Moles in the border of Idumaa: the Agyptians hating Moles and all that fauoured him. But the paffing of Moses through Arabia Petr.sa (which joyneth to Madian) prough that Moses was well acquainted in those parts: in which the second time he wandered fortie yeares, and did by these late traugiles of his seeke to instruct the children of Israel in the knowledge of one true God, before hee brought 20 them to the land of plentie and rest. For he found them nourished vp with the milke of Idolatrie, and obstinate in the Religion of the Heathen, and finding that those stiffe plants could not be bowed or declined, either by perswasion or by miracle, he ware them out in the deferts, as God directed, and grafted their branches anew, that from those hee might receive fruit, agreeable to his owne desire, and Gods Commandements.

Lastly, this opinion of Iosephus is condemned by Augustinus Chrisamensis, where also hereprehendeth Apollinaris, who anowed that Moses had married both Tharbis and Sephora: His owne wordes have this beginning. Mentitur etiam Arolli-sixt. Seneral. NARIS duas vxores habuille Mosen, er. Apollinaris also lyeth in affirming Bibl. 20 that MOSES had two wives: and who doth not perceive these thinges fained by them? for it is manifest that the wife of Moses was Zerhor, daughter to the Priest or President of Madian : and that Madian cannot bee taken for Athiopia beyond Azypt; being the same that ioneth to Arabia: so farre Chrisamensis.

t. III.

CHVSH ill expounded for Athiopia, EZECH. 29.10.

N Ow as Chush is by the Septuagint converted Athiopia, and the wife of Moses therefore called Athiopiss: so in the conquest of Nabuchodonosor is Athiopia written for Arabia. For by the wordes of Ezechiel it is manifest that Nabuchodonofor Exech 29.10. was neuer in Athiopia. Behold (faith Exechiel, speaking of the person of this great Assirian) I come upon thee and upon thy Rivers, and I will make the land of Ægypt utterly wast and defolate, from the Tower of Soueneh, even to the borders of the Black-moores: which last wordes should have beene thus converted: From the Tower of Seveneh to the borders of the Chusites or Arabians: betweene which two is situated all Egypt. For to fay, from the borders of Seueneh to the Athiopians, hath no fense at all. Seueneh it selfe being the border of Egypt, confronting and joyning to Ethiopia, or the land of the Black-Moores. So as if Nabuchodonofors conquest had beene but between 50 Seveneh and the border of Athiopia, it were as much to fay, and did expresse no other victorie then the conquest of all that land and Countrie, lying betweene Middlefex and Buckingham, where both the Countries iowne together; or all the North parts of England, betweene Barwick and Scotland: for this hath the same sense with the former, if any man fought to expresse by these two bounds, the conquest of England : Barwick beeing the North border of England, as Seueneh or Syene is the South bound of £gypt, seated in Thebaida which toucheth £thiopia. But by the words of Ezechiel it appeareth, that Nabuchodonofor neuer entred into any part of Æthiopia, although the Septuagint, the Vulgar, the Geneva, and all other (in effect ) have written Ethiopia for Chulh.

t. IIII.

An other place of EZECHIEL, c. 20. v.o. in like manner mistaken.

And as the former, so is this place of Ezeehiel mistaken, by being in this sort con-uerted. In die illa egredientur nuncij a facie mea in trieribus ad conterendam Æthiopia confidentiam: Which place is thus turned in English by the Geneuans. In that day Shall there messengers goe forth from mee in ships to make the carelesse Moores afraid. Now the Latine for (Thips) hath the Greeke word trieres for triremes which are Galleyes of three bankes, and not ships. But that in this place the translation should have beene (as in the former) amended by vling the word Chulb, or Arabia for Æethiopia or the black Moores, every man may fee which meanly understandeth the Geography of the world, knowing, that to passe out of Agypt into Athiopia there neede no galleys nor flips, no more then to paffe out of Northampton into Leicestershire: Athiopia being the conterminate Region with £gypt, and not divided so much as by a river. Therefore in this place of Ezechiel it was meant, that from Agypt Nabuchodonofor should fend galleys alongst the coast of the Red sea, by which an Army might bee transported into Arabia the happy and the stony (sparing the long wearisome march over all Egypt and the defarts of Pharan) which Army might thereby furprife them vnawares in their fecurity and confidence. For when Nabuchodonofor was at Seueneh within a mile of Æthiopia, hee needed neither Galley nor Shippe to paffe into it: beeing all one large and firme land with £gypt, and no otherwise parted from it, then one Inland shire is parted from an other ; and if hee had a fancy to have rowed up the river but for pleafure, hee could not have done it: for the fall of 30 Nilus (tumbling ouer high and steepy mountaines) called Catadupa Nili were at hand.

Lastly, as I have already observed, the sonnes of every father seated themselves as neere together as possibly they could, Gomer and his sonnes in Asia the leffe; Jauan and his fonnes in Greece and the Islands adjoyning; Shem in Persia and Eastward. So the sonnes and Grand-children of Chush from the river of Gehon (their fathers first feat) inhabited upon the fame, or upon fome other continuat unto it, as Nimrod and Hauilah on the one fide, and Saba, Sheba, and Sabtecha (with the rest) did on the other fide. And to conclude in a word, the Hebrewes had neuer any acquaintance or fellowship, any warre, treaty of peace, or other intelligence with the Athiopian blacke 40 moores, as is already remembred in the Chapter of Paradife.

A Place Es AY 18. v. 1. inlike manner corrupted by taking Chush for Ethiopia.

Nd as in these places before remembred, so in divers other is the word Athio-A Not as in these piaces before remember and in the form (where it is so vnderflood) quite out of square; one kingdome thereby being taken for another. For what sense 50 hath this part of Scripture Esay 18. Va terra Cymbalorum alarum qua est trans slumina Æthiopia, or according to the Septuagint in these words. Va terra nauium alarum qua est trans sluuios Æthiopia? Wo to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Athiopia, lending Ambassadors by sea cuen in vessels of reeds voon the waters. Ve terre ambrofa or a: Woe to the land of the shadie coast, faith Iunius. The former translators vnderstand it in this sense. That the waters are shadowed with the failes, which are significatively called the wings of the ships, the other, that the Coast of the Sea was shadowed by the height of the land.

But to the purpose: That this land heere spoken of by the Prophet E/ay is £2400 no Interpreter hath doubted. For they were the Agyptians that fent this meffage to the Israelites which Esay repeateth, and by the former translation every man may fee the transposition of Kingdomes: for hecreby Agypt is transported vnto the other fide of Athiopia, and Athiopia fet next vnto Indea, when it is the land of Chulh 10 and Arabia indeede that lieth between Iudaa and Agypt, and not Athiopia, which is seated vnder the Aquino tiall line. And of this Beroaldus asketh a materiall question (to wit) what Region that should be, of which the Prophet speaketh, and placeth it beyond the rivers of £thiopia: Nam de ignota agiregione dici nequit. For it cannot bee faid that he treateth of an unknowner egion. Now if Ethiopia it selfe be under the Agiino Etiall line, with whom the Jewes had neuer any acquaintance, why should any man dreame that they had knowledge of Nations farre beyond it again. and beyond the rivers of Ethiopia? except wee shall impiously thinke that the Prophet spake hee knew not what, or vsed an impertinent discourse of those nations. which were not discourred in 2000. yeares after, inhabiting as farre south as the 20 Cape of good hope, commonly knowne by the name of Bona esperanza.

t: V I.

That upon the like mistaking, both TERRHAKA in the story of SENA-CHERIB, and ZERA in the flory of As A are unaduisedly made Æthiopians.

A his retrait. For Senacherib was first repulsed at Pelusium, at the very entrance 30 of Agypt from Indea: when having certaine knowledge that Thirrhaca, (which all the interpreters call King of Ethiopia) was on the way to fet on him, he beganne to 16/2011, 10, 6, 1. withdraw himselfe; and fearing to leave his Army in two parts, he sent threatning messengers to Ezechia King of Juda perswading him to submit himselse : the tenour whereof is fet downe in the second of Kings in these words. Haue any of the Gods of the Nations delivered his land out of the hands of the King of Abur? Where is the God of Hamah? &c. By which proud Ambassage, if he had obtained entrance into Hierusalem, hee then meant to have vnited that great Army before Hierusalem commanded by Rabsekeh with the other which lay before Pelusium, a great City vpon the branch of Wilus next Arabia. For Senacherib had already maistered the most part of all those Kings 2, 19. 40 Cities in Iudes and Beniamin with a third Armie, (which himselfe commanded) being then at the fiege of Lebna. But vpon the rumour of that Arabian Armie led by their King Thirrhakeh (whom Iofephus calls Tharfices) Rabfakeh hafted from the liege Antiquito. of Hierusalem, and found Senacherib departed from Lachis and set down before Lebna, Kinzi 2.19. which was afterwards called Eleuthoropolis, as fome haue fuppofed. But while hee had ill fuccesse at Pelusium and feared Thirrhakeh, God him selfe whome he least feared strooke his Army before Hierusalem by the Angell of his power, so as 185000. were found dead in the place as in the life of Ezechias is hecreafter more largely written. And that this Army of Tirrakeh was from Arabia, Iofephus himselfe makes it plaine. For he confesseth in the tenth booke the first Chapter of the Jerres antiqui-

50 ties, that it was come to Senacheribs knowledge, that the Army which was a foote (both to relieue the Agyptians and the Iewes) marched towards him by the way of the Defert: Now the Defert which lay indifferent betweene Hierufalem and Pelu- L.10.64. fium, was that of Pharan or Sur which also toucheth on the three A-abiaes, to wit the stony, of which it is a part: the Desert, and the Happy; and by no other way in-deede could the Arabians come on to succour either Pelusium or Hierusalem, But, that there is any Defert betweene Pelulium and the South part of Egypt, hath neuer yet beene heard of, or described by any Cosmographer or Historian. So then this Scripture of the fecond of Kings, verse the ninth, hath the same mistaking as the reft. For here the word ( Chulb ) is also translated Ethiopia; and in this sense have all the Interpreters . (but Junius) expressed the beginning of the ninth verse. Hee heard also men say of THIRRHAKEH King of Æthiopia, &c. whereas it should have beene thus converted with Iunius. Audiens autem de THIRRHAKEH Rege

Chushi, He heard also of THIRRHAKEH King of the Chushites. For they were the Chasties and Arabians, whose houses and Citties were next the fire, and upon whom to the very smoke of Inda flaming was blowne, being their nearest neighbours; and so were not the Athiopian Black-Moores under the Aguinottial, whom neither warre nor peace (which discourrethall Regions) cuer found out, faith Plinie. For this King was no more King of Athiopia then Zerah was, who inuaded Afa King of Inand those Charriots should passe through all £zypt, (the Kings of £zypt being mightie Kings) let all menthat know how these Regions are seated, and how farre distant, judge. For Princes doe not easily permit Armies of a Million to runne through them; neither was there euer any fuch strength of Black-Moores heard lers or conquerours; and yet is this King Zerah alfo called King of £thiopia. But the word Chulb being first so converted for Ethiopia, the rest of the Interpreters

Of the Plantation and Antiquities of Egypt.

That MIZRAIM the chiefe planter of Azypt, and the rest of the Sonnes of HAM, were feated in order, one

He fecond Sonne of Hamwas Mizraim, who (according to the place of a second brother) was sent somewhat farther off to inhabite. For schulb first possess chulb first possess chuld a on the West side of Gebon chiesly: and from thence, as hee increased in people, so hee entred Arabia, and by time came to the border of the Red Sea, and to the Southeast-side of In-

dea. Mizraim his brother (with Phut) past ouer into Africa. Mizraim held Agypt: and Phut (as a third brother) was thrust farther off into Mauritania. Canaan tooke the Sea-coaft, and held the fide of Palaftina: and these foure brothers possest all that Tract of land, from Gehon in Chaldaa, as farre to the West as the Mediterran 20 Sea: comprehending all Arabia Deferta, and Petraa, all Canaan which embraceth Galilaa, Samaria, and Iudaa; with the two Egypts, whereof the nether is bounded by Memphis on the South, and by the Mediterran Sea on the North; and Thebaida (called the voper Levet) firetcheth it felfe toward the South as farre as Syene, the border of the Athiopians or Black-Moores. All the rest of the coast of Africa Westward Phut peopled; which brothers had not any other nation or familie that dwelt betweene them. And in the same manner did all their sonnes againe, and all the fonnes of the rest of Noahs children, fort themselves.

Oncerning these wordes in that eighteenth Chapter of Esii, Nanium alarum, 30 ninged ships, (so the Septuagint turne it) or Cymbalo alarum (according to the Latine) failes whistling in the windes, or terra umbrofa ora (after Iunius) the land of a shadowed coast, or the land shadowing with wings, as our English Geneua hath it. The two first interpretations of the Septuagint and St. Hierome have one sense in effect. For the failes are commonly called the wings of a ship; and we vie to say ordinarily when our thips faile flowly, that thee wanteth wings: (that is) when her failes are either worne or too narrow; and we also yie the same phrase of the winde whistling in the failes. And it may be that the Egyptians employed so many of those small ships, as their failes were faid to give a shadow over the Red Sea. But to make both interpretations good, Pintus (vpon Esai) affirmeth, that the word (Sabal) doth fignifie 40 both to shadow and to gingle (which is) to make a kinde of Cymbaline found; so as the meaning of this place (faith Pintus) is this. We to thee, O . A gypt, which does to remile to others lafegard, under the shadow of thy wings, which (indeede) seemeth to agree with the argument of the eighteenth Chapter of Efai: and this phrase is often elfewhere vsed, as in the fixteenth Pfalme, Sub umbra alarum tuarum protegeme, Defendme under the shadow of thy mings. The Boats of reede spoken of are of two kinds. either of basket; willow couered with hides (as anciently in Brittaine) or a tree made hollow in the bottome, and built upon both fides with Canes. Of the one fort I have seene in Ireland, of the other in the Indies.

Of the time about which the name of Agypt beganne to be knowne: and of the Ægyptians Lunarie yeares, which made their antiquities feeme the more fabulous.

This flourishing Kingdome posses by Mizraim, changed her ancient name, and became Agypt, at such time as Agyptus (otherwise Ramesses, as some thinke) the sonne of Belus chased thence his elder brother Danaus, shifting him into that part of Greece now called Morea, by whom the Argines were made Danai, abandoning their proper names: which happened 877, yeares after the floud, in the time 40 of Iosua, as S. Auzüsline coniectureth out of Eusebius. But in Hamers Odysses it appeareth that the Agyptians were so called at the time of the Troian warre. And before this, Egypt was knowne by divers other names, as Oceana, Aria, Ofiriana, &c. And Manethon (whom tofephus citeth in his first booke against Appion) numbreth all the Kings of Ægypt after Mofes departure, who confumed 393. yeares. By which other men coniecture, that the Egyptians tooke on them that name 330. yeares after Iosua, and about 1000, yeares after the floud. But where Iosephus in the same booke taketh Ifrael to be those Hyefos, which he also calleth Pastores or Sheep-heards, which are faid to have raigned in £gypt 7 11. yeares: whom also he calleth his Ancesters, (meaning the Ancesters of the Iewes) in this I am sure he was grosly decei-50 ued, or that he vainely boasted: for the Ifraelites had no such Dominion as Manethon faineth: nor abode in Egypt fo long a time by many yeares.

Of the Egyptian Antiquities there are many fancies in Trogus, Herodotus, Plato, Diod. Siculus, Mela, and others. For they affirme (faith Pomp. Mela) that there had raigned in Agypt 330. Kings before Amasis, who was contemporarie with Cyrus; and that they had memorie and floric of 13000, yeares; and that the flarreshad foure times changed their courfe, and the Sunne twice fet in the Eaft. Thefe riddles are also rife among the Athenians and Areadians, who dare affirme that they are more ancient then their and the Moore, whereof Ond?

To which considered of Mentator, Peresian maketh this answere. That therein Mentator was first described, because he taketh it for granted, that the beginning of the sixteenth Dynassie was at once with the generall should; which Euslehus maketh 292, yeares as first, and in the time of Abraham. Thirdly, whereas Moreator maketh eugle Dynassia to endure 115, yeares, Eugleshus reckonch many of them at less than 100, yeares; for the 28. had but 6 yeares; the 29, but 20, and the 30, but Now Annius in his Supplement of Manuhan affirmeth, That all these 15. Dynafites latebach ut 16. yeares: and that the first of the 15. beganne but in the 131. yeare after the floud: So as where Maretar makes all the 15. to precede the floud, and the 16. to have beene then in being at the time of the floud, Annius makes them all after it. But the contrairetice of failthood cannot bee hidden, though disguised. For Annius had forgotten his former opinion and affertion, that it was in the 131. yeare that Normod with the somes of North came into the Valley of Shinsar: So hee forgets the time which was consumed in the building of 8 Adol: and that before the confusion of speech there was no dispersion, nor farre-off plantation at all. And though he hashly conveyed Gome into Buile, and Tubal into Spine, in the 10. yeare of Normodariague: (which was ten yeares after his arrivall into Subspins) yet berein he is more vinadused. For he makes Agypt possess, and a government established in the very first yeare of the arrivall of Namoral into Shinsar, before all partition, or 50 any expedition sure off or nearein question: for from themse (that is, from Bubel) did the Land (Easter them year all the cart).

Against PERERIUS: that it is not whikely, but that Agypt was peopled within 200, years after the creation; at least, that both it, and the most parts of the world were peopled before the sloud.

By twhereas Pereius seeketh to ouerthrow this Antiquitie of the Agyptims, touching their Dynglies, (which Ensseins do thin a talogather destroy, but leften I doe not finde any great strength in this opinion of Pereius; (to wit) that it was either whilely or impossible that Egypt should bee peopled within 100. or 200, yeares after I dam, in the first age. And whereas he suppossed that it was not inhabited at all before the generall should, doe verify believe the contrarie: and that not only of Egypt, but the better part of all the world was then peopled: Pereius his wordes are these. Now feeing that the Scriptures are filent herein, and that it is no point of our fauing beleefe, it is lawfull for enery man to be guided in this and the like queftions by the beftreafon, circumflance, and likelyhood, and herein, as in the reft, I proteft that I doe not gainfay any mans opinion out of any croffing or cauelling humour: for I thinke it the part of euery Chriftian, rather to reconcile differences, where there is poffibilitie of vnion, then out of froward fubbletic, and predidicate refoluednesse, to maintaine factions needlesse, and dangerous contentions.

First, therefore to this opinion, that Agypt was not planted so soone after Adam, no, not at all before the floud, I fay that there is no reason why wee should give a 30 leffe increase to the sonnes of Adam, then to the sonnes of Noah. For their length of life, which exceeded those which came after the floud double, and (after a few years) treble, is an infallible proofe of their strength and abilitie, to beget many children: and at that time they observed no degrees of kindred; hor consanguinitie. And that there was a speedie increase of people; and in great numbers, it may in some fort appeare by this, that Cain, who (being fearefull that the death of Abel would haue been reuenged on him ) withdrew himfelfe from the reft, which were afterward begotten, and dwelt in the land of And, and there, by the helpe of his owne iffues built a Cittie, (called Enoch) after the name of his first borne. Now if it bee gathered that Nimrod came into the Valley of Shinaar with fo many multitudes, as fuf-40 ficed to build the Cittie and Tower of Babel: and that to this increase there was giuen but 130. yeares by Berofus, and after the account of the Scriptures (reckoning, as it is commonly understood, by the birth of Arphaxad, Selah, Heber, and Phalegh) but one hundred and one yeare: I fee no cause to doubt, but that in the infancie of the first age, when the bodies of men were most perfect, euen within 130. yeares, the fame (if not a greater) number might be increased, and so within 70 years after (that is, by such time as the world had stood 200 yeares) aswell Asserting, Syria, and Egypt might be possess before the floud; as they were within the same or lesse time after it. Neither doth it agree with the circumstance, or true storie of the Babylonian and Affyrian Empire, that all those people, which were increased in the first 50 hundred or 130. yeares after the floud, came into Shinaar and Babylonia. For that'e ucr 2 oah himselfe came out of the East, as there is no Scripture or Authoritieto prone it, fo all probable conjecture and reason it selfe denies it. Againe, those multitudes and powerfull numbers, which Semiramis (but the third from Nimrod) found in India, confidered with her owne Armie of three Millions, (and shee left not all her Kingdomes emptie) doe well proue, that if the world had fuch plende of people in fo few yeares after the floud, it might also bee as plentifully filled in like time before it. For after their owne account Ninus gouerned Babylonia and Affiria but 292, yeares after the floud of Nadh. And the ctroupes of Semirania were gathered out of all those Eastern Kingdomes, from Media to the Mediterran Sea, when there had now past from the floud to the time of this her inualion, somewhat leffe or more then 360, yeares : for much more time the true Chronologie cannot allow: though I confesse, that in respect of the strange greatnesse of Semiramis Armie, and the incredible multitudes gathered, this is as short a time as can well be giuen. And if but the one halfe be true of that which is faid, That her Armie conli- 10 fled of 1200000, footmen, and 500000, horsemen, it must needes bee, that long before Semiramis raigne, the greatest part of Asia (whence her huge Armie was gathered) was full of people : yea Arabia it felfe (much part whereof is barren) must long before this time of Semiramis haue beene plentifully peopled; when Ninus hauing a determination to make himfelfe Master of all Nations, entred (notwithstanding) in league with the King thereof: whom therefore he either feared, or fought his affiftance. And if Arabia were then so well replenished, I see no cause but Agypt might also be peopled. Now if wee may beleeve Trogus Pompeius (Epitomiz'd sypt migred of the proposed. For it we character that the proposed for a most flourishing and magnificent Nation before Yunus was borne. For the see be his ownewordes, speaking of Yimus. Fuere quident empo-20 ribus antiquioribus V Ex 0 R 18 Rex Legypti, &c. But there were in times more assistent VEXORIS King of Ægypt, and TANAIS King of the Scythians: of which the one inuaded Pontus, the other Egypt. And how full of people all that part of the world was, the conquefts of Ninus witnesse, who subdued with no small force the Armenians, the Medes, and afterwards the Bactrians; yea, all that whole body of Asia on this fide India. For Diodorus out of Ctefias numbreth the Armie, wherewith Ninus inuaded Zoroaster, at 1700000. footmen, and 200000. horsemen; and the stories generally shew, that though Zoroasters Armie was farre short of this, yet it was greater then any that those parts of the world euer fince beheld. But to what end should I feeke for forraine authoritie ? for no man doubteth but that £gypt was possest by 30 Mizraim, the fonne of Ham; and that it was an established Kingdome, filled with many Citties in Abrahams time, the Scriptures tell vs. And fure to prepare and cultiue a defolate and ouergrowne ground, to beautifie it with many Citties, Lawes, and pollicies, cannot be efteemed a labour of a few dayes; and therefore it must bee inhabited in a leffe time then 200, yeares after the floud; and in the fame time (if not in a shorter) before the floud. For if so many Millions of men were found within 300. yeares after the general floud; fo as not only Bablon, and Affria, Battra, Armenia, Media, Arabia, Atgpt, Palafima, yea the fare-off Lybia on the one fide, and India on the other, and Septida (inferiour to neither) were all filled: into what fmall corners could then all those nations be comprest, which 1656. yeares brought 40 forth before the floud ? euen necessitie, which cannot bee resisted, cast the abundance of mens bodies into all parts of the knowne world; especially, where Death forbare the Father, and made no place for the Sonne, till he had beheld living Nations of his owne body.

†. V.
Of some other reasons against the opinion of Pererivs.

FOr what a strange increase did the long liues of the first age make, when they 50 continued 800, or 900, yeares. Surely, we hauereason to doubt, that the world could not contain ethen, rather then that the they were not spred ouer the world. For let vs now reckon the date of our liues in this age of the world: wherein if one exceeds 50, yeares, ten for one are cut off in that passinge, and yet we find no want of people; because people; nay, we know the multitude fuch, as if by warres or petitlence they were not fornetimes taken of by many thoufands, the earth with all the induftrie of man could not guite them toods. What thrange heapes then of bules had the first age, who entoyed 800 or 900, yeares, as aforefaid. Thefe numbers, I fay, canhot bee counted not conceived. For it would come to the first erckoning in effect, as if all those which have been gborne in Reitaune since 3, or 4, bundred yeares before the Norman Conquest (laung slight as by accident of by violence were cut off) were now aline; and if to these, there were added as many as by Polygame might have been increased. For (to onjut, that the Giants and mightie ones of the first age observed a no law of marrimonics) is to be though that those lourse of the world and of pleafure, when they knew, the long and liberall time which Nature had given them, would not, willingly or haftily prefent themselves to any danger which they could flie from or ofchew. For what humane argument hath better perswassion to make men carefule of lite, and carefulle of death, then the little time which keepes them afunder, and that short time also accompanied with 6 many paines and disease, which this enuious old age of the world mingleth together, and soweth with the feedes of mankinde?

Now if that Berefusor Annies may be alleaged for fufficient Authours whom Pererus himselfein this question citeth, then is it by them affirmed, and by to feebus 20 confirmed, that the Cittle of Enoch was feated neare Lybanus in Syria: and if other parts of Syria were peopled in Cainstime, Hee no cause why Palestina (which is also a Prounce of Syria) and Agypt (which neighbourethit) could bee left desolate both all the life time of Cain, and all those times betweene his death and the floud. which weige by elimation 70.00 is 800, years. And fur though this Fragment of Berofus with Annius his Comment bee very ridiculous in many places (the ancient Coppies being corrupted or folt) yet all things in Berofus are not to bee rejected. Therefore S. fine owne for fuch Authours gives a goodrule. Bona corum edgamus, cutterms.contrains, Let vichoofe what is good in them, and reiect the reit. And certainly in the yexy beginning of the first Booke, Berofus agreeth (in effect) with Mofes, touch 30 ing the generall floud, and in that first part Berosus affirmeth, that those mightie Men and Giants which inhabited Enoch, commanded ouer all Nations and subjected the valuerfall world: and though that phrase (of all the world) be often yied in the Scriptures for a part thereof; as in the second of the Acts. That there were dwelling at Hierusalem Iewes, menthat feared God of euery Nation under heaven: yet by wordes which follow in Berofus, it is plaine that his wordes and sense were the same: for hee addeth from the Sunnes rifing to the Sunnes fetting, which cannot be taken for any fmall part thereof. Againe, we may fafely conjecture, that Woah did not part and proportion the world among his fonnes at aduenture, or left them as discouerers. but directed them to those Regions which he formerly knew had beene inhabited. 40 And it cannot be denyed that the earth was more passable and easie to trauaile ouer before the floud, then after it. For Pererius himfelfe confesseth, that Attica (by reabenote the house in the care to prove the care by was whinhabited 200, yeares after ogges floud, whereby weemay gather that there was no great pleasure in passing into sarre Countries after the general deluge, when the earth lay (as it were) incopfed for 100 or 130 yeares together. And therefore was the face there-of in all coniccure more beautifull, and leffe cumber fome to walke ouer, in the first age then after the generall overflowing.

Aftly, whereas Pererius drawes this argument out of the last Versc of the tenth Lof Genelis. And out of thele were the Nations divided after the floud : Quo significatur talem divisionem non fuisse ante diluvium, By which it appeareth (faith Pererius) that there was no fuch division before the floud; which he also seeketh to confirme out of theeleventh of Genesis, because the division of tongues was cause of the dispersion of the 18 people. This consequence, quo significatur, &c. seemeth to me very weake: the text it felfe rather teaching the contrarie : for out of thefe (faith Moses) were the Wations divided in the earth after the floud; inferring, that before the floud the Nations were diuided out of others, though after the floud out of these only. But whatsoever fense may be gathered from this place, yet it can no way be drawne to the times before the floud, or to any plantation or diuision in that age: for if there were none else among whom the carth could be divided after the floud, but Woahs Sonnes. wherein doth that necessarie division controle the planting of the world before it? And whereas it is alleaged that the consusion of speech was the cause of this disperfion, it is true, that it was fo for that present; but if Babel had neuer beene built, not 20 any confusion of languages at all, yet increase of people and time would have enforced a farther-off and generall plantation : as Berofus faics well, that when mankinde were exceedingly multiplyed, ad comparandas nouas sedes necessitas compellebat, They were driven by necessitie to feeke new habitations. For wee finde (as is before said) that within 300. yeares after the floud, there were gathered together into two Armies, fuch multitudes as the valley about Babylon could not have fuftained those numbers with their increase for any long time : all Afia the greater and the leffer; all Scythia, Arabia, Palastina, and Ægypt, with Greece, and the Islands thereof; Mauritania and Lybia being also at that time fully peopled. And if we beleeue Berofus, then not only those parts of the world, but (within 140, yeares after the floud) Spaine, Italie., 30 and France were also planted: much more then may wee thinke, that within 1656. yeares before the floud, in the time of the chiefe ftrength of mankinde, they were replenished with people. And certainely seeing all the world was ouerflowne, there were people in all the world which offended.

t. VII.

A conclusion, resoluting of that which is most likely, touching the Ægyptian antiquities: with somewhat of PHVT (another Sonne of HAM) which peopled Lybia.

Herefore, for the Antiquitie of the Egyptians, as I doe not agree with Merca-I tor, nor judge with the Vulgar, which give too much credit to the Egyptians antiquities: fo I doe not thinke the report of their Antiquities fo fabulous, as either Pererius or other men conceiue it. But I rather incline to this, That Egypt being peopled before the floud, and 200. or 300. yeares, more or leffe after Adam, there might remaine vinto the Sonnes of Mizraim some monuments (in Pillers or Altars of stone or mettall) of their former Kings or Gouernours: which the Agyptians hauing added to the lift and rolle of their Kings after the floud, in succeeding time (out of the vanitie of glorie, or by some corruption in their Priests) something beyond the truth might be inferted. And that the memorie of antiquitie was in such fort preserved, Berosus affirmeth it of the Chaldaans, and so doth Epigenes. For they both write, that the vie of Letters and the Art of Astronomie was knowne to the Babylonians 3634. yeare before Alexanders conquest : and this report Annius findeth to agree and reach to the time of Enolp, who was borne 1034. yeares before the floud, and wrote of the worlds destruction, both by Water and Fire; as also of Christ his comming in judgement, as St. Iude hath witneffed. But leaving these Antiquities to other mens judgements, and every man to his owne reason, I will conclude this plantation of Agypt. It is agreed by all, that it was peopled by Mizraim, and that it tooke the name of Agypt from Agyptus the sonne of Belus, as aforesaid. Being diuided into two Regions, that part from Memphis or Nicapolis to the Mediterran Sea, was called the inferiour Ægypt; surnamed also Delsa: because the secural branches of Nilus breaking afunder from one body of the River, gave it the forme 10 of the Greeke letter Delta, which is the forme of a Triangle. That branch, which ranne toward the North-east and embraced the Sea, next vnto the Leserts of Sur and Pharan, had on it the Cittie of Pelusum, where Senacherib was repulsed: The other branch, which yeelded it selfe to the salt water towards the North-west, is beautified by that famous Cittie of Alexandria: The vpper part of Egypt is bounded betweene Memphis and Syene neare Ethiopia, and had the name of Thebaida, of that ancient Cittle of Thebes, which (according to Homer) was adorned with 100. gates: and therefore called Civitas centum portarum; and by the Greekes Diofpolis; in the Scriptures No-hamon, which fignifieth multitudes of inhabitants, exceeding beliefe. Iofephus cals Azypt Mersin of Mizrain: and Herodotus affirmes that it had Iofeth I. 1. Ant.

Phut the third sonne of Ham tooke the next portion of land to his brother Mezraim, and inhabited Lybia: whose people were anciently called Phutei; (fayth Infephus ) and Plinie mentioneth the river Fut in Mauritania : which river from the L.5.1. mountaine Atlas (knowne to the inhabitants by the name of Dyris) he maketh to be distant the space of two hundred miles. It also appeareth in the thirtieth chapter of Ezechiel, that Phut, Chufh and Lud were contermini and affociates with the A-

Then the border of the Canaanites was from Zidon as thou go-

Of the Gergesites, Heuites and Harkites.

The fift fonce of Canaan was Gergefeus or Gergefion, (otherwife Girgafi) who inhabited on the East fide of the lake of Tiberius, or the Sea of Galilee, where Ptolomie fets the Cittie Gerafa, which Tofephus calles Gefera in the territorie of Decapolis. Here it was that Christ disposses the possessed with Diuels; and the Gergefiles defired him to depart their coastes : because their swine filled with the cuill spirits drowned themselves in the Seaof Galilee. Gergeseus also built Berytus (sometime Geris) afterward Falix Iulia, three miles from the river Adonis in Phanicia: in which the Romanes held a garrifon : and to which Augustus gaue manielarge

Heucus the fixth fonne; and Father of the Heutes; inhabited under Libanus neere Emath. These Heuites, howsoeuer the Caphthorim expelled a good part of them (as in Deuteronomie the second is remembred) yet many of them remained all the warre of Iosua, and afterward to the time of Salomon. For God was not pleased vtterly to roote out these Nations, but they were sometimes made Tributaries to the Ifraelites, and at other times ferued (in their falling away from the true worship of God) to afflict them : for as it is written Judges the third; They remained to prove Is RAEL by them, whether they would obay the Commandements of God.

The feuenth fonne was Araceus or Harki, who betweene the foote of Libanus 30 and the Mediterran Sea, (ouer against Tripolis) built the Cittie of Archas, Arce, or Arca, afterwards Arachis.

CINEVS the eighth Sonne Hierofolymitanus fets at Caparorfa, which Ptolomie finds S in Induanot farre from Iebus; to the South thereof, faith Innius. But it is more probable, that Sineus founded Sin, which S. Hierome cals Sim; Ptolomie Simyra: Me-40 la and Plinie Smyrus: Brochard Sycon, (called Synochis) neare Arca, Pererius thinkes that Sineus inhabited the Deferts of Sinai or thereabout; but hereof there is no other certaintie then the report of Brochard, who tooke vew of all these places, affirming that Sineus built Synochis, as Zidon built Zidon. There is also another Nation of Cini (written with the letter C. otherwife Kenei) who descended of Hobab the Sonne of Raquel the Madianite, who affifted the Ifraelites in their conduction through the wildernesse of Pharan. But these Cinai were admitted among the Israelites, and had a portion of Land with the Nephtalims, belide their habitations with the ludge. Amalekites: against these Cinei Balaam prophecied, that they should be destroyed by 10/114,1935; the Affyrians.

The ninth Sonne was Aradeus or Aruadeus, who in the Isle of Aradus built the Gultyr. Vitria, Cittie Arados: opposite against which Island on the maine of Phanicia, they founded another Cittie of that name, which for opposition was afterwards called Antaradus. To this Cittie came S. Peter (faith Clement) and in this Isle preached the Gofoell : and founded a Church in honour of our Ladie : but wee finde no fuch worke of his in the Acts of the Apoffles. Both the wwere very famous: and places of skilfull Sca-men: whom Exceled remembreth in his prophecies against the Tyrians, The inhabitants of Zidon and Arnadwere thy Marriners.

OF Samareus, or Zemari, the tenth Sonne, there are divers opinions. Some thinke that he first inhabited in Culespria at Edessa, and founded Samaraim, 10 which in Iofua is placed in the Tribe of Beniamin. There is also Samaraijm ( of the Bereal in Chron. fame Orthographie) vpon the mountaines of Ephraim (faith Berealdus) mentioned in the second of Chronicles c. 12. v.4. which the Latine converteth amisse (faith hee) by Semeron. The Hierofolymitan Paraphrasi makes Samureus (of whom were the Perizzises) the parent of the Emissian, which Plinie calls the Hemisenian Calesyria; and it may be that it was their first habitation, and that they afterwards inhabited those other places before remembred. But that they founded Samaria, both the Hebrew Orthographic, and this place in the first of Kings (speaking of Omri ) disproueth. 1. Kines 16.28. And he bought the mountaine Samaria or Shemeron of one SHEMER, for two talents of filter, and built in the mountaine : and called the name of the Cittie which he built, after the 20 name of SHEMER, Lord of the mountaine Samaria. But of all these places I shall focake more at large in the conquest of the holy Land, by the children of Israel, Of whomfocuer the Samuitanes were descended, sure I am, that they were euer a perfidious Nation, and base: for as long as the state of the lewes stood vp, they alwaies called themselves terres: when it suffered or sanke, they then vtterly denyed to be of that Nation or Familie; for at fuch time as they were returned from their first captiuitie, they became a mixt Nation; partly of the Colonies of the Affyrians; and partly of the naturals.

"I" He last of Canaons Sonnes was Hamatheus, or (according to the Hebrew) Hamathi, of Hamath: (faith Beroaldus) of which (the afpiration taken away) the fame is pronounced Emath, whereof Hamatheus was parent. Infephus and St. Hierome confound Emath with Antioch, not that Antioch which flandeth on the River Oranies, on the frontier of Comagena, betweene the mountaine Cassus and the Prouince of Pieria, and Seleneis, of which S. Peter was Bilhop, and in which S. Luke and Ignatius were borne : but antioch, furnamed Epiphania, as Beroaldus fuppofeth, 40 which standerh betweene Apamea and Emefain Cassiotis. Yet, indeede, Emash cannot be taken for either: for both that Antioch vpon Orontes, and that which neighboureth Emela, are farther off feated from Canaan, then ever any of those Nations stragled. And whereas S. Hierome setteth Emith, which hee confoundeth with Epiphania, in the Tribe of Nephtali; it is manifest, that Epiphania, which standeth to the North of Emela, hath all the Prouince of Landicea, betweene it and any part of the land divided. And if Libanon it felfe were not shared among the Tribes, then could not Epiphania belong vnto them: for both the Prouinces Landicea and Liberita, are betweene Epiphania and any part of the holy Land . and therefore Emails fo taken could not be a part of Nephtali, as in the thirteenth of Infants directly proued. 50 For Isfua counting the lands that remained unpoffest, reckoneth all mount Lib mon towards the Sunne-riling from Badgad vnder mount Elermon, vntill we come to Hamath. And this reason (among others) is vsed, that Emath was not in Nephtalim, or any way belonging to the children of Ifrael: because Davidaccepted the presents of Tohu King of Emath, and (therewithall) conditions of peace : which hee would not have done, if that Territoric had ever belonged to the children of Ifrael, but would haue recoursed it without composition, and by strong hand, as he did the rest. But this Argument (as I take it) hath no great waight. For if the promise which God made be considered, as it is written in Deuteronomie, then might Emath bee compre- c.11, v.24, hended, though feated altogether without the bounds of the Land promifed, according to the description of Moles and Iolua: for Emath is indeed fituate on the other fide of the mountaine of Hermon, which iowneth to Libanus : and is otherwise called Iturea. But whereas Hamath is named in Tofua the 19.0.35. and written in the 10 Latine conversion Emath, therein (faith Beroaldus) was S. Hierome mistaken. Emath or Iturea is that ouer the mountaines, and the Cittie in Nephtalim should bee written Hamath: and so the Septuagint (vinderstanding the difference) write it Ammath and not Emath, the same which indeede belonged to the Nephtalims, scated on the south fide of Libanus, to the East of Affedim: which Cittie S. Hierome writes Emath , Joseph phus Hamath; others Emathin; or Amatheos; and the people Amathein; of which (as I take it) Rablakeh vaunteth in the second of Kings. Where is the God of Hamath. †. I

That the most of the Sonnes of CHV s it were feated in Arabia the Happic: and of the Sabaans that robbed IOB: and of the Queene that came to SALOMON.

Es A or Saba was the eldeft Sonne of Chulb; the eldeft Sonne of Ham; to make a difference between him as 11. to make a difference betweene him and his Nephew Sheba; the Sonne of his brother Raama, or Regma (or Ragma after Montanus) his name is written with a fingle (s) Samech, and Sheba the Sonne of Regma with an (s) afpirate, which is the Hebrew Schin. Seba the eldeft sonne of Chush, Regmahis brother, and Shebathe sonne of Regmaposses both the shores of Arabia Falix. Saba tooke that part toward the Red Sea, as nearest his Father Chulb, and the land of the Chulites: Regma and Sheba the East coast of the same Arabia which looketh into the Gulfe of Perlia; of which Plinie. Sabei Arabum populi propter thuraclarisimi ad vtrag, maria porrect is gentibus habitant. The Sabaans people of Arabia; famous for their Frankincense, extending their Nations dwell along both the Seas (to wit) the Persian, and the Arabian, or Red Sea. This Countrie was afterwards called Arabia, à populi mixtione, saith Postellus. To this agreeth Ptolomie, who setteth the Cittie of Saba towards the Arabian or Red Sea, and the Cittie Rhegama towards 50 the Persian, with whom also wee may leave Sabta: for so much Montanus gathereth out of Ptolomie, because he remembreth a Nation (called Stabei) neare the Persian Sea; and Maffabatha which descended of them. But Montanus hath sent Regma, or (as he cals him Rahma) into Carmania, for which I fee no reason. Iosephus, who only attended his owne fancies, hath banished Saba or Seba to the border of Ethiopia.

But Beroaldus thinks it strange, that the Sabsi, which stole away tobs Cattle, should runne through all Agypt and all Arabia Petres, and finde out tob in Traconitis betweene Paleltina and Calefyria 1200. miles off. Now as this coniecture was more then ridiculous, so doe I thinke, that neither the Sabei on the Red Sea, northose toward the Persian Sea, could by any meanes execute the stealth ypon 10b, which soeuer Beroaldus shall take for nearest. But these were the Sabai of Arabia the Defert, where Guilandinus Melchior affirmeth out of his owne experience, that the Cittie Saba is scated : the same which Ptolomie cals Sane , now Sems for and from this Saba in Arabia the Defert, came those Migior Wifemen which worthipped Christ, faith Melchior, whose wordes are these. The Magi came neither out of Mesopotamia (as 10 Chryfostome, Hierome, and Ambrose Supposed) nor out of Arabia the Happie, as many wife men doe beleeue, but out of Sabain Arabia the Defert : which Citie when my felfe was there was (as I indged it) called Semifesfac. And to approug this opinion of Guilandinus it appeareth that these Shahei were neighbours to Job, and lay fit to inuade and rob him. For both the other Nations (afwell those on the Persian Sea, as those on the Red Sea) are so distoyned with large Deferts, as there is no possibilitie for strangers to paffethem, especially with any numbers of Cattle, both in respect of the mountaines, of the fands, and of the extreme want of water in those parts. Vbi nechomines nee bestie videntur, nee aues, imò nee arbores, nee germen aliquod, sed non nisi montes saxosi, altisimi, asperimi, Where there are found neither men nor beasts, no not somuch as birds, 20 or trees, nor any passure or grasse, but only sharpe, and high stonic, and craggie mountaines. Beroaldus and Pererius conceine, that the Queene of Saba which came to visite Salomon, was of the Sabai on the East fide of Arabia Falix; but the contrarie seemeth more probable, and that shee was Queene of Sabatowards the Red sea: for Salamon at that time commanding all that part of Arabia Petraa, twixt Idumaa and the Red Sea, as farre downe as Midian or Midian, and Ezion Gaber : and this Queene of Saba which inhabited the West part of Arabia Faelix, being his neighbour, might without any farre trauaile enter his Territories, free from all danger of furprise by any other Prince or Nation.

But to avoide tediousnesse, it is manifest that Seba or Saba, Sabta, Raama, or Regma, 30 with his Sonnes Sheba and Dedan, and Sabteea, were all the possessions of Arabia the Happic and the Defert: only Hauilah and Nimrod dwelt together on the East side of Chulb, who held Arabia Petres. Now for Sabta, there is found of his name the Plin. 1.12.6.14. Cittle of Sabbatha or Sabota in the fame Arabia: of which both Plinie and Ptolomie; Prol. 14th 6. Afric. who withall nameth Sakotale, within the wals whereof there were fometimes found fixtie Temples. Ezechiel ioyneth the Father and the Sonne together, The Overchants of Shebs and Rasma were thy Merchants. And that they were the Easterne Arabians their merchandife witneffeth, formerly repeated in the Chapter of Paradife. For tolephus his fancies, that Saba was the parent of the Athiopians about Meroe, and Sabta of the Ethiopians Affabari, they be not worthicany farther answere then 40 hath already been ginen: especially seeing these Citties preserving the memorie of the names of Saba and of Sabra in Arabia were yet remaining in Ptolomies time, though in some letters changed. As also in the coasts adiopning, the names of other of the brethren of the familie of Cufb, with little alterations are preserved. In Arabia the Defert is found the Cittie Saba or Saue, (now Semileafae) with the Cittie of Rhegans for Rhegma; and the Nation by Ptolomie himselfe called Raabeni of Raamah. In Arabia the Happie is found the Cittie of Rhegama, and Rabana, which also keepeth the found of Rhegma; the Citic of Saptha or Saptab, not far from the East coast of Arabia: as also the Metropolis and chiefe citie, in the body of the South part of Arabia, called without difference or alteration Sabatha; and to the West of Sabatha towards the 50 Red Sea the great Citic of Saba; and the Nation adjoyning, Sabai: and to the fouth thereof against oward the streight entrance of the Red Sea, the Region of Sabe. To all these his Brothers and Nephewes which were seated on the East side of Arabia, Havilah by the passage of Tigris was a neighbour, to whom he might passe by boate euen vnto Rhegma the Cittle of Raama, or Rhegma, fet neare the River of Lar towards the mouth of the Perlian Sea, which stood in Ptolomies time.

I o serhvs his opinion of Dedan, one of the issue of Chush to have beene feated in the West Æthiopia, disproved out of Ezech:

A Nd whereas Infephus (whom in this St Hierome followeth, as not curious herein) fent Dedan the fonne of Raamah into West Ethiopia, it is strange that Ezezhiel should couple Sheba, Raamah, and Dedan together; Dedan in the 15, verse, and Sheba and Raamah in the 22 verses to be the merchants of Tyre, if Dedan had dwelt in West . Ethiopia, which is distant from Raamah and Sheba (the habitation of his father and brother) about 4000 miles. Besides which the Marchandise that the Dedanites brought to Tyredoth not make them naked Black-mores. For they of Dedan (faith Ezechiel) were thy merchants in pretious clothes for thy charriots; and these Westerne Athiopians neuer faw cloth, till the Portugals seeking those Coastes traded with them : the merchandise of the Countrie beeing Hides, Elephants teeth, some 20 Gold and Amber, Ciuet cattes, and Rice, but nothing at all of any manufacture:

and all these they exchanged for linnen, or iron cheesly.

But in those daies the West part of Africa within the body of the land was known onely by imagination: and, beeing vnder the burnt. Zone was held vninhabitable. And therefore that the Negros of the West Ethiopia, which inhabite about Serra Liona, or Niger, could either paffe by Sea or Land to Tyre in the bottome of the Mediterran Sea, were a strange, or rather a foolish fancie. Now to put it out of dispute that Dedan also dwelt by the rest of the children of Chulb, which seates they held by that name in the time of Hieremie the Prophet let vs heare Hieremie his own words. Flie yee inhabitants of Dedan, for I have brought the destruction of Es Av vpon him.

30 Hecreby it appeareth that Dedan was a neighbour to the Idumarans: and Idumara is a Province of Arabia Petras : and Dedan which dwelt on the North part of Arabia Falix, joyned in that part to Petras, the feat of his Grand-father Chulb; which neighbor-hood and fellow thip of Dedan and the Idumarans is also confirmed by Executed, Executed as I will firetch out mine hand upon Edom, and destroy Man and Beast out of it, and I will mike ver. 15. it desolate from Teman; and they of Dedan shall fall by the sword.

Lud; but he is differenced from Lud the fonne of Mizzaim by the fingular number: Plural number, as gim of the sonne of shem beeing written Lud, the sonne of Mizraim Ludin : and yet these the dual. names and nations are often confounded, not withflanding the apparent difference 50 both of names and nations. For that Ludin the some of Mizrain was the parent of the Lybians in Africa, and that hee was feated not farre from Mizraim his father, appeareth by the Prophet Hieremie, who ioyneth them in this fort together. Come up C1.46.ver.9. ye Horfes, and rage ye Charriots, and let the valiant men come foorth, the Black-moores, and the Lybians which beare the shield: for those Nations assisted the Egyptians beeing of

And PHVT and LVD, and all the common people, and the men of the land that are inleague shall fall with them by the fivord : which is as much to fay, as the fonnes of Chufb; (which were the Chuftes) the Sonnes of Mizraim, (which were the Egyptians) and the Lybians, (descended of his sonne Lud) with other the inhabitants of Agypt and Africa shall fall together. Hierofolymitanus finds also in Africa a Nation of the Lydians. And I beleeue it : because Hieremie joyneth the Lybians and Lydians together in the place before remembred: But Lybia in Africa is by the Hebrew called Ludim (faith Arias Montanus ) though 2. Chron 12.2, they feeme to be called Lubim or Lubei, a name fomewhat nearer the 10 word Lybies, and by which it may feeme that the truer writing is, not Libyes, but Lybies. Neither is it here to be omitted, that Pintus ( vpon the thirtieth of Ezechiel) understandeth that which is spoken in the third Verse of Lud, not to be meant of the Librars at all: for he will have this threatning to be meant against the people of Lyda, a Cittie (faith he) betweene Egypt and Paleflina, which opinion I could not miflike if the Cittle of Lyda were so seared. But Lyda (which should be written Lydda with a double D, and is the same Cittie which was afterward Diospolis, in which S. Peter cured Aneas of the palley) standeth neare the Torrent Gaas, not farre from Joppe the Port of Hierufalem. Yet it is not impossible but that this Cittie might have Lud for the Founder. For there are many Citties of one name founded in all the 20 Regions of the world, and farre afunder; as after the names of Alexander, Selevicus, and Antiochus, many Citties called Alexandria, Seleucia, and Antiochia, fo of diucrs others. S. Hierome maketh Lehabim to bee the Father of Libya who was the third fonne of Mizraim : and fo doth Postellus; and either opinion may be true.

The rest of Mizrains Sonnes have no proper Countries given them in the Scriptures, fauing Callubim and Caphtorim, of whom came the Philistims, whom the Scrip-

These Callubim inhabited Casiotis, a region lying in the entrance of Agypt from Palestina, in which the Lake Sirbonis and the mountaine Cassius are found: not farre

from whence Pompey was buried.

Caphtorim scated neare Cassum in that Trast of Azypt called Sethroitis, not farre from Pelusium. Strabo cals it Sethroitis; Stephanus and Plinie Sethroites, of the Cittie Seilron: which Ortelius takes to bee the fame which Ptolomie cals Hercules parua. Of the Callulim and Caphtorim carne the Philistims, which are called by the Septuagint Allophyli (which is) Alienigena, strangers, or of a strange kindred. These Philistims inhabited the South part of the holy Land towards Egypt, of whom Palastina tooke name. For the Hebrewes (faith Isidore) doe not vie the letter (P) but in stead of it (ph.) Their principall Citties were Gaza, Ascalon, Azotus, Geth, and Accaron: and the people of them called Gafei, Afcalonita, Azotij, Gethai, and Accaronita. Midore affirmes that Acadon was first called Philistim: and of that Cittiethe Coun- 40 trie adjoyning. But where Isidore had it, I know not.

The first knowne King of the Philistims was that Abimelech, who had aliking to Abrahams wife; with whom Abraham made a couenant and league. This Abimelech dwelt indeede at this time in Gerar; but it is written that hee was also King of the Philistims, in these wordes. Wherefore Isaac went to Abimelech King of the Phili-Ball upon the flims unto Gerar. Now in regard that this or some ancienter Abimelech gouerned the commonwealth greatly to his glorie, the rest of his successours called themselves by the 27, of & the fame name. The Philistims commanded that Tract of land vpon the Mediterran Sea to the Northward, from the Castle of Pilgrims (otherwise Cafarea Palastina or Turris Stratonius) which was the fouth border of Phanicia, to Gafa or to the Ri- 50 ner of Egypt. The Anakims or firong Giants were of these Philistims: and Goliah was of Geth one of the fine Citties about named. They had fornetimes fine Kings, faith Liranus. They mastered the Ifraelites at seuerall times about 150, yeares, and kept them Tributaries, till they were weakened by Sampson and Samuel, but in the end this yoke was taken off by DAVID, and layed on themselues. It is objected, that because these Citties and the Countries adjoyning were held by the fonnes of Mizraim, therefore did the Ilraelites dispossesses the fonnes of Mizraim and not of Canaan, by forcing those places. To this faith Pererius, that although the Palastines or Philistims held it in the time of Iofua, yet at the time of the promife it was possest by the Canaanites; as in the second of Deuteronomie. The Heustes dwelt in the Villages vnto Gaza. And what meruaile if (the Canaanites being the greater part) the denomination were from them? For that the Philistims were of Caphtor, and so of Mizraim and not of Canaan, belides Moles the Prophet Hieremie witneffeth. The Lord will dellroy the Philistims, Higgen and the remnant of the iffue of Caphtor; and in like manner in the ninth of Amos, the Philistims are faid to be the reliques of Caphtorim; have not I brought up Is R NEL out Amos. 19. 1.7. of the land of Agypt, and the Philistims from Caphtor, and ARAM from Kir? fo'I reade this place with divers of the learned. For whereas the Fulgar hath, & Palafinos de Cappadocia, & Syros de Cyrene, this conuersion Beroaldus condemneth; where Caphtor is taken for Cappadocia, and Cyrene for Kir. For Cyrene is a Cittie directly West from Agypt, betweene Ptolomais or Barce and Apollonia : but Kir in A-(in vinder the Assertions: Iunius hath it Kir, and not Cyrene: and so hath the Geneua.

But Pererius cals Caphtorim Cappadocia according to the Vulgar translation, to which 20 he is bound; and yet it is not altogether improbable if he meane Cappadocia in Palaflina, and not that Cappadocia by the Sea Pontus in the North of Affa the leffe. For of which fee whether they inhabited Sethreites, or Cappadocia of Palastina, it is not certainly in the tecond whether they innabled sements, or corporate knowne. And fure in this manner hee may expound Cappadocia to be ambiguous, 2,3, 1,5. as well as he doth Cyrene: taking it here not for Cyrene in Africa, but for a place in Media. For it is written in the second of Kings, that Teglatphalasser King of the Af- Case. v.g. fyrians carryed away the inhabitants of Damafeus into Kir: and to Iofephus feemes to vnderstand this Kir, for Cyrene in Media, calling this Cyrene Media superior: for it was the manner and pollicie of the Affrians to transplant the people conquered by them, as they did the Samarians or Ifraelites, and other Nations. And hereof 30 it came that Kir was called Syro-media: because the Syrians by the Affyrians were that Affir (who was supposed to found Niniueli) was also said to be the Father of the Allyrians, whose iffues, and the iffues of Cham instantly contended for the Empire of the East: which sometimes the Assyrians, sometimes the Babylonians obtavned, according to the vertue of their Princes. This is the common opinion, which alfo teacheth vs. that all the East parts of the world were peopled by Astar, Elam, and Lud, (fauing India) which I beleeve Noah himselfe first inhabited; and to whom Ophir and Hauilah the fonnes of Jockan afterward repaired. Some prophane writers diftinguish Elam from Persia, and make the Elamites a people apart. But Sufa (which the Scriptures call Sufan) in Elam was the Kings feat of Persia (witnesse Daniel.) And I faw (faith he) in a vision, and when I faw it I was in the Pallace of Sv-

But howfocuer Herodotus and D. Siculus extend this Empire, and honour this nation with ample Dominion; yet was not the state of the Allirians of any such power. after fuch time as Sardanapalus lost the Empire. For Senacherib who was one of the powerfullest Princes among them, had yet the mountaine Taurus for the vtmost of his Dominion toward the North-east, and Syria bounded him toward the West, 20 notwithstanding those younts of Senacherib in Elay the 27. Have the Gods of the Nations delivered them whom my Fathers have destroyed? as Gozan, and Haran, and RESERH, and the Children of EDEN which were at Telassar. Where is the King of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, and the King of the Cittie Sepharuaim, Henaand Isah? All these were indeede but pettie Kings of Citties, and small Countries; as Haran in Mesopotamia: Reseph in Palmyrena: Hamath or Emath in Ituraa vnder Libanus: the Ifle of Eden: Sepher, and others of this fort. Yea Nabuchodonafor, who was most powerfull, before the conquest of Egypt had but Chaldea, Mesopotamia, and Syria, with Palastina and Phanicia parts thereof. But in this question of Assur, I will speake my opinion freely when I come to Nimred, whose plantation I have omitted a- 40 mong the rest of the Chastes, because hee established the first Empire; from whom the most memorable storie of the world taketh beginning.

Of Arphaxad came the Chaldeans, faith S. Hierome, and Infephus, but it must bee those Chaldeans about Vr: for the sonnes of Cham possest the rest. It is true that hee was the Father of the Hebrewes : for Arphaxad begat Shela, and Shela Heber, of whom hereafter.

And that Lud the fourth Sonne of Shem, gaue name to the Lydians in Afia the leffe, is the common opinion, taken from Infephus and S. Hierome; but I fee not by what reason he was moued to straggle thither from his friends.

of ARAM, and his Sonnes.

R AM the fift and last Sonne of Shem was the parent of the Syrians : of which A Damaleus was head. Their name was changed from Aram or Aramites by Sy- 865.7.0.8. rus (faith Eufebrus out of Iofephus) which Syrus lived before Mofes was borne; the Eufeb p.10.64 fame which others call the sonne of Apollo, Mesopotamia also being but a Province of Syria had the name of Aram Naharaym, which is as much to fay, as Syria duorum 10 fluurorum, Svria compassed with two Rivers: (to wit) Tigris and Euphrates. The Scriptures call it Melopotamia, Syria, and Padan Aram : and the Greekes Melopotamia Quest nos baselonia, Spris vocamus, spsi Syri Aramenios & Arameos vocant, Those which we call Syrians (saith Paradi. 1.9). he) themselves call Aramenians and Arameans.

Against this opinion that Aram the sonne of Sem, was the Father and Denominator of the Syrians in generall; (and not only of those in Syria Inter-annis, which 20 is Mesopotamia) formercade Gen. 22.21. Kemuel, the father of the Syrians: where 0ther out of the originall reade Kemuel, the sonne of Aram. Neither is it any inconvenience for vs to vnderstand the word (Aram) here, not for the Nation, but for the name of some one of note; the rather, because in the Historie of Abraham and Ifaac (which was in time long before Kemuels posteritie could bee famous) wee finde Mesopotamia called Aram; and that with an addition: sometimes with Naharaim. and sometimes of Padan, to distinguish it from another Aram, which (as it seemes) then also was called Aram. For whereas Iunius thinks in his note vpon Gen. 25, 20. that Padan Aramought to be restrained to some part of Mesopotamia, (to wit) to that part which Ptolomie cals Ancobaritis (fo called from the River Chaboras, which 30 dividing it runneth into Euphrates) the promiscuous vse of Padan Aram, and Aram Naharaym (which latter appellation questionlesse comprehends the whole Melopotamia) may seeme to refute this opinion : especially seeing the signification of this appellation agreeth with the whole Region. For it fignifieth as much as the voke of Syria, which name agrees with this Region : because the two Rivers (as it were) yoked together goe along it. The reliques of the name Padan appeare in the name of two Citties in Ptolomie, called Aphadans: (as Iunius hath well noted) the one vopon Chaboras, the other vpon Euphrates.

The Sonnes of Aram were, Hall, Gether, and Mefch or Mes.

Vz or Hus inhabited about Damaseus, and built that Cittie, saith Iosephus and Saint Hierome. But Tostatus misliking this opinion, both in them and in Lyra, who also Hiron in trad. followeth Infephus, affirmeth that Abrahams Steward Eliezer was the Founder thereof; though it were likely that Hus the eldest sonne of Aram dwelt neare vnto his father, who inhabited the body of Syria. For Hus was a Region of the same, adioyning to Arabia the Desert, and to Batanea or Traconitis: whereof the Prophet Hieremie. 50 Reioyce and he glad O daughter of Edom that dwellest in the land of Hus. Hus therefore Hieron, Lames, is seated beyond lordan, in the East Region of Traconitis, adioyning to Basan, having 64.0.21. Batanea Gaulonitis, and the mountaine Seir to the East, Edras to the South, Damascus North, and Tordan West: having in it many Citties and people, as may also bee gatheredout of Hieremie : And all forts of people : and all the Kings of the land of Hus. C.25, v.20.

Hul the second Sonne of Aram, S. Hierome makes the Father of the Armenians: and Gether the third Sonne, parent to the Arcananians or Carians: which opinion, (because I finde not where to set him) I doe not disproue, though I see no reason why Gether should leave the fellowship of his owne brethren, and dwell among ftrangers in An the leffe. Innius gives Hul (whom hee writes Chul) the Defert of Palmyrens, as farre as Euphrates, where Ptolomie fetteth the Cittie of Cholle.

Gether (faith Iofephus) founded the Bactrians: but Iofephus gaue all Noahs children feathers, to carry them farre away in all bafte. For mine owne opinion I alwaies 10 keepe the rule of neighbourhood, and thinke with Iunius: (to wit) That Gether feated himfelfe neare his brothers, in the body of Syria, and in the Prouince of Caffioris, and Seleucis, where Piolomie placeth Gindarus, and the Nation by Flinie called Junius also giveth to Mes or Mesch the North part of Syria, betweene Cilicia and Mesopotamia, neare the mountaine Masius. The certainty of those plantations can no otherwise be knowne then by this probabilitie, that Aram the Father (of whom that great Region tooke name) planted his fonnes in the fame land about him: for he wanted no scope of Territorie for himselfe and them; neither then when the world was newly planted, nor in many hundred yeares after : and therefore there 20 is no reason to cast them into the desert parts of the world, so farre asunder. And as neceffitie and pollicie held them together for a while: fo Ambition (which began together with Angels and Men) inhabiting the hearts of their children fet them afunder. For although these sonnes of Aram, and the sonnes of the rest of Noahs children, kept themselucs within the bounds of some one large Kingdome; yet therein enery one also sought a Prouince a part, and to themselues; giving to the Citties therein built their owne names, thereby to leaue their memorie to their posteritie; the vse of letters being then rare, and knowne to few.

In this fort did the pride of the Spaniards in America cast them into so many Prouinces: euery one emulating and disdayning the greatnesse of other, as they are 30 thereby to this day subject to inualion, expullion, and destruction: so as (Nona Hifunia and Peru excepted, because those Countries are vnaccessable to strangers) an casie force will cast them out of all the rest.

Mes the fourth Sonne is made the parent of the Maronians: of whom something Chapt 8, $ 7. hath beene fpoken already. It plassad the third Sonne of Shem, begat Shelah, and Heber. Heber had two fonnes, Phalegh and Iolian: and in Phaleghs time was the earth diuided.

t. III.

Of the division of the earth in the time of Phaleg, one of the Sonnes of Heber, of the issue of Sem.

He many people which at the diuision (at Phaleghs birth) were then liuing, and the through plantation of all the East part of the world (at his death) hath made a doubt, whether the earth were divided at either. The Hebrewes (faith Pererius out of Sedar Holam, one of their Chronicles) affirme that this partition happened at the death of Phaleg: and Phaleg was borne in the year after the floud 101 and liued in all 239, yeares, which numbers added makes 340. And therefore was it so many yeares after the floud, ere the children of Noah seuered themselues. But 50 to this opinion of the Hebrewes, and the doubt they make how in so few yeares as 101. (the time of Phaleghs birth) fo many people could be increased, Pererius gives this answer, that if 70. persons of the familie of Incob increased to 600000. fighting men in 215, yeares, (belides women, children, and impotent persons) how much

CHAP. S. S. 15.1.2. of the Historie of the World. more is it likely, that fo foone after the floud the children of Wodh might in a shorter time bring forth many multitudes, having received the blefling of God. Increase and multiply, and fill the earth? What strength this answere hath, let others indee: for the children of Ifrael were 70. and had 215, yeares time ; and the formes of Work were but three, and had but 101. yeares of time, to the birth of Phalegh.

Others conceine that Phalegh tooke that name after the dinifion, in memorie thereof: as Infephus and St. Augustine, who reason in this manner. If the division Total Last were at Phaleghs death (which happened in the yeare, which is commonly held to my detimate, be the 48. of Abraham, but was by more likely computation 12. yeares before his Hebrewes, Hierome and Chryfosiome) then was the earth to peopled in all the East and Northerne parts, as greater numbers have not beene found at any time lince. For Ninus affociating to himselfe Arieus King of Arabia, a people who at that time (faith Diod. Siculus) plurimum opibus atque armis preflabant, Exceeded both inriches and bodies of men, fubdued many Citties in Armenia; received Eurzanis into grace; then inuaded Media, and crucified Pharnus the King thereof, with his wife and feuen children ; vanquished all those Regions betweene Vilus and Tanais, the Egyptians, 20 Phanicians, the Kingdomes of Spria, and all the Nations of Persta, to the Hyreanian

Sea. For the numbers which followed Wines (already remembred out of Ctefins) against Zoroaster and others: and Zoroaster on the other side, who made resistance with foure hundred thousand, proue it sufficiently, that if the division had not happened before the death of Phaleg, there had needed no division at that time at all. For some of them were so ill satisfied with their partitions, as they sought to be Masters of all ; and greater Armies were there never gathered then by Minus and Semiramis: wherefore in this opinion there is little appearance of the truth:

But for that conceit that if the diujtion had beene made at the bigth of Phaleg, there were not then sufficient numbers borne to fill the earth : It was never meant 30 that the earth could be filled every where at the infant, but by times and degrees And furely whatfocuer mens opinions have beene herein, yet it is certaine, that the diufion of tongues and of men must goe neere together with the ceasing of the worke at Babel; and that the enterprise of Babel was left off instantly upon the confusion of languages, where followed the execution of the diussion; and so neither at the birth nor death of Phaleg; for Phaleg was borne in the yeare 101. after the floud, which was the yeare that Nimrod came into Shinaar, or 10. yeares after he arrived, faith Berofus.

Now if it bee objected that Phaleg (the Etymologie of whose name significth diuision must have lived without a name, except the name had been given him at 40 the time of this confusion and partition : to this objection it may be answered, That the change of names vpon divers accidents is not rare in the Scriptures : for Iacob was called Ifraelafter he had wreftled with the angell; Abraham was first Abram; and Edom Efau; and that Phaleg being a principall man in this division had his first name vpon this accident changed, it is most probable.

And lastly whereas the Hebrewes S. Hierome and Chrysostome account Heber a great Prophet, if that by giving his fonne the name of Phaleg, he foretold the divition which followed : to this I say, I doe not finde that tieber deferued any fuch honour, if he had thereupon to called his fonne: for division and dispersion followeth increase of people of necessities, and this prophetic (if any such had beene) might 50 also haue reference to the diussion, which afterwardes fell among the Hebrewes

But if we give a reasonable time to the building of the Tower and Citty of B.:bel, by which time many people (by reason and by demonstratine proofe) might be increased: and that you the fall thereof the confusion and division followed (where-

But the certaine places of those thirteene Sonnes cannot bee gathered out of the Gen. 10.1.30. Scriptures, the wordes of Moses being generall. And their dwelling was from Mesha as thou goeft anto Sephar a mount in the East. Of all these thirteene Sonnes, there were only three memorable, (to wit) Sheba, Ophir, and Hauilah. Concerning whose names to avoide confusion it is to bee observed, that among the Sonnes of Chush, 30 two of them had also the names of Seba and Hauilah. Abraham had also a third Saba or Sheba, his grand-child by his wife Ketura. But Seba the sonne of Chush, and Sheba the sonne of Rhegma his Nephew, wee haue left in Arabia Falix : and Hauilah the fonne of Chash vpon Tigris. Saba the grand-child of Abraham was (as some haue thought) the Father of the Sabans in Persia: of which Nations Dionysius de Orbis si-Gen. 25. v.6. tu maketh mention. And whereas it is written : But unto the Sonnes of the Concubines which ABRAHAM had, ABRA-HAM gaue gifts, and lent them away from Ishac his sonne (while he yet lived) Eastward to the East Countrie: hereupon it is supposed, that this Saba the sonne of Abra- 43 ham wandered into Persia: for Persia was accounted the furthermost East Countrie in respect of Index; which also Onid setteth under the Sunne-rising. Yet seeing the rest of Abrahams Sonnes seated themselues on the borders of Indea, I rather choose to leaue Sabathe sonne of Abrahamin Arabiathe Desert, where Ptolomie setteth a Cittie of that name.

But Sabathe sonne of Iostan, the sonne of Heber, (as I conceine) inhabited India ารัตริง และอง it selfe. of OPHIR one of IOCTANS formes and of PERV and of that voyage of SALOMON

PHIR alfows an inhabitant of the East India, and as (St. Hierome vinder stands it) in one of the Islandes plentifull of gold, which are now known by the name of Molucea. In Sephus vinderstands Ophir to bee one of those great head-landes in India, which by a generall name are called Cherfonesi, or Peninsula : of which to there are two very notorious; Calleout, and Malacca. Pererius takes it rightly for an Island, as St. Hierome doth, but he fets it at the head-land of Malacca. But Ophir is found among the Molnecas farther East.

Arias Montanus out of the second of Chronicles, the third chapter and fixt verse, gathers that Ophir was Peruin America, looking into the West Ocean, commonly called Mare del Sur or the South Sca; by others Mare pacificum. The wordes in the second of the Chronicles are these, And hee overlaied the house with pretious stones for beautie; and the gold was gold of Paruaim. Junius takes this gold to bee the gold of Havilah, rememberd by Moses in the description of Paradyse : And Gen. 11.012 the gold of that Land is good : finding a towne in Characene a Province of Suliana Plin. 16.0 28

20 called Barbatia; fo called (as he thinkes) by corruption for Paruaim: from whence those Kinges subjected by David brought this gold, with which they presented him; and which David præserued for the enriching of the Temple.

But this fancie of Peru hath deceived many men, before Montanus, and Pleffis, who also tooke Ophir for Peru. And that this question may bee a subject of no farther dispute; it is very true, that there is no Region in the world of that name: sure I am that at least America hath none, no not any Cittie, Village, or mountaine so called. But when Francis Pifarro first discouered those landes to the South of Panama, arriving in that Region which Atabaliba commanded (a Prince of magnificence, riches and Dominion inferiour to none) fome of the Spaniards vtterly ig-30 norant of that language, demaunding by fignes (as they could) the name of the Countrie, and pointing with their hand athwart a river, or torrent, or brooke that ran by, the Indians answered Peru which was either the name of that brooke, or of water in generall. The Spaniards thereupon conceiling that the people had rightly vnderstood them, set it downe in the Diurnall of their enterprise, and so in the first description made, and sent over to Charles the Emperour, all that West part of America to the South of Panama had the name of Peru, which hath continued ever fince as divers Spaniards in the Indies affured me; which also Acofta the Jefuite in his naturall and morall Historie of the Indies confirmeth. And whereas Montanus alfo findeth, that a part of the Indies (called Incatan) tooke that name of Incitan. 40 who as hee supposeth nauigated from the vtmost East of India to America; it is most true, that Incatan, is nothing else in the language of that Countrie, but What is that or [ What fay you ] For when the Spaniards asked the name of that place (no man concciuing their meaning) one of the Saluages answered Jucatan (which is) What aske you, or what fay you? The like hapned touching Paria; a montanous Countrie on the South fide of Trinidado and Margarita: for when the Spaniards inquiring (as all men doe) the names of those new Regions which they discovered. pointed to the Hillesafarre off, one of the people answered, Paria, which is as much to fay, as high hilles or mountaines. For as Paria begins that meruailous ledge of mountaines, which from thence are continued to the Strait of Magellan: from 8. degrees 50 of North latitude to 52. of South; and so hath that Countrie euer since retained the name of Paria.

The same hapned among the English, which I sent under Sir Richard Greeneuile to inhabite Virginia. For when some of my people asked the name of that Countrie, one of the Saluages answered Wingandacon, which is as much to say, as, you weare

good clothes, or gay clothes. The same hapned to the Spaniard in asking the name of the Island Trimando; for a Spaniard demaunding the name of that felfe place which the Sea incompassed, they answered Caeri, which signifieth an Island. And in this manner haue many places newly diffcourred beene intituled; of which Peru is one. And therefore we must leaue Ophir among the Molnecas whereabout fuch an Island is credibly affirmed to be.

Nowalthough there may be found gold in Arabia it selfe (towards Persia) in Hauilah, now Sufiana, and all alongst that East Indian shore; yet the greatest plentie is taken up at the Philippines, certaine Islands planted by the Spaniards from the West India. And by the length of the paffage which Salomons thips made from the Red 10 Sca, (which was three yeares in going and comming) it feemeth they went to the vttermost East, as the Malaceas or Philippines. Indeede these that now goe from Partugall, or from hence, finish that nauigation in two yeare, and sometimes lesse: and Salomons thips went not aboue a tenth part of this our course from hence. But wee must consider, that they cuermore kept the coast, and crept by the shores, which made the way exceeding long. For before the vie of the Compas was knowne, it was impossible to nauigate athwart the Ocean; and therefore Salomons ships could not finde Peru in America. Neither was it needfull for the Spaniards themselues (had it not beene for the plentie of gold in the East India Islands, farre about the mines of any one place of America) to faile every years from the West part of America thi- 20 ther, and there to have strongly planted, and inhabited the richest of those Islands: wherein they have built a Cittie called Manilia. Salomon therefore needed not to have gone farther off then ophir in the East, to have sped worse : neither could bee nauigate from the East to the West in those dayes, whereas he had no coast to have guided him:

Tostatus also gathereth a fantasticall opinion out of Rabanus, who makes Ophir to be a Countrie, whose mountaines of gold are kept by Griffins: which mountaines Solinus affirmeth to be in Seythia Asiatica, in these wordes. Nam chim auro & gemmis affluant, Griphes tenent universa, alites serocissima, Arimaspi cum his dimicant. &c. For where as these Countries abound in gold, and rich stone, the Griffins defend the one and the other: a kinde of Fowle the fiercest of all other; with which Griffins a Nation of people called Arimalbi make warre. These Arimalbi are said to have beene men with one eye only, like vnto the Cyclopes of Sicilia: of which Cyclopes Herodotus and Ariffeus make mention; and so doth Lucan in his third Booke; and Valerius Flaceus; and D. Sieulus in the Dind. Stem! In 6. Storie of Alexander Macedon. But (for mine owne opinion) I believe none of them. And for these Arimalii, I take it that this name signifying One-eyed was first given them by reason that they yied to weare a vizard of desence, with one fight in the middle to ferue both eyes; and not that they had by nature any fuch defect. But Solinus borroweth these things out of Plinie, who speakes of such a Nation in the extreme North, at a place called Gifulitron, or the Caue of the Northeast winde. For 40 the reft, as all fables were commonly grounded upon some true stories or other things done: fo might these tales of the Griffins receive this Morall. That if those men which fight against so many dangerous passages for gold, or other riches of this world, had their perfect fenses, and were not deprined of halfe their eye-fight (at least of the eye of right reason and understanding) they would content themselves with a quiet and moderate effate; and not fubicet themselves to famine, corrupt aire, violent heate, and cold, and to all forts of miscrable diseases. And though this fable be fained in this place, yet if fuch a tale were told of some other places of the world, where wild beafts or Serpents defend mountaines of gold, it might be anowed: For there are in many places of the world, especially in America, many high and 50 impaffable mountaines which are very rich and full of gold, inhabited only with Tigers, Lyons, and other rauenous and cruell beafts: into which if any man afcend (except his strength bee very great) hee shall bee sure to finde the same warre, which the Arimafi make against the Griffins: not that the one or other had any sense of gold, or feeke to defend that mettall, but being disquieted, or made afraide of themfelues or their young ones, they grow inraged and aduenturous. In like fort it may be faid that the Alegartos, (which the Agyptians call the Crossdyles) defend those Pearles which lye in the Lakes of the Inland: for many times the poore Indians are eaten vp by them, when they dine for the pearle. And though the Megartos know not the pearle, yet they finde fauour in the flesh and bloud of the Indians, whom they deuoure.

Of HAVILAH the sonne of IOCTAN, who also passed into the East Indies: and of MESHA and SEPHER named in the bordering of the families of IOCTAN: with a conclusion of this discourse touching the plantation of the world.

OF Hauilab the sonne of loctan, there is nothing else to be said, but that the senerall opinion is, that he also inhabited in the East India in the Continent, from which Ophir past into the Islands adioyning. And whereas Ganges is faid to water Hauilah, it is meant by Hauilah in the East India, which tooke name of Hauilah the 20 fonne of loct an : but Hauilah , which Pifon compaffeth , was fo called of Hauilah , the fonne of Chulb, as is formerly proued by this place of Scripture. SAVL (mote the 1,5am,15.7. Amalekites from Hauilah, as thou commest to Shur, which is before Agypt. But that Saul ouer made warre in the East India, no man hath suspected. For an end we may conclude, that of the thirteene fonnes of Joetan, these three Saba, Hauilah, and Ophir; though at the first feated by their brethren about the Hill Masins or Mesh, Gen. 10. 30: (to wit) betweene Cilicia and Mesopotamia; yet at length either themselves or their iffues removed into East India, leaving the other families of lottan, to fill the Countries of their first plantation, which the Scripture defines to have beene from Melh unto Sephar. And although S. Hierome take Melh to bee a Region of the East 30 India, and Sephar a mountaine of the same (which mountaine Montanus would have to be the Andes in America) those fancies are farre beyond my understanding. For the word (East) in the Scriptures, where it hath reference to Indea, is neuer farther extended then into Persia. But Mesch is that part of the mountaines of Masius in the North of Mesopotamia, out of which the River Chabor as springeth which runneth by Charran: and in the same Region we also finde for Sephar (remembred by Moles) Sipphara by Ptolomie, standing to the East of the mountaines Massus; from whence loct an having many fonnes, fome of them might paffe into India, hearing of the beautie and riches thereof. But this was in processe of time.

The other fashion of planting I understand not, being grounded but upon mens 40 imaginations, contrarie to reason and possibilitie. And that this mountaine in the East was no farther off then in those Regions before remembred, it appeareth by many places of the Scripture where the same phrase is vsed: as in 20 umbers 23. BA- V.7. LAC the King of Moab hath brought me from Aram, out of the mountaine of the East; which was from the East part of Mesopotamia. For Balac brought Balaam out of Me-Copotamia, (witnesse this place of Deuteronomie.) Because they hired BALAAM the C.23. V 4. fonne of BEOR, of Pethor in Aram Naharaijm, to curfethee : for Aram Naharaijm was Syria flusiorum, which is Mesopotamia, as aforesaid.

This plantation of the world after the floud doth best agree, (as to me it seemes) with all the places of Scripture compared together. And these bee the reports of 50 reason and probable conjecture; the guides which I have followed herein, and which I have chosen to goe after, making no valuation of the opinions of men, conducted by their owne fancies: be they ancient or moderne. Neither haue I any end herein, private, or publike, other then the discoverie of truth. For as the partialitie of man to himfelfe hath difguifed all things: fo the factious and hireling Hifforians of all Ages (especially of these latter times) haue by their many volumes of vntrue reports left Honour without a Monument, and Vertue without Memorie: and (in flead ethereof) haue crecked Statues and Traphies to those, whom the darkest forgetfulnesse to place the status and all though the length and dissolution atture of time hart worneous or changed the names and memoric of the worlds hirth planters after the floud (I meane the greatest number and most part of them ) yet all the footsteps of Antiquitie (as appeares by that which hath benen spoken) are not quite worneous to our curgrowne: for Babylon hath to this day the Sound of Babels; Phaemeia hath Zidon, to which Cittie the eldest Sonne of Canam gaue name; so hath Ciliain Thassis, and the Armenians, Medes, to Hiberians, Cappadesiums, Physgians, the Sysians, Idamsons, Libyans, Moores, and other Nations, haue preserved from the death of forgetfulnesse some signess of their first Founders and true Parents.

CHAP. IX.

Of the beginning and establishing of Government.

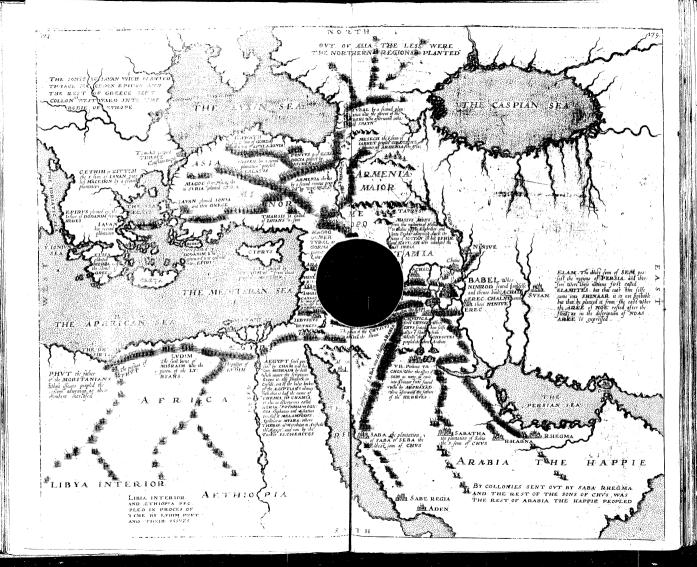

ð. I

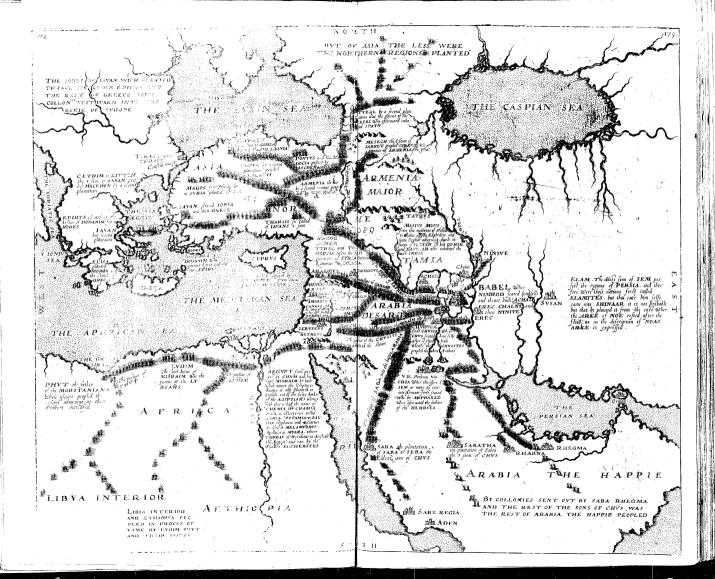

Of the proceeding from the first Gouernement under the eldest of families to Regall, and from Regall absolute to Regall tempered with Lawes.

T followeth now to entreate how the world beganne to receive Rule and Gouernement, which (while it had fearcitie of people) whoer-went no other Dominion then Paternitie and Eldership. For the Fathers of Nations were then as Kings, and the eldest of familiesas Princes. Hercoft came, that the word (Elder) was alwaics wed both for the Magistrate, and for those of age and grautie: the same bearing one fignification almost in all languages. For in the eleventh of Nambers God commanded Moster to gather together to 70.0 of the Elders of the poole, and Gouernous sour them: the Hebrew bearing the same sense, which the Latine word Sensor Seniores doth. Soit is written in Susama, Then the Assembly beleved them as these that were the Elders and Wages of the people. And so in the words of those stall selected them as these that were the Elders and Wages of the people. And so in the words of those stall select an Elder. Demosshere vieth the same word for the Magistrate among the Greaturs. Cievro in Care given two other reasons for this appellation: Appellation and Lacedemonics out amplifymum magistratum gerunt, or som, sie clean appellation Senes, Among the Lacedemonics and the chiefe Magistrates, as they are, so are they called Eldermen: and againe, Ratio & prudentiam the client in schulus mon summum consulum Musicure sustriates palleton Senes, time, if resson and adulement were not in oldwen, our Ancesters that near called the highest Conneell by the name of a Senate. But though these reasons may well be given, yet we doubt not but in this name of (Elders) for Gouernours or Counsalers of State, there is a signe that the first Gouernours were the Fathers of families; and under them them the eldeft Sonnes. And from thence did the French, Italian, and Spaniard take the word (Stgnar) and out of it (Stgnarour) for Lordhip and Dominion: fignifying (according to Loyfeau) puillance in proprietic, or proper power. The kindes of this Stgnamic, Sence makes two: the one, Peteffus aut imperium, Penver or command: the other, Propriets aut dominium, Proprietie or mullerfip: the correlative of the one is the fabietel, of the other the flave. Ale Gelarom (faith the ) pateil as unmium portuet, ad fingulus proprieties, Ceffa halb power over all; and every man proprietie in his owner, and againe, Ceffar omnia imperior poficiet, finguli dominio, Cefar holdeth alim his power, and every man possession of the sounce. But as men and vice beganne abundantly to increase:

To Gobedience, (the fruit ofnaturall reuerence, which but from excellent feed éldomeripeneth) being exceedingly ouerfladowed with pride, and ill examples verty withered and fell away. And the foft weapons of paternall perfivations (after mankinde beganne to neglect had forget the original and firft giuer of life) became in all ouer-weake, either to refift the first inclination of euill, or after (when the came habituall) to constraincit. So that now, when the hearts of memwere only guided and steered by their owne fancies, and rofttoo and from the tempestuous Seas of the world, while wis fourner was feuered from power, and strength from charities (Necessitate Came) and strength from charities (Necessitate Came) and contributed for the strength of the chart of the probability of the chart

These Arguments by Necessitic propounded, and by Reason maintained and confirmed, persivaded all Nations which the Heauens couer, to subject themselues 30 to a Madher, and to Magistracien some degree. Under which Gouernement, as the change (which brought with it less call, then the former missheries) was generally pleasing; so time (making all men wise that observe it) sound some imperfection and corrossue in this cure. And therefore the sime Necessities which invented, and the sime Reason which approved sourcingen power, bethought themselues of certaine equal rules, in which Dominion (in the beginning boundlesse) might all odificerne her owne limits. Loue fees one while too much, another while starke nothing. Hence it came to passe, the after a tew yeares (for direction and reftraint of Royall power) Lawes were estabilished: and that gouernement which had this mixture of equalitic (holding in an euen ballance supreme power and common right) acquired the title of Regall: the other (which had it not) was knowne for T yrannicall: the one God established in 50 sauour of his people: the other he permitted for their affliction.

In the infancie of this Regall authoritie, Princes as they were chosen for their vertues only fo did they measure their powers by a great deale of moderation. And therefore (saith Fabius Pitter) Principes, quia instit erant, & religionibus dediti, jure bubiti Descripecals, Dif & distit, Princes, because they were inst and religious, were rightly accounted and active foods.

And though (speaking humanely) the beginning of Empire may be ascribed to reason and necessitie; yet it was God himselfe that first kindled this light in the minds of men, whereby they faw that they could not line and bee preferued without a Ruler and Conductor: God himfelfe by his eternall prouidence hauing ordayned Kings; and the law of Nature leaders, and Rulers ouer others. For the verie Bees haue their Prince, the Deere their Leaders; and Cranes (by order impofed ) watch for their owne fatetie. The most High beareth rule ouer the King domes of Prover. 8. 2.15. men; and appointethour it whom foeuer he pleafeth. By me (faith Wifedome, spoken by the Son of God) Kingsraigne; by me Princes rule, and it is God (faith Daniel) that fetteth up Kings, and taketh away Kings: and that this power is given from God, Christ himselfe 10 witnesseth, speaking to Pilate. Thou couldest have no powerat all against mee, except it Ich E 1.U.21. were given thee from above.

It was therefore by a threefold inflice that the world hath beene gouerned from the beginning, (to wit) by a inflice naturall: by which the Parents and Elders of families gouerned their children, and nephewes, and families, in which gouernement the obedience was called naturall pietie: againe, by a inflice divine, drawne from the Lawes and ordinances of God: and the obedience hereunto was called confcience; and lastly by a justice civill, begotten by both the former : and the obedience to this we call dutie. That by these three those of the eldest times were commanded : and that the rule in generall was paternall, it is most enident : for Adam being Lord o- 20 uer his owne children, instructed them in the service of God his Creatour; as wee reade, Cain and Abel brought Oblations before God, as they had beene taught by their Parent, the Father of mankinde.

Of the three commendable forts of Government with their opposites : and of the degrees of humane Societie.

Hat other pollicie was exercised, or state founded after such time as 20 mankinde was greatly multiplyed before the floud, it cannot beecertainly knowne, though it feeme by probable coniecture, that the fame was not without Kings in that first age : it being possible that many Princes of the Agyptians (remembred among their antiquities) were before the generall floud; and very likely, that the cruell oppressions in that age proceeded from some tyrannie in Gouernement, or from some rougher forme of rule, then the paternall.

Berofus ascribeth the rule of the world in those dayes to the Giants of Libanus, who mastred (saith he) all Nations from the Sunne-rising to the Sunne-set. But in the second age of the world, and after such time as the rule of Eldership failed, three 40 feuerall forts of Gouernement were in feuerall times established among men, according to the diners natures of places and people.

The first, the most ancient, most generall, and most approued, was the Gouernement of one, ruling by inst lawes, called Monarchie: to which Tyrannie is opposed, being also a sole and absolute rule, exercised according to the will of the Commander, without respect or observation of the lawes of God, or Men. For a lawfull Prince or Magistrate (saith Aristotle) is the keeper of right and equitie: and of this condition ought enery Magistrate to be, according to the rule of Gods word. Indges and Officers (halt thou make thee in thy Citties: And thefe (hall judge the people with righteous indgement. The second Gouernement is of divers principall persons established by order, and ruling by lawes, called Ariflocracie, or Optimatum potestas; to which Oligarchia (or the particular faction and viurpation of a few great ones) is opposed: as the Decemviri, or Triumviri, and the like.

The third is a State popular, (or Gouernement of the people) called Demogratia, to which is opposed Ochlocratia, or the turbulent vniust ruling of the confused multitude, feditioufly fwaying the state, contrarie to their owne lawes and ordinances. These three kinds of Gouernement are briefly exprest by Tholosanus: Vnius: naucorum, or multorum, Of one, of few, of many,

Now as touching the beginning and order of pollicie fince the second increase of mankinde, the same grew in this fort: First of all, enery Father, or eldest of the familie, gaue lawes to his owne iffues, and to the people from him and them increased. These as they were multiplyed into many housholds (man by nature louing socie-10 tie) joyned their Cottages together in one common field or Village, which the Latines call Vicus; of the Greeke onor, which fignifieth a house, or of the word (Via) because it hath divers waies and paths leading to it. And as the first house grew into a Village, fo the Village into that which is called Pagus, (being a focietie of diuers Villages) fo called of the Greeke with, which fignifieth a fountaine: because many people (hauing their habitations not farre afunder) dranke of one foring or ftreame of water. To this word the English Hundreds, or (as some thinke) Shires answereth not vnfitly. But as men and impietie beganne to gather strength, and as emulation and pride betweene the races of the one and the other daylie increased : so both to defend 20 themselues from outrage, and to preserve such goods as they had gathered, they beganne to joyne and let together divers of their Villages, invironing them first with banks and ditches, and afterwards with wals: which being so compassed were then called Oppida; either ab opponendo se hostibus, Because wals were opposed against enemies, or ab opibus, because thither they gathered their riches for safetie and defence: as also they were called Vrbes, ab orbe; because when they were to build a Cittie. they made a Circle with a Plough (faith Varro) therewith measuring and compasfing the ground which they went to inclose or fortifie. And although Fibs and Ciuites be often confounded yet the difference was anciently in this that Vrbs fignified no other then the very wals and buildings; and Cinitas was taken for the Cittizens, 30 inhabiting therein: fo called of Ciuis; and that, ab co quò d multitudo coiuit, of comming together. But all inhabitants within these wals are not properly Cittizens, but only fuch as are called Free-men: who bearing proportionably the charge of the Cittle may by turnes become Officers and Magiltrates thereof the restgoe under the name of fubiccts, though Cittizens by the same generall name of subjects are also knowne. For every Cittizen is also a subject, but not every subject a Cittizen : perhaps also fome Cittizen (as the chiefe Magistrate, if he be to be termed one of the Cittizens) is no subject; but of this we neede not stand to inquire. The word (Magistrate) is taken a Magistro, from a Mafter, and the word (Mafter) from the Aduerbe Magis (as also magistieria, precepts of art) or else from the Greeke word (Megistos:) and 40 fo the Greekes call them Megistanes, whom the Latines call Magnates or Ma-

The office and dutie of every Magistrate Aristotle hath written in few wordes. Ethic. 56 A Magistrate or Prince (faith he) is the keeper of right and equitie; but the fame is best taught by St. Paul, who expresset both the cause efficient, and finall, (that is) by whom Magistrates and Princes are ordayned, together with their duties and offices. A Magistrate is the minister of God for thy wealth; but if thou doe cuill, feare: for monagast he beweth not the fword for nought. For he is the minister of God, to take vengeance on him that doth euill. He alfo teacheth in the same place, That every foule ought to bo V. 1. therefore to relift the power of Kings, because they may be taxed with iniustice or crueitie: for it pleafeth God fometimes to punish his people by a tyrannous hand: and the commandement of obedience is without diffinction. The Prophets and Christ himselfe subjected themselves to the power of Magistracie. Christ commanded that all due to Cefar should be given vnto him: and hee payed tribute for him-literonagov, felfe and Peter. Hieremie commanded the Ifraelites (even those that were captives vnder Heathen Kings) to pray for them, and for the peace of Babylon. So Abraham prayed for Abimelech; and Iacob bleffed the King of Agypt. And it is acceptable in the fight of our Sautour (faith Paul) that yee make supplications and prayers for Kings, and for all that are in authoritie: and if for fuch Kings as were Idolatrous, much more 10 for Christian Kings and Magistrates. And so much did St. Chrysoftome in his Homilie to the people preferre Monarchicall Gouernement, as he rather commended the rule of Kings (though Tyrants) then that they should be wanting: Prestat regent tyrannum habere, quam nullum, Better a tyrannous King, then no King: to which alfo Tacitus fubscribeth. Praftat (faith Tacitus in the first of his Historie) sub malo principe effe, quam fub nullo, It is better to have a bad Prince then none at all. And be they good Kings (which is generally prefupposed) then is there no libertie more safe, then to ferue them. Neque enim libert as tutior vlla est (faith Claudian) quam Demino service buno, No libertie (faith he) more fafe for vs then to be feruants to the vertuous. And certainly howfocuer it may be disputed, yet is it safer to line vnder one Tyrant, then 20 under 100000. Tyrants : under a wife man that is cruell, then under the foolish and barbarous crueltic of the multitude. For as Azefilaus answered a Cittizen of Sparta that defired an alteration of the government, That kinde of rule which a man would disdayne in his owne house, were very vnfit to gouerne great Regions by.

Lastly, as many Fathers erected many Cottages for their many children: and as (for the reason before remembred) many housholds joyned themselves together. and made Villages; many Villages made Citties: fo when these Citties and Cittizens joyned together, and established lawes by consent, affociating themselves vnder one Gouernour and gouernment, they followed were called a Commonwealththe fame being fometimes gouerned by Kings; fometimes by Magistrates; fome- 20 times by the people themselues,

ð. III.

Of the good Government of the first Kings.

Ow this first Age after the floud, and after such time as the people were increased, and the families became strong, and dispersed into seuerall parts of the world, was by ancient Historians called Golden: Ambition and Couctoufireffe being as then but greene, and newly 40 growne vp, the feedes and effects whereof were as yet but potentiall, and in the blowth and budde. For while the Law of Nature was the rule of mans life, they then fought for no larger Territorie then themselves could compasse and manure: they erected no other magnificent buildings, then fufficient to defend them from cold and tempest: they cared for no other delicacie of fare, or curiofitie of dyet, then to maintayne life: nor for any other apparell then to couer them from the cold, the Raine and the Sunne.

And fure if we understand by that Age (which was called Golden) the ancient simplicity of our forefathers, this name may then truly bee cast vpon those elder times: but if it be taken otherwise, then, whether the same may be attributed more 50 to any one time then to another, (I meane to one limited time and none elfe) it may bee doubted. For good and golden Kings make good and golden Ages: and all times have brought forth of both forts. And as the infancie of Empirie, (when Princes played their prizes, and did then only woo men to obedience) might bee called the golden Age: so may the beginning of all Princes times bee truly called golden, for be it that men affect honour it is then best purchased; or if honour affeet men, it is then that good deferuings have commonly the least impediments: and if euer Liberalitie ouerflow her bankes and bounds, the fame is then best warranted both by pollicie and example. But Age and Time doe not only harden and farinke the openest and most toujall hearts, but the experience which it bringethwith it layeth Princes torne estates before their eyes, and (withall) perswadeth them to compassionate themselves. And although there bee no Kings vnder the Sunne whose meanes are answerable vnto other mens desires; yet such as yalue all things 10 by their ownerespects, doe no sooner finde their appetites vnanswered, but they complaine of alteration, and account the times injurious and yron. And as this falleth out in the raigne of enery King, so doth it in the life of enery man, if his dayes bee many : for our younger yeares are our golden Age; which being eaten vp by time, we praife those seasons which our youth accompanied : and (indeede) the grieuous alterations in our felues, and the paines and diseases which never part from vs but at the graue, make the times seeme so differing and displeasing: especially the qualitie of mans nature being also such, as it adoreth and extolleth the passages of the former, and condemneth the present state how inst society. Fit humana maligni- Tacit in Dial. tatis vitio, vt semper vetera in laude, prasentia in fastidio sint, It comes to passe (saith Ta-de Orst.

Wherefore not to stand in much admiration of these first times, which the discontentments of present times have made golden, this wee may set downe for certaine, That as it was the vertue of the first Kings, which (after God) gaue them Crownes: fo the loue of their people thereby purchased, held the same Crownes on their heads. And as God gaue the obedience of subjects to Princes: 'so (relatiuely) he gaue the care and inflice of Kings to the Subjects; having respect, not only to the Kings themselues, but even to the meanest of his Creatures. Of the beginning of Nobilitie : and of the vaine vaunt thereof without vertue.

Nd with this supreme Rule and Kingly authoritie beganne also other degrees and differences among fubicets. For Princes made election of others by the same rule, by which themselues were chosen; vnto whom they gaue place, trust, and power. From which imployments and offices forung those Titles, and those degrees of Honour, which 10

Ferra nibilis have continued from age to age to these dayes. But this Nobilitie, or difference non natetime from the Vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the fuccession of bloud, but to fuccession of vertue, as hereafter may bee proued. Though at length it was sufficient for those whose Parents were aduanced, to be knowne for the Sonnes of such Fathers and so there needed then no endeauour of well-doing at all, or any contention for them to excell, vpon whom glorie or worldly Nobilitie necessarily defcended. Yet hereofhad Nobilitie denomination in the beginning. That fuch as excleded others in vertue were so called. Hine diet w Nobilis, quasi virtue pre alijs notabilis. But after such time as the descrued Honour of the Father was given in reward to his posteritie, St. Hierome indged of the succession in this manner. Wihil 20 adiud video in Nobilitate appetendum, nil guod Nobiles quadam necessitate constringantur, ne ab antiquorum probitate degenerent, 1 see no other thing to be assected in Nobilitie, then that Noblemen are by a kinde of necessitie bound not to degenerate from the vertue of their Ancesters. For if Nobilitie be virtus & antique divitie, Vertue and ancient riches. then to exceede in all those thinges which are extra hominem, as riches, power, glorie, and the like, doe no otherwise define Nobilitie, then the word (animal) alone doth define a reasonable man. Or if honour (according to L. Vines) be a witnesse of vertue and well-doing: and Nobilitie (after Plutarch) the continuance of vertue in a race or linage: then are those in whom vertue is extinguished, but like vnto painted and printed papers, which ignorant men worthip in fleade of Christ, our 30 Ladie, and other Saints: men, in whom there remaine but the dregges and vices of ancient vertue: Flowers, and hearbes, which by change of foile and want of manuring are turned to weedes. For what is found praife-worthy in those waters, which had their beginning out of pure fountaines, if in all the rest of their course they runne foule, filthic, and defiled ? Ex terra fertili producitur aliquando cicuta venenofa, er ex terra sterili pretiosum au m, Out of fruitfull ground ariseth sometimes poysoning henbane; and out of barren foile pretious gold. For as all thinges confift of matter and forme, so doth Charron (in his Chapter of Nobilitie) call the race and linage but the matter of Nobilitie: the forme (which gives life and perfect being) he maketh to be vertue, and qualitie, profitable to the Commonweale. For hee is truly and entirely 40 Noble, who maketh a fingular profession of publike vertue, seruing his Prince and Countrie, and being descended of Parents and Ancesters that have done the like. And although that Nobilitie, which the fame Authour calleth personall, (the same which our felues acquire by our vertue and well descruings) cannot bee ballanced with that which is both naturall by deficent, and also personall; yet if vertue bee wanting to the naturall, then is the personall and acquired Nobilitie by many degrees to be preferred: For (faith this Charron) this Honour (to wit) by descent, may light vpon fuch a one, as in his owne nature is a true Villaine. There is also a third Nobilitie which he calleth Nobilitie in Parchment, bought with filuer or fauour: and these be indeede but Honours of affection, which Kinges with the change of 50 their fancies with they knew well how to wipe off againe. But furely, if we had as much sense of our degenerating in worthinesse, as we have of vanitie in deriving our felues of fuch and fuch Parents, wee should rather know such Nobilitie (without vertue) to be shame and dishonour, then Noblenesse, and glorie to vaunt thereof.

What calamitie is wanting (faith BERNARD) to him that is borne in finne, of a potshare neward. 1. 2. de body and barren minde? for (according to the same Father.) Dele sucum sugaris hono- confidend baris huius, & male coronata nu orem glorie, &c. Wipe away the painting of this fleeting honour, and the glittering of the ill-crowned glorie, that then thou maiest consider thy selfe nakedly: for thou camest naked out of thy Mothers wombe. Camest thou thence with thy Myter, or gliffening with Iewels, or garnifhed with filkes, or adorned with feathers, or stuffed with gold? If thou scatter and blow away all these by thy consideration as certaine morning cloudes, which doe or will soone passe over, thou shalt meete with a naked and poore; and wretched, and miserable man, and blushing, because he is naked, and weeping because 10 he is borne, and repining because he is borne to labour, and not to honour,

For as touching the matter of all men, there is no difference betweene it and dust: which if thou does not believe (faith S. CHRYSOSTOME) looke into the Sepulchers chryos bonnits and Monuments of thy Ancesters, and they shall easily persivade thee by their owne example, de incomposita that thou art dust and dirt: so that if man seeme more Noble and beautiful then dust, this cone. proceedeth not from the diversitie of his nature, but from the cunning of his Creatour.

For true Nobilitie standeth in the Trade Of vertuous life; not in the fleshly line: For bloud is brute, but Gentrie is divine Phace.

And how focuer the custome of the world have made it good, that Honours be cast by birth vpon vnworthy iffues: yet Salomon (as wife as any King) reprehendeth the fame in his fellow-Princes. There is an entil (faith he) that I have feene under the Sunne, as an errour that proceedeth from the face of him that ruleth. Follic is fet in great excellencie >

CHAP. X.

Of NIMROD, BELVS, and NINVS: and of memorable thinges about those times.

That NIMEOD was the first after the floud that raigned like fourraigne Lord: and that his beginning seemeth to have beene of just authoritie.

HE first of all that raigned as soueraigne Lord after the floud was Nimrod, the Sonne of Culb, diftinguished by Moles from the rest (according to S. Augustine) in one of these two respects : either for his eminencie, and because he was the first of fame, and that tooke on him to command others : or elfe in that he was begotten by Chush, after his other children were also become Fathers; and of a later time then some of his Grand-children and Nephewes. Howfocuer, feeing ought to have no respect. This Empirie of Nimrod, both the Fathers and many later Writers call tyrannicall; the same beginning in Babel, (which is) confusion.

But it feemeth to mee that Melanchton conceived not amiffe hereof: the fame expolition being also made by the Authour of that worke called Onomasticum Theologium, who affirmes that Nimrod was therefore called Amarus Dominator, Abitter or Jeuere Gouernour, because his forme of rule seemed at first farre more terrible then Paternall authoritie. And therefore is he in this respect also called a mightie hunter: because he tooke and destroied both beasts and theeues. But S. Augustine vnderstands it otherwise, and converts the word (ante) by (contra) affirming therein, that Wimrod was a mightie hunter against God, Sicergo intelligendus est Gigas ille, venator contra Dominum, So is that Giant to be understood, a hunter against the Lord. But howforuer this word (a mightie hunter) be vinderstood; yet it rather appeareth, that as 10 Nimred had the command of all those, which went with him from the East into Shinaar : fo, this charge was rather given him, then by him vfurped. For it is no where found that Noah himselfe, or any of the Sonnes of his owne body came with this troupe into Babylonia: no mention at all being made of Noah (the yeares of his life excepted) in the fucceeding Storie of the Hebrewes; nor that Sem was in this difobedient troupe, or among the builders of Babel.

The fame is also confirmed by divers ancient Historians, that Wimrod, Suphne, and locton were the Captaines and leaders of all those which came from the East. And though Sem came not himselfe so farre West as Shinaar (his lot being cast on the East parts) yet from his sonnes Nephew Heber, the name and nation of the He- 22 brewes (according to the generall opinion) tooke beginning, who inhabited the Southermost parts of Chalden about the Citie of Vr; from whence Abraham was by God called into Charran, and thence into Canaan.

And because those of the race of Sem which came into Chalden were no partners in the ynbelceuing worke of the Tower: therefore (as many of the Fathers coniecture) did they retaine the first and most ancient language, which the Fathers of the first Age had left to Noah; and Noah to Sem and his issues. In familia HEBER remanfit heelingua, In the family of HEBERthis language remained (faith S. Augustine out of Epiphanius;) and this language Abraham vsed: yea it was anciently and before the floud the generall speech; and therefore first called (saith Calestinus) lingua humana: 20 the humane tonque.

We know that Goropius Becanus following Theodoret, Rabbi Mofes, Agyptius, Vergara, and others, is of an other opinion; but how soeuer we determine of this point, we may with good probabilitie resolue, that none of the godly seede of Sem were the chiefe leaders of this prefumptuous multitude. And feeing it is not likely but that fome one was by order appointed for this charge, we may imagine that Nimrod rather had it by just authoritie, then by violence of vsurpation.

δ. I I.

That NIMROD, BELVS, and NINVS were three distinct persons.

ENZO, and out of him Nauclerus with others make many Nimrods. Eusebius confounds him with Belius; and so doth S. Hierome vpon Ose: and these words of S. Augustine seeme to make him of the same opinion. Ibi autem NINV s regnabat post mortem patris sui BELLI, qui primus illie vegnauerat 65, annos, There did NINV s raigne after the death of his father BELVS, who first governed in Babylon sixtie five yeares. But it could not be viknowne to S. Augustine, that Nimrod was the establisher of that Empire: Mo-(es being plaine and direct therein. For the beginning of NIMRODS Kingdome (faith 50 he) was BABEL, EREC, ACCAD, and CHALNE, in the land of Shinaar: Wherefore Nimrod was the first King of Babel. And certainely it best agreeth with reason, that Ninus was the third, and not one with Nimrod, as Mercator (led by Clement) Suppofed: for in Winus time the world was marueiloufly replenished. And if S. Augustine had vindoubtedly taken Belus for Nimrod, he would have given him the name which the Scriptures giue him, rather then have borrowed any thing out of prophane Authors. And for those words of S. Augustine (qui primus illic regnauerat, who was the first that raigned there) supposed to be meant by Belus: those words doe not disproue that Nimrod was the founder of the Babylonian Empire. For although Inlins Cafar ouerthrew the libertic of the Romane Commonwealth, making himselfe a perpetuall Dictator, yet Augustus was the first established Emperour: and the first that raigned absolutely by sourraigne authoritic ouer the Romanes, as an Emperour. The like may be faid of Nimred, that he first brake the rule of Eldership and paternitic, laying the foundation of fourraigne rule, as Cafar did; and yet Belus was the first. who peaceably, and with a generall allowance exercifed fuch a power. Pererius is of opinion, that Belus and Nimrod were the fame, because many thinges are said of them both agreeing in time: for it was about 200. yeares after the floud (as they account) that Belus raigned; but fuch agreement of times proues it not. For fo. Edward the third, and his grand-child Richard the fecond, were Kings both in one yeare: the one dyed; the other in the same yeare was crowned King.

And yet the opinion (that Nimrod and Belus were one) is farre more probable then that of Mercator, who makes Ninus and Nimrod to be the fame. For it is plaine that the beginning of Nimrods Kingdome was Bahel, and the Townes adioyning: 20 but the first and most famous worke of Ninus was the Cittie of Ninus

Now whereas D. Siculus affirmeth that Ninus ouercame and Supprest the Babylonians, the same rather proueth the contrarie, then that Ninus and Ninus dwere one person. For Ninus established the seate of his Empire at Niniue in Affria, whence the Babylonians might (perchance) in disdaine thereof fall from his obedience. whom he recourred againe by strong hand; which was casse: Babylon being not walled till Semiramis time.

SEMIRAMIS with wals of bricke the Cittie did inclose.

Further where it is alleaged, that as the Scriptures call Nimrod mightie: fo Infline hath the same of Ninus, which is one of Mercators arguments; It may be answered, that fuch an addition might have beene given to many other Kings aswell. For if we may beleeue Instine; then were Vexoris King of Agypt, and Tanais of Scythia mightie Kings before Ninus was borne. And if we may compare the wordes of Mofes (touching Nimred) with the vndertakings of Ninus, there will be found great difference between them. For whereas Mercator conceiveth, that it was too early 40 for any that lived about the time of the confusion of languages, to have invaded and mastered those Citties so farre removed from Babel, namely Erec, Accad, and Chalne: which worke he therefore ascribeth to Ninus, as a man of the greatest vindertaking; and consequently would have Nimred to have beene long after the time, in which we suppose he flourished; and both those names of Nimrod and Nimus to belong to one person, to wit, to Ninus: to these thinges to make some answere. First, I doe not finde that supposition true, That euer Nimrod inuaded any of these Citties; but that hee founded them and built them from the ground, being the first after the floud, that conducted the children of Noah into those parts: and therefore had nothing built or erected to his hands.

Besides, whereas these Citties in many mens opinions are found to stand farreaway from Babylon, I finde no reason to bring me to that beleefe. The Cittie of Accad which the Septuagint cals Archard, and Epiphanius Archal; Iunius takes to be Nifibis in Mesopotamia: for the Region thereabout the Cosmographers (faith he) call Accabene for Accadene. Others understand Nisibis and Ninine to bee one Cittie : fo doc Strabo and Stephanus confound it with Charran; but all mistaken. For Nisibis, Accad, and Charran are distinct places. Though I cannot denie Accadene to be a Region of Melopotamia, the same which Arias Montanus out of S. Hierome cals Achad: and so doe the Hebrewes also call 2/1/ibis, which seemeth to be the cause of this miflaking. As for the Cittle of Eree, which the Septuagint call Orech, S. Augustine Oreg. and Pagninus Erec, this place Junius vnderstands for Aracca in Susiana: but there is alfo a Cittie in Comagena called Arace: and indeede likelihood of name is no cer-

Concerning the third Cittie (called Chalneh) some take it for Calinisis: of which Am. Marcellinus. S. Hierome takes it for Seleucia; Hierofolymitanus for Cteliphon: others 10 doe thinke it to be the Agrani vpon Euphrates, destroyed and razed by the Perlians. But let Moles be the Moderator and Judge of this difpute, who teacheth vs directly, that these Citties are not seated in so divers and distant Regions; for these behis wordes. And the beginning of his Kingdome (speaking of Nimrod) was Babel, Erech, Accad, and Chalnels, in the land of Shinaar : fo as in this Valley of Shinaar, or Babylonia, or Chaldaa (being all one) we must finde them. And therefore I could (rather of the two) thinke with Viterbiensis, that these foure made but one Babylon, then that they were Citties farre removed, and in feuerall Provinces, did not the Prophet Amos precifely diffinguish Chalne from Babylon. Goe you (faith A MOS) to Chalne, and from thence goe you to Hamath, and then to Gath of the Philistims. The Geneua transla- 20 tion favouring the former opinion, to let these Citties out of shinaar, hath a marginall note expressing that Shinaar was here named : not that all these Citties were therein feated, but to diffunguish Babylon of Chaldea, from Babylon in Egypt; but I finde little fubstance in that conceit. For fure I am, that in the beginning of Nimrods Empire there was no fuch Babylon, nor any Cittie at all to be found in £gypt: Baby . lon of Agypt being all one with the great Cittie of Cairo, which was built long after, not furre from the place where stood Memphis the ancient Cittie, but not so ancient as Babylon vpon Euphrates. Now that Chaine is fituate in the Valley of Shinaar, it hath beene formerly proued in the Chapter of Paradife. So as for any argument that may be brought to the contrarie, from the remote fituation of these three Cit- 20 ties from Babylon, we may continue in our opinion, That Nimrod, Belus, and Nimus, were diftinct and fucceffine Kings.

à. III.

That NIMROD, not AssvR, built Ninine: and that it is probable out of EsAY 23.13. that Assva built Vr of the Chaldecs,

Ow as of Nimrod: fo are the opinions of writers different touching Affar, and touching the beginning of that great state of Babylon and 49 Affyria: a controuerlie wearifomly disputed without any direct proofe, conclusion, or certaintie. But to me (of whome, where the Scriptures are filent, the voice of reason hath the best hearing) the interpretation of Junius is most agreeable; who belides all necessary consequence doth not disloyne the sense of the Scriptures therein, nor confuse the vnderstanding thereof. For in this fort he converteth the Hebrew Text. Erat enim principium regnicius Babel, & Erech, & Accad, & Chalneh, in terra Shinaaris; è terra hac processit m Affyriam vbi edificauit Niniuen: (which is) For the beginning of this Kingdome was Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Chalneh, in the land of Shinaar : and hee went forth of this landinto Affyria, and built Niniue. So as Iunius takes Affur in this place, not for any 50 person, but for the Region of Assyria: the land being so called in Moses time, and beforcit. For certainly the other construction, (where the word (Assur) is taken for Affin the Sonne of Sem) doth not answer the order which Moles observeth through all the Bookes of Genefis, but is quite contrarie vnto it. For in the beginning of the tenth Chapter he fetteth downethe Sonnes of Wosh in these wordes. Now these are the Generations of the Sonnes of NOAH: SEM, HAM, and IAPHETH, unto whom Sonnes were borne after the floud: then it followeth immediately. The Sonnes of I A-PHETH were GOMER, &c. fo as Inpheth is last named among Noahs sonnes, bee hee eldeft or youngeft: because he was first to be spoken of ; with whom ( having last named him) hee proceeds and fets downe his iffue, and then the iffue of his fonnes. first, the iffue of Gomer, Japheths eldest sonne; and then speakes of Janan and his sonnes : for of the rest of that familie hee is silent. Anon after hee numbreth the Sonnes of Ham, of which Culb was the eldeft: and then the fonnes of Culb and Miz-

10 raim; and afterward of Canaan; leaving Shem for the laft, because he would not difioyne the Storie of the Hebrewes. But after he beginneth with Sem he continueth from thence by Arphaxad, Shela, and Heber, vnto Abraham, and so to Iacob, and the Fathers of that Nation. But to have brought in one of the Sonnes of Shemin the middle of the generations of Ham, had been eagainst order; neither would Moles haue past ouer so slightly the erection of the Affyrian Empire, in one of the sonnes of Shem, if he had had any fuch meaning : it being the storic of Shems sonnes which he mostattended. For hee nameth Nimrod apart, after the rest of the Sonnes of Culb, because he founded the Babylonian and Assyrian Empire: and in the eleuenth Chapter he returnes to speake of the building of Babel in particular, having formerly named

20 it in the tenth Chapter, with those other Citties which Nimred founded in Shimaar. And as hee did in the tenth Chapter, fo also in the eleuenth he maketh no report of Shem, till fuch time as he had finished so much of Nimrod as he meant to touch; and then he beginneth with the iffue of Shem, which hee continueth to Abraham and Ifrael. And of Junius opinion touching Affur, was Caluin: to which I conceiue that P.Commestor in historia Scholastica gaue an entrance, who after he had delivered this place in some other sense, he vseth these wordes. Vel intelligendum non est de Assva filio SEM, &c. fed Assva (idest) Regnum Affyriorum inde egreffum est, quod tempore SARVG proaus ABRAHAMI factumeft, (which is) Or elfe it is not to be understood of Assur the Sonne of SEM, &c. but Assur (that is the Kingdome of the Affyrians)

20 came from thence (videlicet from Babylon) or was made out of it : which happened in the time of SARVG the great grand-father of ABRAHAM. After which he reconcileth the differences in this fort: If you take the ancient Belus (meaning Nimred) to bee the first erector of the Affyrian Empire, or the first Founder thereof, it is true quantum ad initium, respecting the beginning; but others conceine that it had beginning from Ninus, which is also true quantum adregni ampliationem, regarding the enlargement of the Empire. To this I may adde the opinion of Epiphanius, confirmed by Cedrenus, who takes Affur to be the fonne of Wimred : and fo doth Methodius , and Viterbiensis, S. Hierome and Cyrillus, and now lastly Torniellus: who faith hee tooke Torniell, Annel. vpon him that name of Affur after he had beaten the Affyrians, as Scipio did of A- face, in Gen, 10-

40 fricanus after his conquest in Africa: and that Assur was a common name to the Kings of Affyria, as it appeareth by many Scriptures, as Pfalme 81. Efay 10. Ofe 5. &c. but to helpe the matter he makes Nimrod of the race of Shem, and the fonne of Irari. But Rabanus Maurus, who was Arch-Bilhop of Mentz in the yeare of Christ 874 an ancient and learned writer, vnderstands this place with Commestor, or Commestor with him, agreeing in Substance with that translation of Iunius: to which wordes of Mofes he giueth this sense. De hac terra Assyriorum pullulauit imperium, qui ex nomine NINI, BELI filij, Ninum condiderunt, whem magnam, &c. Out of this land grew the of BELVS. On the contrarie Caluin objecteth this place of Efay. Behold the land of 23, 13, 50 the Chaldaans, this was no people, Assva founded it by the inhabitants of the wildernesses. then which there is no one place in the Scriptures that hath a greater diversitie in the translation and vinderstanding; infomuch as Michael de Palatio voon Flav (though in all else very diligent) passeth it ouer. But Caluin seemeth hereby to inferre, that because Affur founded the state of the Chaldeans, therefore also Affur rather then Nimrod established the Asserian Empire, and built Nimne: contrarie to the former translation of Iunius, and to his owne opinion. Now out of the Fulgar, (called Hieromes translation) it may bee gathered that Affur both founded and ruined this effate or Cittle of the Chaldeans, by E/ay remembred : vnto which Cittle, people or state, hee plainly telleth the Tyrians that they cannot trust, or hope for reliefe thence. Or rather it may be taken, that the Prophet maketh this Cittie of Chalden, and that estate, an example vnto those Phanicians, whom in this place hee fore-telleth of their ruine; which Cittie of Chaldes being of firength, and carefully defended, was (notwithflanding) by the Affyrians vtterly wasted and destroyed: whereby he gineth them knowledge, and foretelleth them, that their owne Cittle of Tyre, 10 (inuincible, as themfelues thought) should also soone after bee overturned by the fame Affrians: as (indeede) it was by Nabuchodonofor. And these be the words after Hierom. Ecce terra Chaldeorum, talis populus non fuit, Assva fundauit eam, in captinitatem traduxerunt robultos eius, suffoderunt domos eius, posuerunt eam in ruinam, (which is) Beholdtheland of the Chaldeans, fuch a people there were not (or this was no people, after the Geneua) Assve (or the Affrians) founded it, they carried away their frong men captine, they undermined their houses, and ruined their Cittie. The Septuagint expresse it but in a part of another Verse, in these wordes. Et in terra Chaldearum, & hac defolata est ab Affyrijs, quoniam murus eius corruit, making the fense perfect by the preceding Verse, which all together may be thus vnderstood. If thou goe oner 20 to Chittim (which is Macedon or Greece) yet thou fhalt have no reft, (speaking to the Tyrians) neither in the Lind of the Chaldaans, for this is made defolate by the Affyrians, be-cunfe their walles fell together to the ground. Pagninus and Vatablus connect it thus. Ecceterra Chasaym, iste populus non erat illic olim; nam Assva sundauit eam nauibus, erexerunt aresillius; continuerunt edes eius, pofuit eam in ruinam : which may beethus Englished. Behold the land of the Chaldeans, this people was not once therein inhabiting: for Assva built it a harbour for (hips, they erected the Towers thereof, and againe brake downe the houses thereof, and ruinated it. Junius in the place of thips fets the word (pro Barbaris that is, for the Barbarians; and the Geneua, by the Barbarians. Butthis is vndoubted that the Prophet Efay (as may be gathered by all the fense of the chapter) 20 did therein affure the Tyrians of their future destruction, which (accordingly) fell on them: wherein (for the more terrour) hee maketh choice to note the calamities of those places, Citties, and Regions, by whose Trade the state and greatnesse of the Trians was maintained; as by the Cilicians from Tharfis; from the Macedonians, and other Gracians under the name of Cittim; also by the Egyptians, the Chaldwans, and the reft. For Tyre was then the Mart Towne of the world most renowned. And (as it appeares in our discourse of Paradise) not the least part of her chiefe merchandize came in by the Cittie Vr or Vrehoa in Chaldea, where the body or chiefe ftreame of Euphrates (euen that ftreame which runneth through Babylon and Otris, which now falleth into Tigris) had his paffage into the Perfian Gulfe: though now 40 it be stopped up. For (as we have heretofore noted) the Arabians (that descended from Sheba and Raamah) dwelling on the East bankes of the Persian Gulfe, trading with the Tyrians (as those of Eden, Charran, and Chalne did) transported their merchandife by the mouth of Tigris, that is, from Teredon, and of Euphrates, that is, from Fr or Frebas: and then by Babylan, and thence by River and over Land they conveyed it into Spria, and so to Tyre: as they doe this day to Aleppo. So then Vr of the Chaldees was a Port Towne, and one of those Citties which had intelligence, trade, and exchange with the Tyrians: for it stood by the great Lakes of Chaldea, through which that part of Euphrates ranne, which paffage is now flopt vp. Eins eur fum vetuflas aboleuit (faith NIGER.) And Plinie, locus vbi Euphratis ostium fuit, flumen falfum, 50 Time hath worne away the channell of Euphrates: and the place where the mouth thereof was is a Bay of falt water. These thinges being thus, certainly (not without good probabilitie) wee may expound the Cittie of the Chaldees, whose calamities Esay here noteth for terrour of the Tyrians, to be the Cittie anciently called Vr; and (by Heestens)

Camerina; by Ptolomie Vrehoa: and by the Greeks Chaldeopolis, The Cittie of Chalden: which the Sonnes of Shem vntill Abrahams time inhabited. And whereas in all the Translations it is faid, that Aslur both founded it and ruined it: it may bee vnderstood, that Assurthe Founder was the sonne of Shem; and Assurthe destroiers were the Affrians, by whom those that inhabited Vr of Chaldea, were at length oppressed and brought to ruine: which thing God fore-seeing commanded Abraham thence to Charran, and sointo Canaan. And if the Hebrew word by Vatablus and Pagninus connerted (by ships) doe beare that sense; the same may be the better approued; because it was a Port Towne: and the River so farre vp as this Cittie of 10 Vr was in ancient time nauigable, as both by Plinie and Niger appeareth. And if the word (for the Barbarians) or (by the Barbarians) be also in the Hebrew Text, it is no leffe manifest, that the most barbarous Arabians of the Desert were and are the confronting, and next people of all other vnto it. For Chaldaa is now called Araedular, which fignifieth defertlands, because it in owner to that part of Arabia so called: and Cieero (calling those Arabians by the name of Iturans) addets that they are of all other people the most saluage; calling them homines omnium maxime

So as this place of Esty, which breedeth some doubt in Caluin, proueth in nothing the contrarie opinion, nor in any part weakeneth the former translation of In-20 nius, nor the interpretation of Comestor and Rabanus. For though other men haue not conceined (for any thing that I have read) that Assur is in this place diversly taken (as for the sonne of Sem, when he is spoken of as a builder of Vr; and when as a destroyer thereof, then for the Affyrian Nation) yet certainly the cuidence of the truth, and agreement of circumstances seeme to enforce it. And so this founding of the Cittie of the Chaldees by Affar (into which the most of the posteritie of Sem that came into Shinaar, and were separate for the Idolatrie of the Chusites and Nimrodians, retyred themselues) hath nothing in it to proue that the same Assurbuilt Ninue, or that the same Assur was all one with Ninus; except wee will make Assur. who was the sonne of Shem, both an Idolater, and the sonne of Belus. For (out of 20 doubt) Winus was the first notorious facrificer to Idols;& the first that set vp a Statue to be honoured as God. Now if Assure must bee of that race, and not of the familie of Sem, as he must be if he founded Winine, then all those which seeke to give him the honour thereof, doe him by a thousand parts more injurie, by taking from him his true Parent and Religion. Besides, if this supposed Asur whom they make the Founder of Ninine (and so the fonne of Belus) were any other, and not the fame with Ninus; then what became of him? Certainly he was very vnworthy and obscure, and not like to be the Founder of such an Empire and such a Cittie, if no man haue vouchsafed to leaue to pofteritie his expulsion thence, and how he lost that Empire againe or quitted it to Ni-40 nus: whose acts and conquests are so largely written, and (according to my apprehension) farre differing from truth. It will therefore bee found best agreeing to Scripture and to Reason, and best agreeing with the storie of that age written by prophane Authours, that Nimrod founded Babel, Erech, and Accad, and Chalne, the first workes and beginnings of his Empire, according to Moses, and that these works being finished within the Valley of Shinaar, hee looked farther abrode, and set in band the worke of Ninus, lying neare vnto the same streame that Babel and Chalne did: which worke his grand-child Ninus afterward amplified and finished, as Semiramis (this Nimus his wife) did Babylon. Hence it came to passe, that as Semiramis was counted the Foundresse of the Cittie which shee only finished: so also Ninus of Ni-5) nine. Quam quidem Babylonem potuit instaurare, Shee might repaire or renew Babylon, faith S. Augustine. For so did Nabuchodonosor vaunt himselfe to be the Founder of Babylon alfo, because he built vp againe some part of the wall ouerborne by the furie of the River: which worke of his stood till Alexanders time, whereupon he vaunted thus. Is not this great Babel which I have built?

Of the acts of NIMROD and BELVS, as fare as now they

Vtto returne to the storie, it is plaine in Moses, that Nimrod (whom Philo interpreteth transfugium; and Iulius Africanus furnamed Saturne) was the establisher of the Babylonian Monarchie, of whom there is no other thing written, then that his Empire in the beginning confisted of those foure Citties before remembred, Babel, Erec, Accasi, and 10 Chalne: and that from hence he propagated his Empire into Affyria; and in Affyria built foure more Citties (to wit) Niniue, Rehoboth, Celah, and Refen. And feeing that he spent much time in building Babel it selfe and those adioyning, and that his trauailes were many ere he came into Shinaar: that worke of Babel ( fuch as it was) with the other three Citties, and the large foundation of Niniue, and the other Citties of Affria which he builded (confidered with the want of materials, and with other impediments) were of greater difficultie then any thing performed by his fucceffours in many yeares after: to whose vidertakings time had given so great an increase of people; and the examples and patternes of his beginning so great an aduancement and encouragement: in whose time (faith Glycas) all these Nations 20 were called Meropes, à sermonis linguarum terras, divisione, By reason that the earth and the speech were then divided.

Belus, or Bel, or Impiter Belus, fucceeded Nimrod, after he had raigned 114. yeares; of whose acts and undertakings there is little written. For it is thought that he spent much of his time in difburdening the low lands of Babylon, and drying and making firme ground of all those great Fennes and ouerflowne Marishes which adjoyned vnto it. For any of his warres or conquests there is no report, other then of his begunne enterprise against Sabatius King of Armenia, and those parts of Seythia which Berofus cals Seythia Saga, whose Sonne and Successour Barzanes became subject and Tributarie to Ninu, that followed the warre to effect, which was by his Father Be- 30 lies begunne.

That wee are not to merasile how so many Kingdomes could be cerested about the seimes: and of VENORIS of Agypt, and TANAIS of Scythia.

Hat so many Kingdomes were crested in all those Easterne parts of the world fo foone after Nimrod, (as by the storie of Ninus is made ma- 40 nifeft) the causes were threefold; (namely) Opportunitie, Example, and Necessitie. For Opportunitie being a Princesse liberall and powerfull bestoweth on her first entertainers many times more benefits, then either Fortune can, or Wisedome ought; by whose presence alone the vnderstanding minds of men receive all those helps and supplies, which they either want or wilh for: so as every leader of a troupe (after the division of tongues and dispersion of people) finding these faire offers made vnto them, held the power which they poffest, and gouerned by discretion all those people, whom they conducted to their deftined places. For it cannot be conceined, that when the Earth was first divided, mankinde straggled abroade like beasts in a Defert; but that by a- 50 greement they disposed themselves, and vndertooke to inhabite all the knowne parts of the world, and by distinct Families and Nations: otherwise, those remote Regions from Babylon and Shinaar, which had Kings, and were peopled in Winus time, would not have beene possestin many hundreds of yeares after, as then they were; neither did those that were sent, and trauailed farre off (order being the true parent of prosperous successe) vndertake so difficult enterprises without a Conducter or Commander. Secondly, the Example of Nimrod with whom it succeeded well, strengthened every humour that aspired. Thirdly, Necessitic resolved all men by the arguments of common miferies, that without a Commander and Magifirate, neither could those that were laborious, and of honest dispositions, enjoy the haruest of their owne trauailes : nor those which were of little strength, secure themselues against forcible violence: nor those which sought after any proportion of greatneffe; either poffeffe the fame in quiet, or rule and order their owne ministers and attendants.

That these causes had wrought these effects, the undertakings and conquests of Ninus (the fonne of Belus) made it apparent: for he found every where Kings and Monarches, what way focuer his Ambition led him in the warres.

But Ninged (his grand-father) had no companion King, to vs knowne, when he first tooke on him soueraignetic and sole commandement of all those the children of Noah, which came from the East into Babylonia: though in his life time others also raised themselues to the same estate; of which hereafter. Belus (his sonne and fucceffour) found Sabatius King of Armenia and Scythia, fufficiently powerfull to refifthis attempts: which Sabatius I take to be the fame, which Justine cals Tanais;

20 and should conjecture, that Mizraim had beene his Vexoris, were it not that I vehemently suspect some errour, (as Iustine placeth him) in the time of that Fexoris, who See more of by many circumstances seemes to me rightly accounted by the judicious and lear-this, 12.0f this ned Reineccius all one with the great Sefostris, that lived certaine ages after Ninus, helt This Belief the fecond King of Babylon, raigned 65, yeares according to the common

Of the name of Belvs, and other names affine vnto it.

Hence this fecond King and Succeffour of Nimrod had the name of Bel, or Belus, question hath beene made : for it seemeth rather a name imposed, or (of addition) given by Ninus, then affumed by Belus

Cyrillus against Iulian cals the Father of Ninus Arbelus, affirming that he was the first of all men that caused himselfe to be called a God; which were it fo, then might the name of Belus be thence derived. But Bel. as many learned writers have observed, signifieth the Sunne in the Chaldean tongue; and therefore did Ninus and Semiramis give that name to their Father, that hee might be honoured as 40 the Sunne, which the Babylonians worshipped as a God. And as this title was affumed in after-times by divers others of the Chaldwar Princes, and Babylonian Satrape: fo was it yfed (in imitation) by the chiefe of the Carthaginians and other Nations as fome Historians have conceived.

To this Bel, or Belus, pertaine (as in affinitie) those voices of Baal, Baalim, Belphegor, Beelphagor, Bellebub, and Beellephon. Those that are learned in the Hebrew and Chaldean convert the word Baal by the Latine Princeps militia, Chiefe in the warre, though Daniel was fo called (faith SVIDAS) ob honorem explicationis arcanarum rerum. In honour of his expounding fecrets. S. Hierome makes Bel, Beel, and Baal, to have the fame Hier in Off. c. i. fignification : and faith, that the Idoll of Babylon was fo called, which Ninus in me-50 morie of his Father fet vp to be worshipped : to which that he might adde the more honour and reuerence, he made it a Sanctuarie and refuge for all offendors. Hence (faith Lyranus) came Idolatric, and the first vse of Images into the world. Isidor Lyrin savien. doth interprete Bel by Vetus, old or ancient; adding, that as among the Affrians it is Salom, e.i. taken for Saturne and the Sunne: foin the Punick or Carthaginian language it fignifi- 1/id.18.e.115 eth God. Glycus makes it an Affrican name properly; and 10fephus a Tyrian. Heal-fo affirmeth that the Idoll which the Mondies worthipped (by them erected on the mountaine Phegor, or Peor, and called Baal) is the fame which the Latines call Priapus, the God of Gardens; which was also the opinion of S. Hierome. But that the word Bel, or Beel, was as much to fay as God, appeareth by the word Beelzebib, the Idoil of Accurent For Bel, or Beel foundeth (God) and Sebub (Flies or Hornets:) by which name (notwithstanding) the lewes expresse the Prince of Deuils. But the Prophet Ofe teacheth vs the proper fignification of this word from the voice of God himselfe; and at that day (faith the Lord) thou shalt call me Is HI, and shalt call me no more BAALIM: for I will take away the name of BAALIM out of their mouthes. For al- 10 though the name of Baal, or Bahal, be infilly to be yied towards God; yet in refpect that the fame was given to Idols, God both hated it and forbadit. And the vling of the word Bel among the Childeans for the Sunne, was not because it properly signifieth the Sunne, but because the Sunne there was worshipped as a God: as also the Fire was, tanquam Solis particula. As for the wordes compounded (before remembred) as Belphegor, and Belfephon; Belfephon is expounded out of FAGIVS, Dominus (becale vel cultodia, The Lord of the watch-tower or of the guard: the other word noteth the Idoll, and the place wherein it was worthipped. It is also written Belpeor, or Baalpeor: and Peor (they say) is as much as Dennauit; and therefore the word toyned expresset a naked Image. Some there are that call this Belus, the sonne of Sa- 20 turne: for it was vsed among the Ancients to name the Father Saturne, the Sonne Author, de equis Inpiter, and the grand-child Hercules. SATVEN I dicuntur familiarum Nobilium, Regum qui vrbes condiderunt senisimi; primogeniti eorum I oves & Ivnones; Her-CVLES vero nepotes corum fortisimi, The ancientest of Noble families, and Kings which founded Cities, are called SATVRNES; their first borne IVPITERS and IVNOES; their waliant Nephewes HERCVLES. But this Belus (faith L.Vines) was famous by reason of his warlike fonne Ninus, who caused his Father to be worshipped as a God by the name of Jupiter Babylonius, whom the Leyptians (transported by the dreames of their antiquitie) make one of theirs. For Neptune (fay they) vpon Libya the Daughter of Epaphus begat this Jupiter Belus, who was Father to Agyptus. They 30 adde, that this Belus carrying a Colonie to the River of Enphrates there built a Cittie, in which he ordained Priests after the Agyptian manner. But were there any Belus the sonne of Epaphus and Isis, or of Neptune and Libys, or (with Eusebius) of Telegonus, who after the death of Apis married Is, (Cecrops then raigning in Athens) the same was not this Babylonian Belus of whom we speake, but rather some other Belus, of whom the £gyptians fo much vaunted.

of the worshipping of images begunne from Belve in Babel.

S for the Babylonian Belus, he was the most ancient Belus, and the Inuentour of Aftronomie, if Plinie fay true : from whence the Ægyptians might borrow both the name and the doctrine. Some part of the Temple, in which his Statue or Image was honoured as a God, the fame Author affirmeth that it remained in his time.

Strabo.l.1 2.c.3.

Of the Sepulcher of Belus, Strabo writeth thus. Oner the River (faith he) there are gardens, where they fay the ruines of BELV's bis Tombe, which XERXES brake up, are yet remaining. It was a square Pyramis made of bricke, a furlong high, and on 50 La. continuian, every fide it had a furlong in breadth. It appeares by Cyril against Iulian, that hee obtained divine worthip yet living: for fo hee writes of him (calling him Arbelus.) ARBELVS, vir superbus & arrogans, primus hominum dicitur à subditis Deitatis nomen accepisse: perseuer arunt igitur Asyrij, & finitima illis gentes sacrificantes ei.

ARBELVS, a man very proud and arrogant, is accounted to be the first of all men that was euer honoured by their subjects with title of Dettie; (or with the name of God) The Affrians therefore and the bordering Nations have perseured, sacrificing to him. Eucn Arius alfo, whom Suidas cals Thuras, who fucceeded next after Ninyas, was made an Idoll-God among them, if we credit Suidas, Снар.10. $.7.

After Ninus (that is, after Ninyas) Thuras raigned (faith Suidas) whom they called after the name of the Planet Mars; a man of lharpe and fierce disposition, who bidding battaile to Caucasus of the stocke of Iapheth slue him. The Assirians worshipped him for their God, and called him Baal (that is) Mars; thus farre Suidas. Nei-10 ther is it vnlikely but that many among idolatious Nations were Deified in their life-times, or soone after: though I denie not but that the most of their Images and Statue were first creeted without dinine worship, only in memorie of the glorious acts of Benefactors, as Glycas rightly conceineth; and so afterward the Deuill crept into those wodden and brazen carcases, when posteritie had lost the memorie of their first inuention. Hereof Isidore speaketh in this manner. Quos autem Pagani Deos afferunt homines fuerunt, & pro vniuscuiusq, vita meritis vel magnificentia, coli apud suos post mortem caperunt : sed (damonibus persuadentibus) quos illi pro sua memoria honor auerunt, minores Deos existimarunt : ad ista verò magis excolenda accesserunt Poetarum figmenta, They were men (faith he) whom the Pagans affirmed to be Gods: and eucry 20 one for his merits or magnificence beganne after his death to bee honoured of his owne. But at length (the Deuils perswading) they accounted them lesser Gods, whose memories they honoured: and the fiftions of the Poets made the opinions (concerning the honours of the dead) much more superstitions.

And that the worshipping of Images was brought in by the Pagans, and Heather Nations, it is not Islane alone that witneffeth; but Gregorie: Gentilitas (faith hee) Gregorocalar, inucntrix & caput of imaginum, Gentilifme is the inventresse and ground of images : and ambros, in plat. Ambrose; Gentes lignum adorant, tanquam imaginem Dei, The Gentils adore wood as it 108. were the image of God. Eufebius also affirmeth as much, and calleth the worshipping Eufeb. 17. 618. of images a custome borrowed of the Heathen. The like hath S. Augustine against Aug. 6.13. 30 Adimantus. Et verentur (faith LACTANTIVS) ne religio vana sit, si nihil videant Lastilizaca. quod adorent, They feare their religion would be vaine, should they not fee that which they

And (out of doubt) the Schoolemen shift this fearefull custome very strangely. For feeing the very workemanship is forbidden, how can the heart of a wife Christian fatisfic it selfe with the distinction of Doulin and Hyperdoulin, which can imply nothing but some difference of worshipping of those images after they are made? And it is of all things the most strange, why religious and learned men should straine their wits to defend the vse of those things, which the Scriptures haue not only nowhere warranted, but expresly in many places forbidden, and cursed the practifers thereof. 40 Yet this doctrine of the Deuill was so strongly and subtilly rooted, as neither the expresse Commandement of God himselfe, Thou shalt not make any grauen image, nor all the threatnings of Mofes and the Prophets after him could remoue, weede it. or by feare, or by any perswasions leade the hearts of men from it. For where shall we finde wordes of greater weight, or of plainer instruction then these ? Take therefore good heede to your selues (for yee saw no image in the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horch out of the midlt of the fire) that yee corrupt not your selues, and make you a grauen image, or representation of any figure, whether it be the likenesse of Atale or

And besides the expresse Commandement, Thou shalt make thee no graven image 50 and the prohibition in many Scriptures, foit is written in the booke of Wifedome; That the invention of Idols was the beginning of Whoredome: and the finding of them the corruption of life : for they were not from the beginning, neither shall they continue for ener.

And whereas the Schoolemen affirme, that the Prophets spake against the worshipping of the Heathen Idols, it is manifest that Mases spake of images of the liuing God, and not of Baal and the rest of that nature, for you faw no image (faith Mo-SES) that day that the Lord lbake vnto you in Horeb. Surely it was excellently faid of Balil, Woli alianam in illo formamimaginari, ne circumferibas eum mente tua, Doe not imagine any forme to be in God, least thou limit or circumscribe him in thy minde too. Now. if the great Baff thought it a prefumption vnlawfull to reprefent a patterne of the infinite God to our owne thoughts and mindes, how farre doe those men presume that put him vnder the greazie penfill of a painter, or the ruftie axe or other instrument of a Carpenter or Caruer?

For as this dilhonour to the infinite and incomprehensible God beganne in Ba- 10 bel: fo did the Deuill transport and speede this inuention into all the Regions adiovning, and into Ægypt and Greece.

The Romanes for a while relisted the crection of these Idols and Images, refusing to set them in their Temples for 170. yeares, observing therein the Law of Numa: who thought it impictie to refemble things most beautifull, by things most base. But Tarquinius Priseus afterwards prevailing, and following the vanitie of the Grecians (a Nation of all others under the Sunne most deluded by Sathan) set up the images of their Gods; which (as St. Augustine witnesseth) that learned Varro both bewailed, and vtterly condemned : and which Seneca thus derideth. Simulachra deorum venerantur, illis supplicant, genu posito illa adorant, & cum hae suspiciant . fabros 20 qui illa fecere contemnunt, The images of the Gods are worshipped, those they pray unto qui uas secure consumanta, tou images of in ocus at a companyers, transcribe profession with bended knees; shofe they adore, and while they for greathy adone them, they contemne the hands-raffinen that made them: which also Sedulius the Poet in this fort > Heu miseri qui vana colunt, qui corde sinistro Religiosa sibi sculpunt simulachra, suumg, Factorem fugiunt, & que fecere verentur. Quis furor est? que tanta animos dementialudit? Vt volucrem, turpemá, bouem, toruumá, Draconem, Semi-hominema, canem supplex homo pronus adoret.

Ah wretched they that worship vanities, And confecrate dumbe Idols in their heart, Who their owne Maker (God on high) despise, And feare the worke of their owne hands and art. What furie? what great madneffe doth beguile Mens minds? that man should vgly shapes adore, Of Birds, or Buls, or Dragons, or the vile Halfe-dogge-halfe-man on knees for aide implore.

And though this deuife was barbarous, and first, and many yeares practifed by Heathen Nations onely, till the Iewes were corrupted in Egypt, yet it is not Seneca alone that laugheth to scorne the ignorant stupiditie of his Nation: but Iustin Martyr remembreth how the Sibyls inneighed against Images: and Hospinian, how Sophodes taught, that it was pernitious to the foules of men to erect and adore those bables. Strabo and Herodotus witnesse, that the Persians did not erect or set up any Statue of their Gods. Lyourgus neuer taught it the Lacedemonians, but thought it impietie to represent immortall natures by mortall figures. Eusebius also witnesseth in his fixt booke de praparatione Enangeliea, that it was forbidden by a Law in Seriea, 50 or among the Brachmans in India, that Images should be worshipped. The same do Tacitus and Crinitus report of the ancient Germans. Many other Authors might be remembred that witneffe the diffaine which the Heathen themselves had of this childish Idolatrie: of which Hospinian hath written at large in his Tract de origine imaginum. And it was truly faid, Omnia mala exempla bonis initiis orta funt. All ill examples have forung from good beginnings. The Heathen at first made these Status and Images, but in memoric of fuch remarkable men, as had deferued best of their countries and commonwealthes: Effigies hominum (faith Plinie) non folebant expriminifi aliqua illustri causa perpetuitatem merentium: Men were not wont to make pictures, but of men which merited for some notable cause to be perpetually remembred. And though of the more ancient Papiftes, fome have borrowed of the Gentiles (as appeareth in Lactantius) that defence for Images: That Simulachra are pro element is literarum, ot per ea discerent homines Deum inuisibilem cognoscere : Images (say they, and so before them

10 the Heathen faid) are in flead of letters, whereby men might learne to know the initfible God: in which understanding (perhaps) they no otherwise esteemed them then pictures indeed; yet as that of Bad or Bel fet vp in memoric of Belus the Babylonian became afterwards the most reuerenced Idoll of the world, by which so many Nations (and they which were appropriate to God himfelfe) were mifled and cast away: fo those very stockes and stones, and painted canuases (called the pictures of Christ, our Ladie, and others ) were by thousands of ignorant people, not onely adored, but esteemed to have life, motion, and vnderstanding. On these stockes we call (faith the booke of Wifedome) when we paffe through the raging waves, on these stockes more rotten then the (hip that carrieth vs.

20 This Heathen invention of Images became so fruitfull in after-times, breeding an infinite multitude of Gods, that they were forced to diffinguish them into degrees and orders; as Dij Confentes, seumaiorum gentium; selecti, Patritii, insigniores dii medij : Counselling Gods, or Gods of the mightiest Nobilitie, select Gods, Patrian, Gods of marke, and common Gods (which the Romanes called Medioxumi) dij infimi, and terre-Briall Heroes, and multitudes of other Gods: of which S. Augustine hath made large mention in his booke de Ciuitate Dei. But (faith Lactantius) among all those Lib. 15 miserable soules and rotten bodies, worshipped by men more like to their idols, did Epimenides Cretensis (by what good Angell moued I know not ) crect in the Athenian fields, Altars to the vnknowne God, which stood with the same title and dedi-

30 cation even to the times of S. Paul; who made them first knowe to whom those Altars belonged, and opened their eies which were capable of grace, that they might discerne the difference betwixt that light which lighteneth cuery man, and the obscure and stinking mist wherein the Denill had so many yeares led and misled them. And it fufficed not that the multitude of these Gods was so great in generall, or that euerie Nation had some one which tooke particular and singular care of them; as Iupiter in Creete, Isis in Agypt, in Athens Minerva, in Samos Iuno, in Paphos Venus, and so of all other parts; but enery Citie, and almost enery familie had a God a-part. For as it is written in the fecond of kings: the men of Babel; made Succoth Benoth; and the men c.17.0.18.31. of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Albima, and the Auins made Nib-

40 haz and Tarrak, and the Sephernaims burnt their children in the fire to Adramelech. All which how plainly hath the Prophet Efai derided? Men cut downe trees, rinde them. burne apart of them, make readie their meate, and warme themselues by the fire thereof, and of the residue hee maketh a God; an Idoll; and prayeth unto it : but God hath sout their eyes from light, and their heartes from understanding, It is therefore safest for a Christian to beleeue the commandements of God so direct against I dolatrie, to belecue the Prophets, and to beleeue Saint Paul: who speaketh thus plainely and feelingly. My beloued flie from Idolatrie, I speake as vnto them which have understanding. C.44: indge yee what I fay.

Nto this Belus fucceeded Ninus, the first that commaunded the exercise of Idolatrie, the first that iniuriously inusted his neighbour Princes, and the first that without shame or sear committed adultery in publique. But as of Belus there is no certaine memorie (astouch-in particulars:) fo of this Nimus (whose Story is gathered out of 10 prophane Authours) I finde nothing so warrantable, but that the same may bee disputed, and in the greatest part doubted. For although that pecce of Berofus set out and commented vpon by Amins hath many good things in it, and gineth great light (aschytreum noteth) to the vinderstanding of Diodorus Sieulus, Dion, Halycannalisms, and others: yet Leolanius Vines, B. Rhenmus, and others after them haue layed open the imperfection and defects of the fragment; proping directly that it among the ten seminalisms of the seminalisms of th

Ctefias of Cnidus (a Citticadioyning to Halicarnaffus) who lived together with Cyrusthe yonger, and with Artacerase (Macmon), gathered his Hilbory out of the Persian Records, and reaches has farre youngerds as Aims and Somiranis: and though in the Story of Cyrus the yonger Xenophon approuch him in some things, and Athenan Paulanias and Tertuslian: cite him; yet so base and apparent are his flatteries of the times and Princes with whome hee lived, and so incredible are the numbers 30 which he findes in the Armies of Ximus, and especially of Semiranis; as whatsoever his reportes were, times have consumed his workes, saving some very sew exceptions lately published.

And therefore in things vnectratine, feeing a long difcourfe cannot be pleafing to men of indgement, I will paffe ouer the acts of this third $Afprinn$, in as few wordes as I can expresse them. $S.Angasiine affirmes that Nome mattered all $Afa$, India excepted. Others say that he wannet all, saue India, India, India in Astabia. For hee made Aria to $fAstabia$ the companion of his conquests, with whom he entred into a straight league of amittic, because he commanded many people and was his kinsman, and a $Chafiste$, and the nearest Prince confronting Babylonia. His sinstenerprise was 40 ypon $9713, which hee might easily fallodue, both because hee invaded it on the so-daine, and because it lay next him: and also because the Arabians and their King Arieus (which bordered $97is a last fisted him in the conquest thereof.

The King of Armenia, Barzanes, he forced to acknowledge him, and to aide him in his warre againft Zowaster. for from Armenia hee bent himselfe that way toward the East; but that euer he commanded the lesser Asia, I doe not beleeve, for none of his successors had any possession of his successors.

His third warre was against Phanns, King of the Medes, whom it is said that hee ouerthrew, and cruelly murthered with his seuen children, though others affirme that they all dyed in one battaile against him. Whether hee inuaded Zeoastist be 50 fore the building or amplifying of Nomine, or after, it is vincertaine. It is said that he made two expeditions into Bustivis and that finding little or ill fuccesse in the first he returned, and set the work of Nomine forward: and then a second time entred Bustivis with 1700000 foote, and 200000 horse, and 10000. fixe hundred Chariots: being encountred by Zorozsser with 400000. But Nimus preuailing; and Angade Cinit. Zorozsser flame, he entred farther into the Countrie, and bestiged the chiefe Cittie Partheroof, called Bulfra or Bulfrion (shith Stephanus:) which by a passage found, and stephalerion an assume the wife of One of the North Stephanus: which by the control and possible of the person this occasion Nimus both admiring her indgement and valour, together with her person and external beautie, fancied her for strongly, as (neglecting all Princely respects) he tooke her from her husband, whose eyes he threatned to thrust out if hee refused to consient. He therefore yeelding to the passion of some in Nimus, and to the passion of sorrow in himselfe, by the strong perswasions of shame and dishonour, call himselfe head-long into the water and died.

Of ZOROASTER, Jupposed to baue beene the chiefe Authour of Magick arts: and of the diuers kinds of Magicke.

ð. I.

That ZOROASTER was not CHAM, nor the first inventor of Astrologie, or of Magicke: and that there were duers great Magitians of this name.

CHAP.II. S.I.

OROBSTER King of the Baltrians, Vincentius supposeth to be Cham, the sonne of Noah: A fancie of little probabilitie. For Cham, was the paternall Ancester of Ninus; the father of Chus; the grandfather of Ninus; the same seems, the father of Nimus, It may be that Vincentius had heard of that booke which was called Scripture Cham, denised by some wicked knaue, and so intituled: of which Sixtus Sements hath made the due mention.

It is reported by Cassanus, that Serenus Abbas gaue cossim in Otta.

S. Angultine noteth that Zoroafter was faid to have laught at his birth, when all other children weepe; which prefaged the great knowledge which afterward heat-tained vnto: being taken for the inuentor of naturall Magieke and other arts; for the corrupter, faith Plinie and Infrine. But I doe not thinke that Zoroafter invented the doctrine of the Horoscopes or Nativities; or first found out the nature of hearbs, flones, and minerals, or their Sympatheticall or Antipathethicall workings; of which I know not what King of chaldea, is also made the Inuentour I rather thinke that these knowledges were farre more ancient, and left by Noah to his sonnes. For Abraham who had not any acquaintance with Zoroaster, (as Iosephus reporteth) was no leffe learned herein then any other in that age, if hee exceeded not all men then lining: differing from the wifedome of after-times in this, that he knew and acknowledged the true cause, and giver of life and vertue to nature and all naturall things; whereas others (forgetting Gods infinite, differfed, and vniuerfall power) admired 10 the infruments, and attributed proper firength to the things themfelues, (from which the effects were fentible) which belonged to that wifedome, Which being one, and remaining in it felfe, can doe all things and reneweth all.

Now whether this Zorozsfer (ouerthrowne by Ninus) were the same which was fo excellent a Naturalist, it is doubted. For Zoroaster the Magician, Ctesias cals Oxyartes, whom Plinie finds of a later time. And if Zoroaster were taken away by a Spirit (being in the midst of his Disciples) as some Authors report, then Zoro-Scaliz in Eufeb. ailer, flaine by Ninus, was not the Magician : which is also the opinion of Sca-

Againe, Josephus and Cedrenus affirme that Seth first found out the Planets, or 20 tofey.l.t.ant.c.4 wandring Starres, and other Motions of the Heauens: for if this art had beene inuented by Zoroafter, hee could not have attained to any fuch excellencie therein, in his owne life time; but being a man (as it feemeth) of fingular judgement, hee might adde somewhat to this kinde of knowledge, and leaue it by writing to po-

But of this Zoroafter there is much dispute: and no lesse jangling about the word and art of Magieke. Arnobius remembreth foure to whom the name of Zorosster, or Zoroastres was given: which by Hermodorus and Dinon seemeth to bee but a cognomen, or name of art, and was as much to fay, as aftrorum cultor. The first, Arnobius calleth the Bactrian, which may be the fame that Ninus ouerthrew: the second, a 20 Chaldaan and the Astronomer of Minus the third was Zoroaster Pamphylius, who lined in the time of Cyrus, and his familiar : the fourth, Zoroafter Armenius, the Nephew of Hostianes, which followed Xerxes into Greece: betweene whom and Cyrus there past 78. yeares. Suidas remembreth a fift, called Personedus sapiens : and Plato speaketh of Zoroaster the sonne of Oromasdes; which Picus Mirandula con-

Now of what Nation the first and chiefe Zoroaster was, it is doubted. Plinie and Laertius make him a Persian. Gemissibius or Pletho, Ficinus and Steuchius make him a Chaldean. But by those bookes of one Zoroaster, found by Picus Mirandula, it appeareth plainly, that the Author of them was a Chaldean by Nation, though the word 40 (Chaldean) was as often given to the learned Priests peculiarly, as for any distinguishment of Nations. Porphyrius makes the Chaldei and Magi divers; Picus the fame. But that this Zoroafter was a Chaldean both by nation and profession, it appeareth by his bookes, which (faith Picus) were written in the Chaldean tongue; and the Comment in the fame language. Now that the Magi and they were not differing, it may be judged by the name of those bookes of Zoroaster, which in an Epistle of Mirandula to Ficinus, he faith, to be intituled, Patris Ezre Zonoastris & Mel-CHIOR magorum oracula.

of the name of Magia: and that it was anciently farre divers from conturing, and Witchcraft.

Ow for Magicke it felfe; which Art (faith Mirandula) pauci intelli- Pic. Mir. It is true that many men abhorre the very name and word (Magus) because of Simon Magus: who being indeede, not Magus, but Goës, (that is) familiar with euill fpirits, vfurped that title. For Magicke, Conjuring, and Witcherie are farre differing arts, whereof Plinic being ignorant fcoffeth thereat. For Nero (faith Plinie) who Plin L30 life, had the most excellent Magicians of the East sent him by Tyridates King of Arme- nat. min, who held that Kingdome by his grace, found the art after long studie and labour

Magus is a Persian word primitiuely; whereby is exprest such a one as is altoge- Poplyr & Ather conversant in things divine. And (as Plato affirmeth) the art of Magicke is the Plato in Alcib. art of worshipping God. To which effect Apollonius in his Epistles expounding the 20 word (unges) faith, that the Perfians called their Gods unges : whence he addeth that Magus is either & xard owon 860 or Beparelles Dear (that is) that Magus is a name sometime of him that is a God by nature; fometimes of him that is in the feruice of God: in which latter fense it is taken Matt. c.2. v. 1. And this is the first and highest kinde : which Piecolominie calleth divine Magicke : and these did the Latines newly Piecol, de destina intitle [apientes or wifemen: For the feare and worship of God is the beginning of knowledge. He also hath deliuered that there are Deuils earthly and wandering, and enemies

Wilemen of Babel.

His Majestie also in his first booke of Demonologie c. 2. acknowledgeth, that in the Persian tongue the word (Magus) imports as much as a contemplator of divine 40 and heavenly sciences; but vniustly so called, because the Chaldaans were ignorant of the true divinitie. And it is also right which His Maiestie anoweth, that under the name of Magicke all other vnlawfull arts are comprehended, and yet doth His Maiefie distinguish it from Necromancie, Witcheraft, and the rest: of all which hee hath written largely and most learnedly. For the Magicke which His Maiestie condemneth Demonitor J. 22 is of that kinde whereof the Deuill is a partie. Daniel in his second Chapter nameth 6.1. foure kinds of those Wifemen: Arioli, Magi, Malesici, & Chaldei. Ariolithe old Latine translation calleth Sophistes: Vatablus and Pagninus Genethliacos, or Phylicos, or Philosophers, or (according to the note of Vatabius) Naturalists: Nempe funt Magi apud Barbaros, quod Philosophi apud Gracos (scilicet) dininarum humanarum g, rerum scien-50 tiam profitentes, For the Magi are the same with the Barbarians, as the Philosophers are with the Gracians (that is) men that professe the knowledge of things both divine and human. The Greeke and the English call them Inchaunters; Junius Magicians: Castalion Coniccturers: in the Syrian they are all foure by one name called Sapientes Babylonis, The

The third kinde are Malefici, or Venefici; in Hierome, Pagnin, and the Septuagint Wisches, or Porfoners : in Junius Prafligiatores, or Sorcerers, as in English.

That Witches are also rightly so called Venesici, or Poysoners; and that indeede there is fuch a kinde of Malefici, which without any art of Magicke or Necromancie vie the helpe of the Deuill to doe mischiefe, His Majestie confirmeth in the first chapter of his fecond booke: speaking also in the fifth chapter of their practise, to mixe the powder ofdead bodies with other thinges by the Deuill prepared; and atother times to make pictures of waxe, or clay, or otherwife (as it were Sacramentaliter) to 15 effect those things, which the Deuill by other meanes bringeth to passe.

The fourth, all Translatours call Chaldeans: who tooke vpon them to foretell all things to come, as well naturall as humane, and their events; and this they vaunted to performe by the influences of the Starres by them observed, and understood.

Such were, and to this day partly (if not altogether) are the corruptions, which haue made odious the very name of Magicke, hauing chiefly fought (as is the manner of all impostures) to counterfeit the highest and most noble part of it, yet so as they have also crept into the inferiour degrees.

A fecond kinde of Magicke was that part of Astrologie, which had respect to sowing and planting, and all kinds of agriculture and hufbandrie: which was a know- 20 ledge of the motions and influences of the Starres into those lower elements.

Philo Indeus goeth farther, affirming that by this part of Magicke or Altrologies. together with the motions of the starres and other heauenly bodies. Abraham found out the knowledge of the true God, while he liued in Chaldaa: Qui contemplatione creaturarum cognouit Creatorem, (faith Io, DAMASCEN.) Who knew the Creatour by the contemplation of the creature. Iofephus reporteth of Abraham that he instructed the Agyptians in Arithmeticke and Astronomie, who before ABRAHAMS comming unto them knew none of these sciences.

And so doth Archangelus de Burgo in defence of Mirandula against Garlius, A L Ex-See vponlis ANDER & EVPOLEMON dicent, quod ABRAHAM fanctitate & fapientia omnium 20 pressantissimus Chaldeos primum, deinde Phanices, demum Ægyptios sacerdotes Astrologiam & dinina docuerit, ALEXANDER (faith hee, meaning Alexander Polyhistor) and EVPOLEMON affirme that ABRAHAM the holieft and wifeft of men did first teach the Chaldeans, then the Phanicians, lastly the Ægyptian Priests, Astrologie and di-

The third kinde of Magicke containeth the whole Philosophie of nature; not the brablings of the Ariflotelians, but that which bringeth to light the inmost vertues, and draweth them out of natures hidden bosome to humane vse. Virtutes in centro centrilatentes, Vertues hidden in the center of the center, according to the Chymifts. Of this fort were Albertus, Arnoldus de villanous, Raymond, Bacon, and many others; 49 and before these, in elder times and who better understood the power of nature, and how to apply things that worke to things that fuffer, were Zoroziter before fooken of: Apollonius Tyaneus remembred by St. Hierome to Paulinus; in some mens opinion Numa Pompilius among the Romanes: among the Indians Thefpian: among the Agyptians Hermes: among the Babylonians Budda: the Thracians had Zamolxis: the Hyperborians (as is supposed) Abbaris: and the Italians Petrus Aponensis, The Magicke which these men profest is thus defined. In all these three kindes princeps, cantla which other men divide into foure, it feemeth that Zoroafter was exceedingly learnumg, perfeit ned : especially in the first and highest. uestigate by any naturall knowledge: hee speaketh of Angels, and of Paradife: approucth the immortalitic of the foule : teacheth Truth, Faith, Hope, and Loue, discoursing of the Abstinence and Charitie of the Magi: which Oracles of his, Pfellus, Ficinus, Patritius, and others have gathered and translated.

Of this Zoroafler, Eufebius in the Theologie of the Phanicians vling Zoroaflers owne wordes. Sixtus Senensis speaking of the wisedome of the Chaldrans, doth distinguish those Lassiace wife men into fine orders, (to wit) Chafcedim, or Chaldaans: Afaphim, or Magicians: Chartumim; (which hee translates Arioli, or Sophists) Mecasphim, or Malesici. or Venefici, Witches, or Poyfoners; and Gazarim Augures, or Arufines, or Di-

Chascedim were those which had the name of Chaldeans, which were Astronomers, 20 Hij calorummotus diligentissme spect arunt, These didmost diligently contemplate the motions of the heavens: whom Philo in the life of Abraham describeth.

Asaphim were in the old Latine translation called Philosophers : of the Septuagint and of Hierome Magicians, qui de omnium tam diuinarum quam humanarum rerum caulis Philosophati funt, Who discoursed of the causes of all things, as well divine as humane : of whom Origen makes Balaam (the sonne of Beer) to be the first : but Laertius ascribeth Laertits the invention of this art to Zoroaftres the Perfian.

Chartumim, or Inchanters, the Disciples (faith S. Augustine, Plinie, and Iustine) of another Zoroastres: who corrupted the admirable wisedome of the Magi, which he received from his Ancesters.

30 Mecasphim, or Venefici, or Witches, are those of which we have spoken already out of His Majesties booke of Demonologia.

Gazarim, or Arufpices (after S. Hierome) which divine from the entrailes of beafts flaine for facrifices : or by Gazarim others understand Angures, who divine by the flying, finging, or feeding of birds,

By this distinction wee may perceive the difference betweene those wise men which the Kings of Babylon entertained; and that the name and profession of the Magiamong the ancient Persians was most honest. For as Pencer truly observeth, pracrant religioni Perfica, vt in populo Dei Leuita, studij (q, vera Philosophia dediti erant : Pencer, de dininec quisquam Rex Persarum poterat esse, qui non antea Magorum disciplinam scientiams, natino de mag.

Leuites among Gods people, and they were given to the studies of true Philosophie: neither could any be king of the Persians, who had not first beene exercised in the mysteries and knowledge of the Mags. Sixtus Senensis in defence of Origen against Polychronius and Theophilus hath two kinds of Magick, his owne wordes are thefe. Et nequem moucant pra- Bibl. 16. That the tellimonies of Theophilus and Polychronius (faith he) may not

50 moone any man, it is to be understood that Magick is of two fortes, the one every where con. demned by Origen; which worketh (whether truly or feemingly) by couenants made with Deuils; the other commended by Origen; which appertaineth to the practick part of naturall philosophie, teaching to worke admirable things by the mutuall application of naturall vertues, agent and suffering reciprocally. This partition Hierome doth embrace in the first of his

Commentaries vpon Daniel: where confidering of the difference which Daniel makes betweene these fower kindes of wife men formerly remembred, he vseth this diffin-Sion : Ques nes harieles: exteri emesso: (id est) incantatores interpretati funt, videntur mihi esse qui verbis rem peragunt; Magi qui de s'ngulis philosophantur; malesici, qui s'anguine utuntur & victimis, & lape contingunt corporamortuorum : porro in Chaldais Genethliacos significari puto, quos vulgo Machematicos vocant. Consuetudo autem communis Magos pro Maleficis accipit, qui aliter habentur apud gentem fuam,co quòd fint Philosophi Chaldeorum : & adartis huius scientiam Regesquog, & Principes ciusdem gentis omnia saciunt; unde c'e in nativitate Domini saluatoris apsi primum ortumeius intellexerunt, & venientes in lanctam Beiblehem adorauerunt puerum, stella desuper ostendente. They whom we call 10 Sorcerers, and others interpret inchanters, (eeme to mee fuch as performe things by words; Magicians, fuch as handle every thing philosophically; Witches, that wse blood and sacrifices, and often lay hands on the body of the dead : further, among the Childeans Itake them to be Genified by the name of Coniciturers upon nativities, whom the vulgar call Mathematicians. But common cultome takes Magicians for Witches, who are otherwife reputed in their owne nation : for they are the Philolophers of the Chaldeans : yea Kings and Princes of that nation doe all that they doe according to the knowledge of this art: whence at the nativity of the Lord our Saniour they first of all understood his birth, and comming unto holy Bethlehem did worthip the Childe: the flarre from about thewing him onto them. By this therefore it appeareth that there is great difference betweene the doctrine of a Magician, and 20 the abuse of the word. For though some writers affirme that Magus hodie dicitur, qui ex fædere facto viitur diaboli opera ad rem quamcunq, that he is called a Magician now adaies, who having entred league with the deuill veeth his helpe to any matter ; yet (as our Sanjour faid of Dinorce) it was not fo from the beginning. For the Art of Magicke is of the wifedome of nature; other artes which undergoe that title were inuented by the fallhood, fubtletie and enuie of the Deuill. In the latter there is no other do-Etrine, then the vse of certaine ceremonies per malam fidem : by an enill faith : in the former no other ill, then the inuestigation of those vertues and hidden properties which God hath given to his creatures, and how fitly to applie things that worke to things that fuffer. And though by the Iewes, those excellent Magicians, Philosophers, 30 and Divines which came to worthip our Saujour Chrift, were termed Mechaschephim, or Mecafohim: vet had they no other reason, then common custome therein. improperly Necromancie. Mirandula in his Apologie goeth further : for by understanding (faith he) the ut- 50 termost activitie of naturall agents we are assisted to know the Divinity of Christ: for otherwife (to vse his owne words) ignoratis terminis potentia & virtutis rerum naturalium stat nos dubitare illa eadem opera, que secit Christus, posse sieri per media naturalia. The termes or limits of naturall power and vertue not understood, wee must needes doubt whether those ling them, or how focuer fitting the natures to their working, they were thought the workes of the Deuils by the ignorant. Among thefe workes is naturall Magicke, which men call very very workes which Christ did, may not bee done by naturall meanes: after which he goeth on in this fort. Idea non haretice, non superstitiofe dixi, sed verisime & Catholice per talem Magiam adiquari nos in cognoscenda divinitate Christi, Therefore I said not hererically, not superstitiously, but most truly and Catholikely, that by such Magicke we are furthered in knowing the diainitie of Christ. And secing the Jewes and others the enemies of Christian religion, doe impudently and impioufly object, that those miracles which Christ wrought were not aboue nature, but by the exquisite knowledge thereof performed: Mirandula a man for his yeares fuller of knowledge then any that this latter age hath brought forth, might with good reason anow, that the vitermost of 10 natures workes being knowne, the workes which Christ did, and which (as himfelfe witneffeth) no man could doe, doe manifeftly teftifie of themselues, that they were performed by that hand which held nature therein but as a pencill, and by a power infinitely supreme and divine; and thereby those that were faithlesse, were either conucrted or put to filence.

d. III.

That the good knowledge in the ancient Magicke is not to be condemned : though the Deuill here as in other kinds hath fought to obtrude eaill things under the name and colour of good things.

Eeing therefore it is confessed by all of understanding, that a Magician (according to the Persian word) is no other then divinorum cultor esinterpres, A studious observer and expounder of divine things and the art it selfe (I meane the Art of naturall Magicke) no other, qu'am naturalis Philosophia absoluta consummatio, Then the absolute perfection of naturall

Philalophie: Certainly then it proceedeth from common ignorance, and no way forteth with wife and learned men promifeue, and without difference and diffinction. to confound lawfull and praise-worthy knowledge with that impious, and (to yie 30 S. Paules wordes) with those beggerly rudiments, which the Deuill hath shuffled in, and by them bewitcheth and befooleth graceleffe men. For if we condemne naturall Magicke, or the wifedome of nature, because the Deuill (who knoweth more then any man) doth also teach Witches and Poysoners the harmefull parts of hearbs, drugges, minerals, and excrements: then may wee by the same rule condemne the Phylition, and the Art of healing. For the Deuill also in the Oracles of Amphiaraus, Amphilochus, Trophonius, and the like, taught men in dreames what hearbs and drugges were proper for fuch and fuch difeafes. Now no man of judgement is ignorant, that the Deuill from the beginning hath fought to thrust himselfe into the fame imployment among the ministers and feruants of God, changing him-

40 selfe for that purpose into an Angell of light. He hath led men to Idolatric as a dochrine of religion; he hath thrust in his Prophets among those of the true God; he hath corrupted the Art of Aftrologie, by giving a divine power to the Starres teaching men to effecte them as Gods, and not as instruments. And (as Bunting obser- Bunt in chronic ueth) it is true, that iudiciall Aftrologie is corrupted with many superstitions: but the abuse of the thing takes not away the Art; considering that heavenly bodies (as even generall experience sheweth) have and exercise their operation upon the inferiour. For the Sunne, and the Starre of Marsdoedrie; the Moone doth moiften, and gouerne the Tides of the Sea. Againe, the Planets, as they have feuerall and proper names, so have they severall and proper vertues; the Starres doe also 50 differ in beautie and in magnitude; and to all the Starres hath God given also their proper names, which (had they not influences and vertues different) needed not: He counteth the number of the Starres, and calleth them by their names. But into the good Talls and profitable knowledge of the celeftiall influences, the Deuil ceafeth not to fhuffle in his superstitions; and so to the knowledge of the screet vertues of nature bath he fastened his doctrine of Characters, numbers, and incantations; and taught men to belong in the strength of wordes and letters; (which without faith in God are but inke or common breath) thereby either to equall his owne with the all-powerfull word of God, or to diminish the glorie of Gods creating word, by whom are all

Moreover, hee was never ignorant, that both the wife and the fimple observe when the Sea-birds for fake the shoares and flie into the land, that commonly some great storme followeth; that the high flying of the Kite and the Swallow betoken faire weather; that the crying of Crowes and bathing of Ducks foreshew raine: for they feele the aire moistened in their quilles. And it is written in Hieremie the Ca.S.vcr.7. Prophet, Euen the Storke in the aire knoweth her appointed times, and the Turtle, and the

Crane, and the Swallow. Hercupon, this enemic of mankinde, working upon these as vpon the rest of Gods creatures, long time abused the Heathen by teaching them to observe the flying of Fowles, and thereby to judge of good or ill successe in the warre; and (withall) to looke into their entrailes for the same, as if God had written the fecrets of vnfearchable prouidence in the liuers and bowels of birds and beafts. Againe, because it pleased God sometimes by dreames, not only to warne and teach his Prophets and Apostles, but Heathen Princes also; as Abimelech to restore Sara to Abraham: because he admonished Joseph, and by dreame informed Jacob , Laban, Pharao, Salomon, Paul, Ananias, the Magi of the Ealt, and others. For as it is remem- 20

I fav. doth the Deuill also practife his dissinations by dreames, or (after Parilenlis) G.Parisien.de distinitatis imitationes, his mocke-distinitie. This in the end grow fo common, as Aristides compiled an Ephemerides of his owne dreames: Mithridates of those of his Concubines. Yea the Romanes finding the inconvenience hereof, because all dreames (without diffinction of causes) were drawne to divination, forbad the same by a Codex de male- law; as by the wordes of prohibition (aut narrandis somnijs occultam aliquam artem inw, a solution and maranau formus occultam aliquam artem fie, & Mathe diumandi) it may appeare. Likewife by the law of God in Deuteronomie cap. 12.

feducing dreamers were ordered to bee flaine. Yet it is not to bee contemned that 20 Marcus Antonius was told a remedy in his dreame for two grieuous discases that op-Aug.de cura pro press him; nor that of Alexander Macedon for the cure of Ptolomies poisoned wound; mor that which S. Augustine reporteth of a Willanoife; whose sonne (the Father dead) being demanded a debt already paied, was told by his Father in a dreame where the acquittance lay to discharge it; nor that of Asyages of his Daughter, and many others of like nature. Of the reason of all which, for asmuch as the cause is not in our felues, this place denieth dispute.

That DANIELS misliking NABVCHODONOSORS condemning of the Magicians doth not instific all their practises.

Vt it may be obiected, that if such divination as the Heathens commonly vied were to be condemned in them, who tooke on them very many and strange reuelations : how came it to passe that Daniel both condemned the haftie fentence of Nabuchodonofor against the Magieians of Chaldaa, and in a fort forbad it? especially confidering that such kinde of people God himfelfe commanded to bee flaine. To this diversansweres 50 may be ginen. First, it seemeth that Daniel had respect to those Chaldeans, because they acknowledged that the dreame of the King, which himselfe had forgotten, could not be knowne to any man by any art, either Naturall or Diabolicall: For there is none other (faid the Chaldwans) that can declare it before the King, except the Gods, whole dwelling is not with flesh: and herein they confessed the power of the euer-liuing God.

Secondly, it may be conjectured (and that with good reason) that among so many learned men, some of them did not exercise themselves in any enill or vnlawfull arts, but were meerely Magicians and Naturaliss: and therefore when the King commanded to kill all, Daniel perswaded the contrarie, and called it a hastic judgement, which proceeded with furie without examination. And that fome of those mens studies and Professions were lawfull, it may be gathered by Daniels instruction: for himselfe had been taught by them, and was called chiefe of the Inchanters; 10 of which some were termed Sooth faiers, others Altrologians, others Chaldaans, others

Magi or Wifemen: and therefore of distinct professions. Thirdly, Daniel milliked and forbad the execution of that indgement, because it was visualt. For how soener those men might deserve punishment for the practise of vnlawfull Arts (though not vnlawfull according to the law of that State) yet herein they were altogether guiltlesse. For it exceeded humane power to pierce the Kings thought, which the Deuill himselfe could not know. So then in Daniels diflike, and hindering of the execution of fentence of death pronounced against the Magicians, there is no absolute instifying of their practise and profession.

The abuse of things which may be found in all kinds, is not to condemne the right ruse of them.

Otwithstanding this mixture every where of good with euill, of sulf-hood with truth, of corruption with cleannesseand purity: The good, The truth, The puritie in every kind may well be embraced: As in the ancient worfhipping of God by facrifice; there was no man knowing God among the Elders, that therefore forbare to offer facrifice to the 30 God of all power, because the Deuill in the image of Baal, Astaroth, Chemoth, Inpiter, Apollo, and the like was fo adored.

. Neither did the abuse of Astrologie terrifie Abraham (if we may believe the most ancient and religious Hiltorians) from observing the motions and natures of heat- Easter ex dries uenly bodies; neither can it dehort wife and learned men in these daies from attributing those vertues, influences, and inclinations to the Starres and other lights of heauen, which God hath given to those his glorious creatures.

The sympatheticall and antipatheticall working of hearbes, plants, stones, minerals, with their other vtmost vertues sometimes taught by the Deuill, and applied by his Ministers to harmefull and vncharitable endes can neuer, terrifie the honest A2 and learned Phylician or Magician from the vling of them to the helpe and comfort of mankinde : neither can the illusions, whereby the Deuill betraieth such men as are fallen from God, make other men reject the observations of dreames; fo farre as with a good faith and a religious caution they may make vse of

Lastly the prohibition to marke flying of foules (as fignes of good or cuill fue- Dent.18.20). ceffe) hath no reference at all to the crying of Crowes against raine, or to any observation not superstitious, and whereof a reason or cause may be egiuen. For if we confound artes with the abuse of them, wee shall not only condemne all honest trades and enterchange among men (for there are that deceiue in all professions) 50 but wee shall in a short time burie in forgetfulnesseall excellent knowledge and all learning, or obscure and couer it ouer with a most scornefull and beggerly ignorance : and (as Plinie teacheth) we should show our selues ingrates erga ees, quilabore curag, lucem nobis aperuerunt in hac luce , Vnthankefull we should shew our selues towards those, who with paines and care have discovered unto us light in this light,

Indeed not only these naturall knowledges are condemned by those that are ignorant; but the Mathematickes also and Professors therof: though those that are excellently learned judge of it in this fort. In speculo mathematico Verumillud, quodin omni scibili queritur relucet : non modo remota similitudine, sed fulgida quadam propinquitate. In the glasse of the Mathematickes that truth doth shine, which is sought in every kind of knowledge ; not in an obscure image, but in a neere and manifest reprasentation.

Of the divers kindes of unlawfull Magick

T is true that there are many artes if we may fo call them, which are concred with the name of Magick : and effectived abuffuely to bee as branches of that tree, on whoose root they never grew. The first of these hath the name of Necromancie or Goetia : and of this against there are divers kindes. The one is an Invocation at the graves of the dead, to whom the Deuill himfelfe gives answere in stead of those that seeme to appeare. For certaineit is, that the immortal foules of men do not inhabit the dust and dead bodies, but they give motion and understanding to the living; death being nothing else but a separation of the body and soule : and therefore the soule is n ot to be found in the graues.

A fecond practife of those men, who pay tribute or are in league with Sathan, is that of conjuring or of raifing up Deuils, of whome they hope to learne what they lift. These men are so distract, as they beleeue that by terrible words they make the Deuill to tremble; that being once impaled in a circle (a circle which cannot keepe out a Moule) they therein (as they suppose) insconce themselues against that great monster. Doubtlesse they forget that the Deuil is not terrified from doing ill and all that is contrary to God and goodnesse, no, not by the fearefull word of the Almighty: and that he feared not to offer to fit in Gods feat, that he made no feruple to tempt our Sauiour Chrift, whom himfelfe called the Sonne of God. So, forgetting these proud parts of his, an vnworthy wretch will yet resolue himselfe, that 20 he can draw the Deuill out of Hell and terrifie him with a phrase: whereas in very truth, the obedience which Deuils seeme to vse, is but thereby to possesse themselves of the bodies and foules of those which raise them vp; as His Maiestie in his Booke aforenamed hath excellently taught, That the Deuils obedience is only fecundum quid, feilicet ex pacto; respectine, that is, upon bargaine.

I cannot tell what they can doe vpon those simple and ignorant Deuils, which gener quaddam inhabite Jamblieus imagination; but fure I am the rest are apt enough to come vncalpotegram value led : and alwaics attending the cogitations of their fermants and vaffals, do no way eret in et inem- neede any fuch inforcement.

Or it may be that these Conjurers deale altogether with Cardans mortall Deuils, 40 quoen unquernos a fallo nea post following the opinion of Rabbi Auornathan and of Porphyrius, who taught that fibile discornit these kind of Deuils lived not above a thousand yeares: which Platarch in his Treaab impossible.

L. Vines in eap, tise de Oraculorum desectu confirmeth, making example of the great God Pan. For were it true that the Deuils were in awe of wicked men, or could be compelled by Ang de Cinit dei them, then would they alwaies feare those words and threats, by which at other Culture exercity, times they are willingly maftered. But the Familiar of Simon Magus when he had lifted him up in the aure, cast him headlong out of his clawes, when he was sure he should perish with the fall. If this perhaps were done by St Peters praiers (of which Fuleb biff. ecel. S. Peter no where vaunteth) yet the same pranck at other times vpon his own accord the Deuill plaied with Theodotus: who transported (as Simon Magus was supposed 50 to have beene) had the fame mortall fall that he had. The like fuccesse had Budas, a principall piller of the Manichaan herefie, as Socrates in his Ecclefiafticall Historie witneffeth; and for a manifest proofe hereof wee see it every day, that the Deuill leaues all Witches and Sorcerers at the gallowes, for whom at other times hee ma-keth himfelfe a Pegafus, to conveigh them in half to places farre diffant, or at least makes them fo thinke: For to thole that received not the truth (faith S. PAVL) God hall cornt. 5.5. fend them strong illusions. Of these their supposed transportations (yet agreeing with their confessions) His Maiestie in the second booke and the fourth chapter of the Demonologie, hath confirmed by vnanfwerable reasons, that they are meerely illusiue. Another fort there are who take on them to include Spirits in Glasses and Crystals: of whom Cufanus : Fatui funt incantatores, qui in ungue & vitro volunt firitum inclu- Exercitat.1.2. dere : quia Spiritus non clauditur corpore, They are foolish inchanters which will that up their firits within their nailes or in glaffe: for a Spirit cannot be inclosed by a body.

There is also another art belides the afore mentioned, which they call Theurgia, or White Magicke; a pretended conference with good Spirits or Angels, whom by facrifice and inuocation they draw out of Heauen, and Communicate withall. But the administring Spirits of God, as they require not any kinde of adoration due vnto their Creatour; fo feeing they are most free Spirits; there is no man fo abfurd to thinke (except the Deuill hanc corrupted his vinderstanding) that they can be conftrained or commanded out of Heauen by threats. Wherefore let the professours thereof couer themselves how they please by a professed puritie of life, by the ministerie of Infants, by fasting and abstinence in generall; yet all those that tamper with immateriall fubltances and abstract natures, either by facrifice, vow, or inforce-20 ment, are men of euill faith and in the power of Sathan. For good Spirits or Angels cannot be constrained; and the rest are Deuils which willingly obey. Other forts there are of wicked distinations : as by fire, called Pyromantia : by water, called Hydromantia: by the aire, called Mataotechnia, and the like.

The last, and (indeede) the worst of all other is Fascination or Witchcraft : the practifers whereof are no leffe enuious and cruell, reuengefull and bloudy, then the Deuill himselfe. And these accursed creatures having sold their soules to the Deuill worketwo waies; either by the Deuill immediatly, or by the art of poisoning. The difference betweene Necromanciers and Witches, His Majestie hath excellently taught in a word; that the one (in a fort) command; the other obey the Deuill.

There is another kinde of petty witcherie (if it be not altogether deceit) which they call charming of beafts and birds, of which Pythagoras was accused, because an Aliandi sonor. Eagle lighted on his shoulder in the Olympian fields. But if the same exceeded the biflor. art of Falconrie, yet was it no more to be admired then Mahomets Doue, which he had vsed to feede with wheate out of his eare : which Doue, when it was hungrie, lighted on Mahomets shoulder, and thrust his bill therein to finde his breake-fast: Mahomet perswading the rude and simple Arabians, that it was the holy Ghost that gaue him aduife. And certainly if Bankes had lived in elder times, hee would have shamed all the inchaunters of the world : for whosoeuer was most famous among them, could neuer master or instruct any beast as he did his Horse.

For the drawing of Serpents out of their dennes, or killing of them in the holes by inchantments (which the Marsians, a people of Italie practifed. Colubros disrum- Eveitim Satyr. pit Marsia cantu, Inchanting Marsia makes the Snakes to burst.) That it hath beene veed it appeares Pfal. 58.6. though I doubt not, but that many impostures may bee in this kinde; and even by naturall causes it may be done. For there are many fumes that will either draw them out or deftroy them; as womens haire burnt, and the like. So many things may bee laied in the entrance of their holes that will allure them : and therein I finde no other Magicke or inchantment, then to draw out a Mouse with a peece of tosted cheese.

Of diners waies by which the Denill feemeth to worke his wonders.

Vt to the end that wee may not dote with the Manichees, who make two powers of Gods: that wee doe not give to the Deuill any other Dominion then he hath (not to speake of his abilitie, when he is the minister of Gods vengeance, as when *Egypt, according to David, was destroyed by cuill Angels) hee otherwise worketh but three waies.

I he first is by mouing the cogitations and affections of men: The second by the exquifite knowledge of nature; and the third by deceit, illufion, and false semblance. And that they cannot work what they would G. Parifien is given three causes : the first, a naturall impotencie - the second, their owne reason dissing them from daring ouer much, or indeede (and that which is the only certaine cause) the great Gulpavifidev - mercie of the Creatour, Tenens e, is ligatus (faith the fame Author) velut immanifirm as ninespenses of belluas. S. Augustine was of opinion that the Frogges which Pharaes Sorcerers produced were not naturall, but that the Deuill (by betraying of their fenfesthat looked on) made them appeare to be fuch. For as Vairus observeth, those Frogges of the Inchanters were not found corrupted as those of Moses were, which might ar- 20 gue that they were not creatures indeede. Hereof faith S. Avgvstine, Nec fanè demones naturas creant, sed que à Deo create sunt commutant, vt videantur este quod non funt, The Peuils create not any natures, but to change those that are created by God, as they feeme to be that which they be not : of which in the 83, question he giveth the reafon. Domon quibufolam nebulis implet omnes meat as intelligentia, per quos aperire lumen rationis radius mentis folet, (that is) The Denill fils with certaine cloudes all passages of the understanding, by which the beame of the minde is wont to open the light of reason.

And as Tertullian in his booke de anima rightly conceineth, if the Deuill can poffeffe himfelfe of the cies of our mindes, and blinde them, it is not hard for him to dazell those of the body. For (out of doubt) by the same way that God passeth 20 out, the Deuill entreth in, beginning with the fantasie, by which he doth more ca-Maxima vis ell filly betray the other faculties of the foule: for the fantalie is most apt to bee abused

Aquinas on the contrarie held that those Frogges were not imaginarie, but such indeede as they seemed : not made magice artis lucibrio, which indeede agreeth not with the art, but (according to THOMAS) per aptam & idoneam agentium & patientium applicationem, By an apt and fit applying of agents and patients. And this I take to be more probable. For Moses could not bee deceived by that fleight of false semblance; and S. Augustine in another case like vnto this, (to wit) of the turning of Diomeces his companions into birds, per activa cum passinis, inclineth rather to this opi- 40 nion: though I am not perfuaded that S. Augustine beleeved that of Diomedes. And this opinion of Thomas, G. Parifiensis a man very learned also confirmeth. For speaking of natural I Magicke he yieth these wordes. De hujusmodi autem operibus est subita generatio ranarum, & pediculorum, & vermium, aliorum g, animalium quorundam: in quibus omnibus fola natura operatur, verum adhibitis adiutorijs, qua ipfa feminanatura confortant & actunt, ita vt opus generationis tantum accelerent, vt eis qui hoc nesciunt non opus natura videatur (que tardius talia efficere confueuit) sed potentia demonum, &c. to which he addeth. Qui autem in hijs docti funt talia non mirantur, fed folum Creatorem in his glorificant, In fuch workes (faith he) the fodaine generation of Frogges, and Lice, and Wormes, and some other creatures is : in all which nature alone worketh; but by meanes 50 firengthning the feedes of nature, and quickning them; in fuch wife that they fo hasten the worke of generation, that it feemeth to the ignorant not to be the worke of nature, which vfually worketh more leifurely, but they thinke it is done by the power of Deuils. But they who are learned in these arts meruale not at such working, but glorifie the Creatour. Now by these two waies the Deuils doe most frequently worke, (to wit) by knowing the vttermoft of nature; and by illusion: for there is no incomprehensible or vnfearchable power, but of God only.

For shall we say, he causeth sometimes thunders, lightnings, and tempelts; and can infect the aire, as well as moue it or compresse it; who knowes not that these things are also naturall? Or may it bee objected that hee foretelleth things before they happen, which exceedeth nature, and is no illusion? it is true, that hee sometimes dothit; but how? In elder ages he stole his knowledge out of the predictions of the Prophets: and hee foretold the death of Saul, at fuch time as hee was in his owne possession and power to dispose of. And he that hath lived from the infancie of the world to this day, and observed the successe of every Counsaile: hee that by reason of his swift motions can informe himselfe of all places, and preparations: he that is of counfaile with all those that studie and practise subversion and destruction: Epines, 2,2,466. that so recommend with a many and the three better indee; then those that in prince of the aire, and can thence better indee; then those that inhabite the carth; if he should not sometimes, yea if hee should not very often timesghess. rightly of thinges to come (where God pleafeth not to give impediment) it were fum rayer res very strange. For wee see that wise and learned men doe oftentimes by comparing mattum hebet like causes conceine rightly of like effects, before they happen: and yet where the uisugoito, Aug. Deuill doubteth and would willingly keepe his credit, hee cuermore answereth by de doubteth and would willingly keepe his credit, hee cuermore answereth by de doubteth and would willingly keepe his credit, hee cuermore answereth by 20 riddles, as

That none was ever raised from the dead by the power of the Denill: and that it was not the true SAMVEL which appeared

O conclude, it may be objected that the Deuill hath raifed from the dead : and that others by his power have done the like, as in the exdead : and that others by his power haue done the like, as in the ex-ample giuen of Samuel railed by the Witch of Enidor: which were it true, then might it indeed be affirmed that some of the Deuils acts exceed all the powers of nature, false semblance, and other illusions. Iu- Inst. Marty is fine Martyr was sometimes of the opinion, that it was samuel indeed; and so was solven control to the first was samuel indeed; and s which so belieue. But Martyr changed his opinion : and so did So Augustine, who at Ambr. in Luc. b. first seemed to bee indifferent : For in his questions upon the Old and New Testa- Least. And (befides St Augustine) Iustine Martyr, Hilarius, Tertullian, Athanasius, Chry-Cofforme and others beleived firmely, and taught it that the foules of men being once Seperate from their bodies did not wander on the earth at all. We must beleiue when the soules of holy men are departed from their bodies, that they be commended to the Divine Goodnesse as into the hands of of a most deere Father. If then they be in Heauen, the power of the Deuill cannot stretch so high : if in Hell, ab inferno nulla est redemptio, from Hell there is no redemption. For 10 there are but two habitations after death; Vnum (faith Avgvstine) in igne aterno; alterum in regno aterno: the one in eternall fire; the other in Gods eternall kingdome, And though it bee written in Jure Pontificio, that many there are who beleiue that the dead have againe appeared to the living; yet the Gloffe vpon the same Text 26.95. That speach is framed by the fraud and deception of the Deuill, faith CHRYSOSTOME. Likewise of the same saith Tertullian. Absit vt animam cuiuslibet sancti, nedum Propheta, à damonio credamus extractam. God forbid that 20 wee should thinke that the soule of any holy man, much lesse of a Prophet, should bee drawne upagaine by a Denill. It is true that the Scriptures call that apparition Samuel; so doe they the wodden images Cherubins: and false brazen Gods are called Gods: and the like. And whereas these of the contrary opinion build upon that place of the 26. of Ecclesiasticus (a booke not numbred among the Canonicall Scriptures, as S. Augustine himselfe in his Treatise, if it bee his decura pro mortuis agenda confesseth) yet Siracides following the literall sense and phrase of the Scriptures, proueth nothing at all : For though the Deuill would willingly perfwade, that the foules (yea euen of iust men) were in his power, yet so farre is it from the promises of the Scriptures, and from Gods inst 30 and mercifull nature, and so contrary to all dinine reason, as Saint Augustine (or whofoeuer wrote that booke before cited) might rightly terme it a detestable opinion so to thinke. For if God had so absolutely forsaken Saul, that hee refufed to answere him either by dreames, by Vrim, or by his Prophets: it were fortish to conceiue, that he would permit the Deuill, or a wicked Witch to raise a Prophet from the dead in Sauls respect : it being also contrary to his owne dinine Law to aske counfaile of the dead; as in Deuteronomie 1 8. and elfew here.

beauty and ftrength to Babylon which it had.

Vt to come backeto Ninus the amplifier and finisher of Ninine: whether he performed it before or after the ouerthrow of Zoroaster, it is vncertaine. As for the Citty it felfe, it is agreed by all prophane writers. and confirmed by the Scriptures, that it exceeded all other in circuit, and answerable magnificence. For it suffined to Died hadin compasse 440. stadia, or furlongs; the walles 11.2. whereof were an hundred foot vpright, and had such Sabel lens. a bredth as three charriots might paffe on the rampire in front : these walles were garnished with 1 500. towers which gaue exceeding beautie to the rest and a strength no lesse admirable for the nature of those times. But this Cittie (built in the Plaines of Affyria, and on the bankes of Tigris, and in the Region of Eden,) was founded long before Ninus time; and (as ancient Histo-40 rians report; and more lately Nauslerus) had the name of Campfor, at fuch time as

Ninus amplified the fame, and gaue it a wall, and called it after his owne name. For these workes of Babylon and Niniue begun by Nimrod in Chaldea, and in Ass. ria, Ninus and Semiramis made perfect. Ninus finished Nintue, Semiramis Babylan: Hood list. Princes were moderate, they neither thought how to inuade others, nor feared to be inuaded : labouring to build Townes and Villages for the vse of themselues and their people without either Walles or Towers; and how they might discharge the earth of woods, briars, bulhments, and waters, to make it the more habitable and fertile. But Semiramis liuing in that age, when Ambition was in strong youth: and 50 purposing to follow the conquest which her husband had vndertaken, gaue that

But this fecmeth rather a feandall caft on her by the Greekes, then that it had any truth.

Ælian,li.7.cx

Howfocuer Ninus came to his ende, Semiramis tooke on her after his death the fole rule of the Affgrian empire : of which, Ninus was faid to be the first Monarch because he changed his scat from Babylonia in Chaldea to Niniue in Assyria. Instinereports that Semiramis (the better to inuest herselfe, and in her beginning without ports that Neutrania (the potter to innert nericine, and in ner beginning without murmure or offense to take on her so great a charge) presented herselfe to the peo- 20 ple in the person of her some Nimius or Zameis, who bare her externall forme and proportion without any fensible d...erence.

This report I take also to be fained, for which many arguments might bee made. But as she ruled long, so she performed all those memorable actes which are written of her by the name of Semiramis, and Subscribed that letter which she sent to the King of India (her last challenge and undertaken conquest) by her owne name. And were it true that her sonne Ninius had such a stature at his Fathers death, as that Semiranis (who was very perfonable) could be taken for him; yet it is very vulikely that she could have held the Empire from him 42. yeares after by any such subtilety: (for so long shee reigned after the death of her Husband:) but it may bee true 20 that Ninias or Zameis (being wholly giuen to his pleasures as it is written of him) was well pleased with his Mothers prosperous government and vndertakings.

of Semiramis parentage, and education, and Metamorphosis of her Mother.

Ome writers (of which Plutareh is one) make this famous woman to One writers (or writer Funation is one) make this failious woman to have beene of bafe parentage, calling her after the name of her Coun. 40 rrey, a Sprian. Others fay that this Deserta or Dercetis the mother of Semiramis was fometimes a Recluse, and had profest a holy and a religious life, to whom there was a Temple dedicated feated on the banke of a Lake adioyning to Ascalon; and afterward falling in loue with a goodly yong man the was by him made with child, which (for feare of extreme punishment) he consuied away, and cauled the fame to be hidden among the high reedes which grew on the bankes of the Lake: in which (while the child was left to the mercy of wild 50 beatls) the fame was fed by certaine birds, which vied to feed you or neere those waters. But I take this tale to be like that of Lupa the harlot that foltered Remulas. For some one or other adjoyning to this Lake had the charge and fosteridge of this child, who being perchance but some base and obscure creature, the mother might thereby hope the better to couer her dishonour and breach of yow: notwithstanding which she was cast from the top of her Temple into the Lake adjoining, and (as the Poets haue fained) changed by Venus into a fith, all but her face, which ftill held the same beauty and humane shape. It is thought that from this Derceta the inuention of that Idoll of the Philiftims (called Dagon) was taken: for it is true, that Daron had a mans face, and a filhes body: into whose Temple when the Arke of God was brought, the Idoll fell twice to the ground : and at the second fall there remained only the Trunck of Dagon, the head being broken of: For so St. Merome hath converted that place. Patablus, Pagninus, and Junius write it by Dagon Onely, which fignifieth a fifth, and fo it only appeared: the head thereof by the second all being fundred from the body.

For my felfe I rather thinke, that this Dagon of the Philistims was an Idoll represcriting Triton, one of those imaginary Sca-gods under Neptune. For this Citty being maritimate (as all those of the Philistims were, and so were the best of Phanicia) vsed all their denotions to Neptune, and the rest of the pettie Gods which attended

And if the one halfe bee true which is reported of this Lady, then there neuer liued any Prince or Princesse more worthy of fame then Semiramis was, both for the workes the did at Babylon and elfewhere and for the warres the made with glorious fucceffe: all but her last enterprise of India; from whence both Strabo and Arianis report that the neuer returned; and that of all her most powerfull Army there survived but one ly twenty persons: the rest being either drowned in the river of India, dead of the famine, or flaine by the fword of Staurobates. But as the multitude which went out are more then reason hath numbred: so were those that returned lesse then could haue escaped of such an Army, as consisted of source millions and vpwards. For these suid files, numbers which she leuied by her Lieutenant Derceteus (faith Suidas) did consist of

hookes on each fide one hundred thousand; of those which fought vpon Camels as many; of Camels for burden two hundred thousand; of raw Hides for all vses 40 three hundred thousand; of Galleies with brazen heads three thousand, by which the might transport over Indus at once three hundred thousand souldiers : which Gallies were furnished with Syrians, Phanicians, Cilicians, and men of Cyprus. These incredible and impossible numbers, which no one place of the earth was able to nourish (had every man and beast but fed vpon grasse) are taken from the authority of Ctelias whom Diodorus followeth. But as the one may be taxed with many friuolous reports: fo Diedorus himfelfe hath nothing of certainty, but from Xerxes expedition into Greece and afterwards: whose Armie (though the same was farre inferior to that of Semiramis) yet had it weight enough to ouerlode the beliefe of any reasonable man. For all Authors consent, that Xerxes transported into Greece an Ar-50 my of 1700000 and gathered together (therein to passe the Helleshort) three thou-fand Gallies, as Herodstus out of the fenerall Proninces whence those Galleies were taken hath collected the number. But of what multitude foeuer the Armie of Semiramis confifted: the same being broken and ouerthrown by Staurobates upon the banks of Indus, canticum cantauit extremum: the lang her last long; and (as Antiquity hath fained) was changed by the Gods into a Done. # THE FIRST PART OF THE HISTORIE OF THE WORLD:

INTREATING OF THE TIMES FROM The birth of ABRAHAM to the destruction of the Temple of Salemon.

THE SECOND BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

Of the time of the birth of ABRAHAM: and of the vse of this question, for the ordering of the Sto. rie of the Assyrian Empire.

Of some of the successours of SEMIRAMIS: with a briefe transition to the question, about the time of the birth of ABRAHAM.

FTER the death of Semiramis, Ninias or Zameis fucceeded her in the Empire, on whom Berofus Annianus bestowes the conquest of Bačtria, and the ouerthrow of Zoroaster; contrary to Diodorus, Iustine, Orosius, and all other approued writers. For Ninias being efteemed no man of warre at all, but altogether feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacie, there is no probability in that opinion. Now because there was nothing performed by this Ninias of any moment, other then that out of icalousie he euery yeare changed his Prouinciall Gouernors, and built Colledges for the Chaldean Priests, his Astronomers: nor by Arius his successor, whom Suidas calleth Thuras; but that he reduced agains the Bactrians and Calpians, revolted as it seemeth in Nini-50 as his time : nor of Aralius, the fucceffor of Arius; but that he added fumptuofity, inuented lewels of gold and frone, and fome engins for the warre: I will for this prefent paffe them ouer, and a while follow Abraham, whose wares are warrantable, (till wee meet these Affyrians againe in this story) by whom, and by whose issues we shall best give date to the Kings of Babylon: Abraham living at once with Ninus, Ninias, Semiramis, Arius, Aralius, and Xerxes or Balanius. For otherwise if we seeke to proue things certaine by the vncertaine, and judge of those times, which the Scriptures fet vs down without error, by the raignes of the Affirian Princes: we shall but patch vp the story at aductture, and leave it in the same consusion, in which to this day it hath remained. For where the Scriptures do not help vs, Mirum ronest in rebus antiquis Historiam non constare, No merusile if then in things very ancient, History want

The better therefore to finde out, in what age of the World, and how long these Assart Kings raigned, as also for other good causes, we must first assure the time of Abrahams birth, and in what yeare the same hapned after the floud. Now since all 10 agree, that the fortieth three yeare of Nimes was the birth-yeare of Abraham; by prouing directly out of the Scriptures, in what yeare after the floud the birth of braham hapned, we shall thereby set all the rest in square and order. But of this time there is much iangling between those Chronologers, which follow the Hebrewaccount, and others: the most part making 292.or 293. yeares 3 thers 3 52. yeares between Abrahams birth and the floud: a matter often disputed, but neuer concluded.

Archilochus de temporibus (as we finde him in Annius) makes but 250. yeares from the floud to Ninus : then feeing that Abraham was borne in the fortieth three yeare of Winus, according to Eulebius, and S. Augustine, it followeth by the addition of those two numbers, that the yeare of Abrahams birth was in the yeare after the 20 floud 203 or as the most part of all Chronologers gather the yeare 292.

Now, fince I do heere enter into that neuer-refolued quaftion, and Labyrinth of times, it behougth me to give reason for my owne opinion : and with so much the greater care and circumspection, because I walke aside, and in a way apart from the multitude; yet not alone, and without companions, though the fewer in number: with whom I rather choose to endure the wounds of those dartes, which Ennie casteth at nouelty, than to goe on safely and sleepily in the casse waies of ancient mistakings: seeing to be learned in many errors, or to be ignorant in all things, hath little diuerlity.

ð. I I.

A proposall of reasons or arguments, that are brought to prove ABRAHAM was borne in the yeare 292 after the floud, and not in the yeare 252.

Hose which seeke to proue this account of 292. yeares, betweene the generall floud and Abrahams birth, ground themselves, first on these words of the Scripture. So Terah lived 70. yeares, and begot Abrahams, Ham, Nahor, and Harahs: secondly vpon the opinion of Iosephus, 49 S. Augustine, Beda, Isidore, and many of the ancient Hebrewes before them: authorities (while they are fleightly lookt ouer) feeming of great weight.

From the place of Scripture last remembred, the latter Chronologers gather these arguments. First out of the words as they lie; that TERAH at 70. yeares begot A-BRAHAM, NAHOR and HARAN: and that Abraham being the first named, Abraham being the worthiest, Abraham being the sonne of the promise, ought in this refpect to be accounted the eldeft sonne of Terah, and so necessarily borne in the seuentieth yeare of his life. Secondly it was of Abraham that Moses had respect, in whom the Church of God was continued, who was heire of the bleffing; and not of Nahor and Haran : for the scope of this Chapter was to set downe the Genealo- 50 gy of Christ, from Adam to Abraham, without all regard of Nahor, and Haran.

It is thirdly objected, that if Abraham were not the eldeft sonne, then there can be no certainty of his age, and so are all future times made doubtfull. For it cannot then be proued, that Abraham was borne more affuredly in the 130, yeare of Terab his age, then in the 121. 122. &c. Moles having no where fet downe precifely that Abraham went into Canaan that very yeare, in which his Father died.

Fourthly it is thought improbable, that Terah begat Abraham at 120. yeare: feeing Abraham himselfe thought it a wonder to be made a Father at 100. yeares.

ð. III.

The answere to one of the objections proposed, shewing that ABRAHAM made but one tourney out of McCopotamia into Canaan : and it, after

O answere all which objections it is very easie, the way being prepared thereto by divers learned Divines long fince, and to which I will adde somewhat of mine owne, according to the small talent which God hath given me. Now for a fruch as the state of the question cannot well be scanned, vnlcffe the time of Abrahams iourney into Cana-un be first considered of a before I descend vinto the particular examination of these arguments. I will make bold with order and method fo farre, as to fearch into a frange tradition concerning his traugils, that ferueth as a ground for this opinion, and a bulwarke against all that can be said to the contrary.

But it is conceived that Abraham made two journies into Canaan; the latter after his Fathers death, the former prefently vpon his calling, which he performed without all delay, not staying for his fathers death at Haran: a confecture, drawn from a place in the Epiffle to the Hebrewes, where it is written, By faith A B a A ii A u (when hew as called) obcied God, to goe out into a place, which he should afterward receive for inheritance: and he went out, not knowing whither hee went. This supposition (if it be granted) Hebris. ferues very well to vphold the opinion, that can ill fland without it. Let vs therefore fee whither we may give credit to the supposition it selfe.

Surely, that Abraham first departed Charran or Haran after the death of Terah his 20 Father the same is proued without the admission of any distinction, by these words of St. STEPHEN: And after his Father was dead, God brought him into this Land, where ye now dwell, that was, out of Haran into Canaan. Against wich place so direct, and plaine, what force hath any mans fancie or supposition, perswading, that Abraham Ast. 7.4. made two journies into Canaan; one before Terah's death, and an other after: no fuch thing being found in the Scriptures, nor any circumstance, probability, or reafon to induce it? For if any man out of this place before alleadged can pick any argument, prouing, or affording any strong presumption, that Abraham past into Ca-nam, and then returned vnto Haran, from whence he departed a second time: then I thinke it reason, that he be beleived in the rest. But that he performed the com-40 mandement of God after his Fathers death, leaving Vr and Haran for Canaan, it is as true as the Scriptures themselves are true. For after his Father was dead, (faith the (Martyr Stephen) Godbrought him into this Land. And, as Beza noteth, if Abraham made a double journey into Canaan, then must it be inferred, that Moles omitted the one, and Stephen afterwards remembred the other; and whence had Stephen, faith Beza, the knowledge of Abrahams comming into Canaan, but out of Moles? For if Stephen had spokenany thing of those times, differing from Moses, he had offered the sewes his aduerfaries too great an occasion both of scandalizing himselfe, and the Gospell of Christ. Indeed we shall finde small reason to make vs thinke that Abraham passed and repaffed those waies, more often than he was enforced so to doe, if we consider, that to he had no other guide or comforter in this long and wearifome journey, than the strength of his faith in Gods promise: in which if any thing would have brought him to despaire, he had more cause then ever man had to fall into it. For he came into a Region of strong and stubborne nations: a Nation of valiant and resoluted Idolaters. He was belieged with famine at his first arrivall, and driven to flie into

Agypt for reliefe. His wife was olde, and he had no fonne to inherit the promife. And when God had given him Isaac, he commanded him to offer him vo to himfelfe for Sacrifice : all which discomforts hee patiently and combantly viider-

Secondly, let vs confider the waies themselves, which Abraham had to passe over, the length whereof was 300. English miles: and through Countries of which he had no manner of experience. He was to transport himselfe ouer the great river of Euphrates, to trauaile through the dangerous and barren Deferts of Palmyrena, and to climbe over the great and high mountaines of Libanus, Hermon or Gilead : and whither these were calle walkes for Abraham to march twice ouer, containing, as afore- 10 faid, 200, miles in length, let euery reasonable man judge. For if hee trauailed it twice: then was his journey in all 1 800 miles from 17 to Haran: and from Haran twice into Canaan. But were there no other argument to disproue this fancie; the manner of Abrahams departing from Haran hath more proofe, that he had not animum revertendi, not any thought looking backward, than any mans bare conjecture, bee he of what antiquity or authority focuer. For thus it 15 written of him Then A B R A-HAM tooke SARA his wife, and LOT his brothers sonne, and all their substance that they possest, and the soules that they had gotten in Haran: and they departed to go to the land of Canaan and to the Land of Canaan they came. Now if Abraham brought all with him that was deare vinto him; his wife, and kinfmen, and his, and their goods: it is not proba- 20. ble that he meant to walke it backe againe for his pleafure, in fo warme, dangerous, and barren a Country as that was ; or if hee could have beene thereto moved it is more likely that he would have then returned, when he was yet valetied, and proft with extreme famine at his first arrivall. For had his Father beene then aline, hee might have hoped from him to receive more affured comfort and reliefe, then among the Egyptians, to whom hee was a meere stranger both in Religion and

What the cause might be of Abrahams returne to Haran, as I will not enquire of them, that without warrant from the Scriptures haue fent him backe thither. about the time of his fathers death: fo they perhaps, if they were viged, could fay 20 little clfe, than that without fuch a fecond voiage their opinion were not maintainable. One thing in good reason they should do well to make plaine, if it be not ouer-troublesome. They say that Abraham was in Haran at his Fathers death, or fome time after, being then by their account 135, yeares old, or a little more. How then did it happen, that he left quite undone the bufineffe, which as wee reade, was within foure or fine yeares after that time his greatest, or (as may seeme) his onely care? Did not be binde with a very folemne oath his principall feruant, in whom he reposed most considence, to traunile into those parts, and seeke out a wife for Isaac his fonne? and doth it not appeare by all circumstances, that neither he nor his feruant were so well acquainted in Mejopotamia, that they could particularly designe 40 any one woman, as a fit match for Ifage? Surely if Abraham had been there in perfon fo lately, as within foure or fine yeares before, hee would not have forgotten a matter of fuch importance; but would have trufted his owne indeement, in choofing a woman, fit for her piety, vertue, and other defireable qualities, to be linked in marriage with his only fonne, who was then 35, yeares old; before which age most of the Patriarches after the floud had begotten children, rather than haue left all at randome to the confideration of a feruant, that neither knew any, nor was knowne of any in that Country. But let it bee supposed (if it may be beleived) that either Abraham forgot this busines when he was there, or that somewhat hapned which no man can deuise. What might be the reason, that Abrahams man in doing his ma- 50 fterserrand was faine to lay open the whole ftory of his mafters prosperity, telling it as newes, that Sarah had borne to him a fonne in her old age? If Abraham himfelfe, a more certaine author, had so lately beene among them, would not all this have beene an idletale? It were needlesse to stand long upon a thing so cuident. Whether his minde, and thought it a peece of his prosperity; but the prophecy which thereupon he heard by Efai, made him to know, that the counfaile of God was not agreeable to fuch thoughts: which more plainly appeared in a following generation, when by the waters of Babylon they fate downe and wept. Concerning Agypt we Plal 27. read, that Sefac and Neco Kings of Agypt brought calamity vpon Ifrael: also that 1.Kings 14.25.6 their confidence in the Agyptian succours was the cause of their destruction. Where they were forbidden to return into Agypt I do not remember, nor can readily find; Dest. 17, 1916.

Whether it were lawful for Abraham to have returned back to Haran, would perhaps be a question hardly answerable; considering how auerse hee was from permitting his sonne to be carried thither, even though a wife of his owne kindred could not Gon. 24.6. haue beene obtained without his personall presence. Iacob indeed was sent thither 68. by his parents, to take a wife of his ownelinage; not without Gods especiall appro- Gan. 28. bation, by whose bleffing he prospered in that iourney: yet he lived there as a ferpant: fuffered many injuries; and finally was driven to convey himfelfe away from thence by flight. For although it bee not a fentence written, yet out of all written examples it may be observed, that God alloweth not in his servants any desire of returning to the place, from whence hee hath taken and transplanted them. That briefe faying, Remember Lots wife, containes much matter. Let vs but confider Melapatamia from whence Abraham was taken and Agypt, out of which the whole nation of the Ifraelites was delinered: wee shall finde, that no bleffing iffued from either of them, to the posterity of the Hebrewes. When Ezechias was visited with an honourable Embassie from Babel, it seemes that hee conceived great pleasure in 2. Kines 26.

but it is found in Deuteronomie, that God had faid, They should no more returne that way: which is given, as the reason, why their King might not cause the people to returne to Egypt, for the multiplying of his Horses. Whether the Lord had laied any such iniunction pon Abraham of not returning to Mesopotamia, I cannot say; many things do argue it probably: that hee neuer did returne, all circumstances do (to my vnderflanding) both flrongly and necessarily conclude.

But because this double passage of Abrahams is but an imagination : and that imaginations of men are rather valuable among children, than that they can perswade those of judgment or understanding : I take it sufficient, that S. Stephen hath directly taught vs. that Abraham left Haran, his Father being dead. And for the rest, when they shew any one Scripture to proue it, I will beleive as they doe. For all the trauails of Abraham are precifely fet downe in the Scriptures : as first from Vr or Camerina in Chaldea to Flavan or Charran : and then from Haran (after his Fathers death) to Sichem; from Sichem hee removed to a mountaine betweene Betheland Haie: thence into Egypt: from Egypt he returned thither againe, where Lot and he parted, because their flockes and heards of Cattle were more, then could be fed in that part : from thence the fecond time hee removed to Mamre, neare Hebron : 40 and thence having purfued Amraphel, and rescued Lot, hee after inhabited at Gerar, in the border of Idumaa, under Abimelee : and after neare unto it at Bersabe, at which time hee was ready to offer up his some Isaac on the mountaine Moriah. But this fiction of his retrait to Haran or Charran, appeareth not in any one story, either divine or humane. Now if it may bee suposed, that Abraham had made any former journey into Canaan, as Leuita in his Cabala hath fained, it should in reason bee therewithall beleined, that hee would in those his first trauailes have prouided himselfe of some certaine seat, or place of abiding : and not have come a whereon to rest himselfe. But Abraham, when hee came from Charran, past 50 through the North part of Canaan, thence to Sichem, and the Plaine of Mo- Genzia St rish: where finding no place to inhabite, hee departed thence to Bethel and Hai: and so from Nation to Nation, to discover and finde out some fit habitation: from whence againe, as it is written in Genefis the eleuenth. Hee went foorth, going and iournjing towards the South : and alwaies vnsetled.

By occasion of which wandring to and tro, some say, the Agyptians gaue him and his the name of Hebrai. Further, to proue that hee had not formerly beene in the Countrie, we may note, that ere hee came to Bethel and Hai, and at his first entrance into Canaan, God appeared vnto him faying, Vnto thy feed will I give this Land, shewing it him asynto a stranger therein, and as a land to him vnknowne. For Abraham without any other prouident care for himselse, beleived in the word of the living God : neither fending before, nor comming first to discouer it; but being arrived he received a fecond promise from God, that hee would give those Countries vnto him and his feede to inhabit and inherit.

Laftly, what should move any man to thinke, that Moses would have omitted 10 auy such double iourney of Abrahams, seeing he setteth downe all his passages elswhere, long and short? as when he moued from Sichem, and seated betweene Hai and Bethel: the distance being but twenty miles: and when he moued thence to the valley of Mamre, being but twenty fower miles : and when hee left Mamre, and fate downe at Gerar, being leffe then fixe miles; no, Mofes past ouer all the times of the firstage with the greater breuity, to hasten him to the story of Abraham: shutting vp all betweene the Creation and the Floud in fix chapters; which age lasted 1656. yeares : but he bestoweth on the story of Abraham fourteene chapters, beginning with his birth in the eleventh, and ending with his death in the five and twentieth; and this time endured but 175. yeares. It hath therefore no face of truth, that Mo- 20 fes forgot or neglected any thing concerning Abrahams trauailes, or other actions: or that he would fet downe those small remoues of fine miles, and omit those of three hundred. For fuch a journey ingoing and comming would have ministred some varietie of matter, or accident, worthie the inserting and adding to Abrahams ftorie.

d. IIII.

The answere to another of the objections proposed, shewing that it was not unlikelie, that TERAH should beget ABRAHAM in his hundred and thirty yeare.

Ow touching the objection, where it is faid, that it was very vnlikelie that Terah should beget Abraham in his 120. yeare, seeing Abraham himselse thought it a wonder to have a sonneat an hundred : this is hardly worth theanswering. This wonder is indeed miscast, and mistaken: Abraham hauing respect only to Sarah his wife, when he spake of their many yeares. For when the Angell faid vnto Abraham in his Tent doore at Mamre; Loe, SARAH thy wife shall have a Sonne, it followeth in the next verse, Now ABRAHAM and SARAH were old and stricken in age, and it ceased to be with 40 SARAH after themanner of women: therefore SARAH laughed &c.

So then, in that it is faid it ceased to be with S AR AH after the manner of women, it appeareth that the wonder was wrought on her, & not on Abraham. For Abraham by his fecod wife Keturah had many fons after Sarah's death, as Zimron, Jockshan, Medan Midian, Ishbak, and Shuah: and the eldest of these was borne 27. yeares after Isaac: and the yongest 40, yeares after. What strangenesse then, that Terah being 130, yeares old should beget Abraham, will they say, may be gathered from this supposed despaire of Abraham at one hundred yeares? For Sarah died in the yeare of the world 2145. and Isaac was borne in the yeare 2100; and Abraham did not marry Keturah till Sa-Origin bomilist, rah was buried. So if we deduct the number of 2109, out of 2145, there remais 50 in Gen. Aug. de neth 36. And therefore if Abraham begat fine sonnes 36. yeares after this supposed cinit. dei. 1. 16.c. Abraham was 137. yeares old: it is not strange that his Father Pererin Gen. Terah should beget Abrahamat 130. And if Booz, Obed and Jeffe, who lived so many yeares & ages after Abraham, begat fons at 100. yeares, or neare it, it cannot be meruailed at, that Terah begat Abraham at 130; and Abraham others at the same age and feuen yeares after.

ð. V.

The answere to two more of the objections: shewing that we may have certainty of ABRA-HAMS age from the Scripture, though wee make not ABRAHAM the eldest Sonne: and that therewas great cause, why in the story of ABRAHAM his two brethren should

T followeth now to speak something to the objection, which brings Abrahams age altogether in doubt, except wee allow him to be the eldest son of Terah, and born when Terah was 70. yeares old. For Abrahams age beeing made vncertaine, all fucceeding times are thereby without any perfect rule or knowledge.

But this proposition, That wee cannot be certaine of Abrahams age, vnlesse wee make him the eldest sonne, is false. For it is plaine in the Scriptures, that when Terab was 205, which was the yeare of his death, then was Abraham 75. And if you aske, how I can judge of times, either preceding or fucceeding, by knowing that A-20 braham departed Haran at that age : I answere, that St. Stephen hath told vs, that Abrahams departure followed the death of his Father Terah : and Terah died at 205: fo as the 75. yeare of Abraham was the 205. yeare of Terah : which knowne, there can be no errour in the account of times succeeding. Now to come to the objection. where it is faid, That Mofes had no respect vnto Nachor and Haran, because they were out of the Church but to Abraham only, with whom God established the Couenant, and of whom Christ descended according to the flesh &c. I answere, that Mofes for many great and necessary causes had respect of Nachor and Haran. For the fuccession of Gods Church is not witnessed by Abraham alone, but by the issues of Nahor and Haran, were they Idolaters or otherwise. For Nahor was the Father of Be-20 thuel, & Bethuel of Rebecca the mother of Ifrael: & Haran was the parent of Lot, Sarah, and Mileah and Sarah was mother to Isaac, and grandmother to Isaac Mileah alfo the wife of Wahor, and mother of Bethuel, was Iacobs great grandmother : and the age of Sarah the daughter of Haran is especially noted, in that it pleased God to give her a fonne at 90. yeares, and when by nature she could not have conceived. And therefore, though it were not in regard of themselues, yet because both Nahor and Abraham married the daughters of their brother Haran; and because Isaac married Rebecca the grand-child of Nahor; and Iacob Lea and Rachel, the daughters of Laban. the grand-child also of Nahor: it was not superfluous in Moses to give light of these menstimes and ages. And though fometime they worshipped strange Gods, as it is to him to his Fathers house in this manner: Come in thou bleffed of Iehouah &s. And Gin.24.0.311 when this fernant of Abrahams demanded an answere as touching Rebecca, then anfwered Laban and Bethuel, and faid; This thing is proceeded of Tehonah: meaning that it 600.24.050 was the will of the true God it should be so; wherein hee acknowledged Gods prouidence. Likewise in the following verse it is written; Take, take, goe that sheemay bee thy masters sonnes wife, euen as Iehouah hath said. This their often vsing of the name of lehouah, which is the proper name of the true God, is a figne that they had the knowledge of him.

Now although it be the opinion of Saint Chryfostome, and some later writers, as Caretan, Oleaster, Musculus, Caluin, Mercer, and others, that Laban was an Idoter, because he retained certaine Idols, or houshold Gods, which Rachel stole from him; yet that he beleived in the true God it cannot be denied. For he acknowledgeth the God of Abraham and of Nahor, and he called Abrahams feruant, bleffed of Ichouah, as aforefaid. So as for my felfe I dare not anow, that these men were out of the Church, who fure I am were not out of the faith.

That the naming of ABRAHAM first of the three brethren. Gen. 11.v.26. doth not proue that hee was the eldest: together with diners reasons prouing that ABRAHAM was not the eldest some of TERAH.

O the maine objection which I answere last, because it seemeth of most strength, by which, those that striue to shorten the times, endeuor to proue that Abraham was the eldest sonne of Terah, and borne in the 70. yeare of Terahs life: grounding themselues first and cheisly on this place of the Scripture, And TERAH lived 70. yeares and begat ABRAHAM. NAHOR and HARAN: To this Ifay, that although Abraham in this verse be first named, yet the same is no proofe at all that hee was the eldest and first borne some of Terab. For it is no necessary consequence, that the first named in Scriptures was therefore eldest in bloud and birth, neither doth it appeare that it pleafed God to make especiall choice of the first sonnes in nature and time: for Seth was not the first borne of Adam : nor Ifade of Abraham : nor Iacob of Ifaac : nor Juda and Joseph of Jacob : nor David the eldest of Jeffe : nor Salomon of David : as is formerly remembred. But it is written of Noah; Noah was 500. yeares old, and Noah begat Shem, Ham and laphet : shewing that at the 500. yeare of his age he began to beget the first of August figt those three somes. For according to St. Augustine speaking energing the first of Goi. 35.

August figt those three somes. For according to St. Augustine speaking generally, New attendenGoi. 35.

August figt those speaking to the source of t dus est in his ordo nativitatis, sed signi seatio future dignitatis: in qua excelluit ABRAHAM. The order of nativity is not here to be respected, but the signification of the suture dignity in which ABRAHAM was preserved. And therefore as in the order of the sonnes of Noah : fo is it heere: where it is faid that TERAH lined 70. yeares and begat ABRA-HAM, NAHOR, and HARAN: For it was late ere Terah began to beget fonnes, himselfe being begotten by his Father Nachor at 29. as other his auncestors were at 30. The like also happened to Noah; for whereas Adam begat Seth at 130. Enoth 40 Kenan at 00: Kenan Mahalaeel at 70: Mahalaeel Iered at 60: Noah was yet 500. yeares old when he began to beget the first of his three sonnes : as aforesaid. And S. Angustine in the place before cited, rather inclineth to the opinion that Abraham was the yongest of Terahs sonnes, then otherwise: though for his excellency he was worthily named first. His owne words are these. Fieri enimpotuit ut posterior sit generatus ABRAHAM: sed merito excellentia, qua in scripturis valde commendatur, prior fuerit nominatus. It might be, faith he, that ABRAHAM was begotten later : but was first named in regard of his excellency, for which in Scripture hee is much commended. So as the naming first or last, proucth nothing who was first or last borne: either in those iffues of Noah or in these of Terah : Neither hath God any respect of the eldest in na- 50 ture, as touching his election or spirituall bleffing, for Moles nameth first the children of the promife, and the eldeft and first in Gods fauour. Pietas ergò velipso potiùs electio diuina, qua comitem secum trahis pietatem, & Dei timorem,primas partes dat SEMO in libris NOA, & ABRAHAMO in liber is Thare. Pietie faith he or rather dinine election, which doth evermore draw with it or after it pietre and the feare of God, gave place and precedencie to S E w among the children of NOAH, and to A BRAHAM among those

For the rest it is manifest, that Abraham entred Canaan in the 75. yeare of his age, And it was in Canaan that Hagar bare him Ismael, when Abraham had lived 86, years, Gen 12.4. It was at Gerar (the fourth border of Canaan) that Sarah bare Ifaac, when Abrilliam Ganto 16. had confumed 100. yeares. It was from the valley of Alamrein Canaan that Abraham role out, when herefoued Lot and ouerthrew Amraphel; and hee had then but the age of 83. yeares; and it is as manifest that he parted from Haramaster his Father Ad. 1.4 & Gon,

10 Terah was dead. But if Terah begat Abraham at 70. yeare old, then must Abraham haue beene 135. yeares when hee first fet his foot in Canaan: seeing Terah must bee dead ere he parted; and fo 70 added to 135 made 205, the true age of Terab; which is contrary to all those places of Scripture before remembred. For hecentred at 75 : hee refeued Lotat 83 : he had Ifmael at 86 : he had Ifaae at 100 proued by the Moreouer if Abraham were the eldeft fonne of Tersh, and borne in the 70 years of his age: then had Terablined till Isaachad beene 35, yeares old, and Isaachad both which must then have been borne in Mesopotamia, and therein fostered to that age: whleffe wee should either deny credit to St. Stephen, who saith that Abraham 20 departed from Melopotamia after his Fathers death : or elfe give credit to the interpretation of Daniel Angelocrator, who in his Chronologia antoptica, faith it was about his Pathers death : because the greeke word werd, may be transported by the Latine fub, as well as by post: which though elsewhere it may be, yet cannot it be so in this place. For it were most improperly spoken, to say that those things were done about Terahs death, which were 60 yeares before. Wherefore Supposing Abraham to have been borne in the 70. years of Terah; we must give those times and places of birth to Abrahams children, which no authoritie will warrant; For Abraham had no children in Vr of Chaldaa, nor in Haran: nor in 10. yeares after his arrivall into Canaan. For the yeare of Terahs death, in which Abraham left Haran, was the yeare of 30 the World 2083: and the yeare of Ifmaels birth was the Worlds yeare 2004: which maketh 10 yeares difference. And that Isaac was borne in Canaan, and was to bee offered vpon the mountaine Morial therein, 39 miles from Ber labe, where Abraham then inhabited and that three Angels first of all appeared to Abraham in the valley of Mamre, no man doubteth. And therefore it cannot be that any of Abrahams sonnes were borne in Mesopotamia: nor while Terablined: nor in leffe then 10 yeares after Terabs death: and then consequently was not Abraham the eldest sonne of Terah, nor borne in the 70, yeare

Thirdly, whereas Abraham came into Canaan at 75: if Terah had begotten him at 40 70, then had Terah lived but 145, for 70 and 75, make 145, which must also have Gonts beene the full age of Terah: but Terablined 205 yeare : and therefore was not Abraham borne in the 70. yeare of Terah.

Fourthly, the ages of Lot and Sarah make it manifest, that Haran was the elder, if not the eldest brother of Abraham; for Sarah or Iseth wanted but 10. yeares of A-brahams age: Isaac beeing borne when Abraham was 100. and Sarah 90. yeares

It followeth then that if Abraham had beene the elder brother of Haran, Haran must have begotten Sarah at o. yeares old: for granting that Haran was borne but one yeare after Abraham, and Sarah within 10. yeares as old as Abraham, then of 50 necessitie must Haran beget her, when he had lived but 9. yeares; which were too ridiculous to imagine.

And that Ifcah was Sarah, Rab: Solomon affirmeth; both names, faith he, bearing the same signification; and names of principalitie. Againe, to what end was the word Iseah or Isheah inserted in this place, if Sarah were not meant thereby? for to speake of any thing superfluous it is not ysed in Gods Bookes: and if Iseab had not belonged to the story, it had beene but an idle name to no purpose remembred.

Now if it had beene trew (as those of the contrary opinion affirme) that Moses had no respect of Nachor and Haran, who were notwithstanding the parents of Bethue and Rebecca, the mother of Ifrael, and of Christ: what regard then had Moses of Ifeat in this place, were the not Sarah, but otherwise an idle name of whom there is nothing elfe first or last.

The age also of Lot disprough the eldership of Abraham : for Lot was called an old man when Abraham was but 83. yeares: And if Lot were of a greater age than Abraham, and Haran were Father to Lot, Sarah, and Mileah, Abraham marrying one of 10 Harans daughters, and Nahor the other, Sarah also being within 10. yeares as olde as Abraham: it may appeare to every reasonable man (not obstinate and prejudicate) that Haran was the eldest sonne of Terah, and not Abraham : who also died first and before his Father left Vr in Chaldas. Also Lyra reasoneth against the opinion of Abrahams eldership, upon the same place of Genesis: drawing argument from the age of Sarah, who was but 10. yeares yonger than Abraham himselfe. Lyra his wordes arethele, Siigitur HARAN fuit iunior ipfo ABRAHAM, sequitur quod non habebat decem annos quando genuit SARAM: imonec octo &c. and afterward, & ideo melius videtur dicendum, quod ABRAHAM fuit oltimo natus de tribus filijs THARE, tamen nominatur primo , propter eius dignitatem : & quia ponenduserat caput slirpis & generati- 20 onis sequentis : & quia primo facta est ci repromisso expressa de CHRISTO, sicut supra dictum est de SEM &c. If therefore (faith Lyra) HARAN was yonger then ABRA-HAM himselfe, it followeth that he was not 10 yeares old when he begat SARAH : And therefore it feemeth better to be faid, that ABRAHAM was the last born of the three fonnes of THARE, neuerthelesse he is named first for his dignitie, both because he was to be ordained head of the stocke and generation following: and because the promise of CHRIST was first made unto him, as before it is faid of SEM.

A conclusion of this dispute, noting the Authors on both sides : with an admonition that they which shorten the times make all ancient stories the more unprobable.

therefore agreeth with the Scriptures, with Nature, Time, and cording to S. Stephen, and that iourney by Abraham performed when 49 hee was 75 yeares old, these two numbers added make 205, yeares, the full age of Terah: seeing that when Terah died, then Abraham entred Canaan, For my selfe, I haue no other end hecrein then to manifest the truth of the Worlds Storie: I reuerence the judgements of the Fathers: but I know they were mistaken in particulars. Saint Augustine was doubtfull, and could not determine this controuerfie. For what socuer is borrowed from him out of his 16. Booke de Civitate Dei ca. 15, the same may bee answered out of himselfe in his five and twentieth question vpon Gen. But S. Augustine heerein followed tosephus, and Isidor: and Beda followed S. August. And it was out of a foolish pride and vanitie, that the Hebrews and Infephus fought to make Abraham the first borne : as if God had had respect to the eldest 50 in nature . So did Iosephus together with Nicholas Damascenus (thinking thereby to glorifie the Iewish Nation) make Abraham a king, entitling Sarah by the name of Queene Sarah: and faid that Abraham was followed with 318. Captaines, of which cuerie one had an infinite multitude vnder him : trecentes & octodecem prafectos Снар.п.§.7. of the Historie of the World.

habuit: quorum fingulis infinita multitudo parebat. And that Pharae invading him with a great armie, tooke from him his wife Sarah. Such fables argue that Jolephus is not to be believed, but with discreete reservations.

This account of times, allowing no more than 202, yeares from the floud to Abraham, is veheld by manie of the Hebrews. But how should we value the opinion of fuch Chronologers, as take Amraphel for Nimrod? Surely, if their judgement in fuch matters were worthie to be regarded, it would have appeared in fetting downe the fuccession of the Persian Kings, under whom they lived, whose historie was not so farre remote in time, as these antiquities, nor wanting the light of manie good wri-

10 ters. Yet groffely haue they erred therein, and fo familiar are their mistakings in all things of like nature, that we feldome finde their opinion rehearfed without the confutation treading on the heeles of it. They of the Romane religion are also generally on the same side: it being a thing vsuall among them, to maintaine what socuer they have beene formerly knowne to hold and beleiue. Contrariwife, of the more ancient, Theodoret, and some following him: of later times Beroaldus, Codoman, Pencer, Caluin, Junius, Beza, Broughton, Doct, Gibbons, and Moore, with divers of the Protestants, hold Abraham to have been borne in the 130 yeare of his Father Terah. From these (as in a case not concerning any point in Religion) divers of the same Religion, and those neuerthelesse good Authors, as Bucholeerus, Chitraus, Functius

20 and others, are verie auerfe hecrein, especially Tofephus Scaliger with his Sethus Caluifius, proclaiming Beroaldus an Arch-heritique in Chronologie, and condemning this opinion of his as poisonous. Contrariwise Augustinus Torniellus a Priest of the Congregation of S. Paul, a judicious, diligent, and free writer, whose Annales are newly fet forth, very earnestly defends the opinion, which I have already deliuered; not alleadging Beroaldus, nor any Protestant writer, as beeing perhaps vnwilling to owe thankes to heretiques. For my selfe I do neither millike the contrary opinion, because commonly those of the Romish Religion labour to vphold it, Nor fauour this larger account of times, because many notable men of the Protestant writers have approved; it but for the truth it felfe. To strengthen which, after all these former

30 reasons, and testimonies of Scripture, I will adde thus much more to the rest. First. it is apparant to all men of judgement, that the best approued Historians, Divine and prophane, labour to inuestigate the truth of times, thereby to approue the stories, and forepast actions of the world; and not the truth of histories to approve the times by. Let vs then make judgment to our felues, which of these two accounts giue the best reputation to the storie of the Scriptures; teaching the worlds new plantation, and the continuancie of Gods Church: either that of Iofephus, and those which follow him; who makes but 292 yeares, or thereabouts, betweene the floud and birth of Abraham: or this other account, which makes 352, yeares betweene the one and the other: the one taking Abraham to be the first borne of Thare.

40 in the 70, yeare of his life: the other a yonger fonne of Thare, and borne when he had lived 130. yeares. And if we looke over all, and doe not hastily satisfie our vnderstanding with the first things offered, and thereby being satiated doe slothfully and drowfily fit downe; wee shall find it more agreeable rather to allow the reckoning of the Septuagint, who, according to fome editions, make it abone 1072, yeares betweene the floud and Abrahams birth: then to take away any part of those 252, yeares giuen. For if we aduisedly consider the state and countenance of the world, fuch as it was in Abrahams time, yea, before Abraham was borne, we shall find that it were verie ill done of vs, by following opinion without the guide of reason, to pare the times ouer-deeply betweene Abraham and the floud : because

50 in cutting them too necrethe quicke, the reputation of the whole storie might perchance bleed thereby, were not the testimonie of the Scriptures supreame, so as no objection can approach it: and that we did not follow withall this precept of St. Augustine, That wherefocuer any one place in the Scriptures may be conceived disagreeing to the whole, the same is by ignorance of interpretation misunderstood.

For in Abrahams time all the then-knowen parts of the world were peopled : all Regions and Countries had their kings. Egypt had many magnificent Cities: and fo had Palestina, and all the bordering Countries: yea, all that part of the world befides, as far as India: and those not built with stickes, but of hewen stones, and defended with walles and rampiers : which magnificence needed a parent of more antiquitie, then those other men haue supposed. And therefore, where the Scriptures are plainest, and best agreeing with reason and nature, to what end should we labour to beget doubts and scruples, or draw all things into wonders and marnailes? giving also strength thereby to common cauellers, and to those mens apish of the World and mankinde.

N this fort therefore for the reasons before allead ged, I conclude. In this for the feel of the realists before a leading of, to the first of _Abraham, 372. years were confumed: and taking the _Affyrian Historie with vs, the fame _10 number of years were fpent from the floud to the 43. years of Nie. nus: in which 43. years of Nieus Abraham was borne: which hapned in the yeare of the World 2009.

Now of this time of 352, yeares, wee must give one part as well to the increase of those people which came into Shinar, as to those that staied in the East, to wit, 30. yeare to Chus, ere he begat Seba: of which, though the Scriptures are filent, yet because those of the same time had that age when they begat their first sons, wee may the more fafely give the like allowance to these. For Eber begat Peleg at 34. Peleg Regulat 30. Regul Serug at 32. Now after Seba, Chus begat Hauila, Sabta, Raama and Sabtecha: and Raama begat Sheba and Dedan, before Nimrod was borne as it appea- 20 reth Gen. 10: which St. Augustine approueth. Giving then 30. yeares more to Raama ere hee begat Sheba, and five yeares to the five elder brothers of Nimrod, it may be gathered that 65, yeares were confumed ere Wimrod himfelfe was borne : and that Raamah had that age ere any of his fonnes were begotten, it may be gathered, by example and comparison; for Peleg, the fourth from Noah, as Raamah was, begat Re-

Let vs then allow 60 yeares more after the birth of Nimrod, for two other generations to be brought forth, or elfe we shall hardly find people to build Babel; for fure wee are that it was done by hands, and not by miracle: because it displeased God. These two numbers of 65, and 60, make 125: The rest of the time of 131. (in 40 which yeare they arrived in Shinar whereof there are 6, yeares remaining) we may give them for their travels from the East: because they were pestered with women, children and Cattle: and as fome ancient writers have conceived, and Becamus of ladn. & falute bu. ter times, they kept alwaies the mountaines fides, for feare of a fecond floud. Now mani generis ab if we take this number of 131.0ut of 352, there remaines 221, of which number aquis centesimo Berosus bestoweth 65. on Belus, and 42. on Ninus, before Abraham borne : both num Babylon- which S. Augustine approueth: which two numbers taken againe out of 221. there enn sub nostro remaineth 1 14. yeares of the 3 52, from the floud to Abrahams birth: which num-Saturno patre ber of 114.necessitie bestoweth on Wimrod.

And if it be objected that this time given to Nimred, is over-long: fure if we compare the age of Nimrod with the rest of the same descent from Noah, it will rather appeare ouer-fhort. For Nimred, by this accompt, lived in all but one hundred fenenty nine yeares: whereof hee raigned one hundred and twelve: whereas Sale who was the some of Arphanad the some of Sem, lived four hundred thirty three yeares : and of the fame age of the World was Nimred, the fonne of Chus, the fonne of Cham.

Now after Ahraham was borne

Ninus reigned Q, yeares; which added to 42, make. Ninus dieth and leaueth Semiramis his fucceffor.

Semiramis gouerned the Empire of Babylonia and Affyria 42. yeares, and died in the Of the World 52. yeare compleat of Abrahams life.

When Abraham was 85 yeares old, herefcued his nephew Lot, and ouerthrew by 403.add. furprise Amraphel king of Shinar, or Babylonia, Ninias reigned 38. yeares, and Abraham came into Canaan but 23. yeares after Semiramis died: which was the 75. yeare of his age : fo that Amraphel may feeme to have beene this Ninias the fonne of Ninus and Semiramis, whose 23 yeare, as aforesaid, being the 75. yeare of Abraham, he and his fellow-kings might have received this overthrow in the 85, yeare of Abraham, and the 33, yeare of his own reigne: after which he reigned flue yeares: which make in all 38. But the truth is, that the reasons to the contrary, viging that this Amraphel could not be Ninias, are not easily answered. Howbert for the times of the Allyrian kings, that they are to be ordered as wee haue fet them downe, accor-

20 ding to the times noted by Moles, in the storic of Abraham, it is most certaine : vnleffe we will either derogate from the truth of Mofes his computation, which were impietie: or account the whole Hiltorie of Ninus and Semiramis to bee a fictions which were to condemne all ancient Historians for fablers

That AMRAPHEL, one of the foure Kings whom ABRAHAM overthrep Gen. 14. may probably be thought to have beene NINIAS the Sonne of NINVs.

Nd now touching this Awraphel, whom Mofes makes king of Shinar or Babylonia, in the 85. yeare of Abrahams life, that is, in the 23. yeare of the reigne of Winias Zameis the king of the Affyrians, the fonne of Winus and Semiramis, it is hard to affirme what he was, and how hee could bee at this time king of Babylonia: Ninias Zameis then reigning there. To this doubt the answere which first offereth it selfe as most probable, is that which hath beene alreadic noted, that this Ninias or Zameis, was no other then our Amraphel: who inuaded Traconitis of Bafan, and ouerthrew those fine kings of Pentapolis, or the valley of Siddim. For the Scriptures tell vs, that Amraphel was king 40 of Shinar, which is Babylonia : and the times before accounted make him to be the Successor of Ninus and Semiramis: and it falleth out with the 85, yeare of Abrahams life : wherein herefcued Lot, flew Chedorlaomer, and ouerthrew the reft. True it is, that this Amraphel was not at this time the greatest Monarke : for Chedorlaomer commanded in cheife, though Amraphel bee first named by Moses in the first verse of the 14. Chapter of Genesis. For the Kings of the valley of Siddim, or of Pentapolis, or of the fine Cities, were the vaffals of Chedorl, and not of Amraphel: as it is Written. Twelve yeares werethey subject to CHEDORLAOMER, butinthe 12. yeare Gen. 14.6. they rebelled, and in the 14. year came CHEDORLAOMER and the kings that were with him and therefore was Chedorl, the principall in this enterprise, who was then king 50 of Elam, which is Persia: Now Persia being seated ouer Tiggis, and to the East of Am-raphels Countrie; and the other two kings, which were companions with Anraphel, being feated to the Westof Shinar or Babylonia: Anraphel, who held Babylonia it selfe, feemeth at this time to have had no great feope or large dominion. For had Amraphel beene so great a Prince as prophane Historians make Ninus or Semiramis whom he fucceeded, he should not have needed the affishance of three other kines for this expedition. But though Chedorlaomer were the fitst and greatest of those fower Kings, (as it is manifest that he was: For these little kings of Sodome, Gomora. ere, were his vaffals, and not Amraphels) yet this makes not the conjecture leffe probable, but that this Amraphel might be Ninias. For it may be, that the great and potent Empire of Affyria, had now (as we shall show more plainly in that which followeth) received a downe-right fall, at the time of this warre : though not long before it commanded all the kingdomes betweene India and the Phanician Sea: to wit. in the times of Ninus and Semiramis.

Of ARIOCH another of the foure Kings : and that ELLAS, whereof he is faid to haue beene King , lies betweene Coelesyria and Ara-

Ow the two other kings joined with Amraphel, and Chedorl, were Arioch and Tidal; the one king of Ellaffar, the other of the Nations. For Ellassar, Aquila and Hierome write Pontus: So Tostatus thinketh that it floud de Heldipont: which opinion Pererius fauoreth. But this 120 onely to defend the Latine translation. For as Pentus, so is Heldipont farre distant, and out of the way to send any armies into Arabia Petraa, or into Idumea: which Countries these foure Kings cheifly inuaded, Besides that, it is certaine, that the Asyrians (when they were greatest) had neuer any dominion in Asia the leffe. For at such time as the Afgrians feared the invasion of the Medes and Persians, they fent not into Afa the leffe as commaunders: but vsed all the art they had to inuite Cr.esus to their affiftance; perswading him that nothing could be more dangerous for himfelfe, and the other Kings of those parts, than the successe of the Medes against the Asyrians. But examine the enterprise what it was, These kines (faith the Text) made warre with BERK, king of Sodome, BIRSHA king of Gomor- 30 ha, SHINAB king of Admath, and SHEMEBAR king of Zeboim, and the king of BELA which is Zoar. All which fine kings had not fo much ground as Middlefex: being fuch a kind of Reguli, as Iofua found in the land long after: namely Lords of Cities and small territories adiopning 3 of which Canaan had 23. all slaine or hanged by 10 fua. Neither can the other Countries, which in the Text they are faid alfo to haue inuaded, be imagined to haue beene at that time of any great power: and therefore to call in Kings from Pontus or Hellespont, had manifested a great impotencie and weaknesse in the kings of Babylon and Persia,

And though it be alleadged for an example, that diners kings far off, came to assist Pompey against Cefar: yet these samples without like occasions and circumstances, do neither lead nor teach. For there was no cause to feare the greatnesse of these pettie kings, or of the other Countries: But the cies of the world were fixed on Cafar; and his vndertakings and intents were to all other Princes, no leffe doubtfull then fearefull: But the whole Countrie by these soure kings maistered in their paffage, was afterward given to the halfe tribe of Manasse, Gad, and Ruben: a narrow valley of ground lying betweene tordan and the mountaines of Seir : inclofed by the river of Arnon on the South fide, and by Lybanus on the North, confifting of the two small Provinces of Traconitis or Basan, and the Region of the Moabites: a conquest farre vnualuable, and little answering the power of the Assyrian Empire, aconquertance vinantacons, and necessity the fame had from any comparable effacts with the times of Ainus and Se 50 mirans, who subjected all the great kings of that part of the World, without the affiltance of any of the kings of Hellespoor, or any other part of Asia the lesse. But as the Vulgar and Aquila convert Ellassia by Pontus: so Symmachus makes Ariacha king of the Scythians, a king indeed, as faire fetched to ioyne with the Affrians in this warre, as the World had any at that time. The Septuagint doe not change the word of Ells//ar at all, but as they keep the word Ararat, on the mountaines wherof the Arke did reft, fo doe they in this place retains the Hebrew word Edufur, being doubtfull to giue it a wrong interpretation. And Pererius himfelfe remembreth other opinions farre more probable then this of Pontus or Helle(pont : yet he dares not auow his liking of them, because the Latine Transaction bath it otherwise. For Stephanus de Vrbibus a Gracian Cosmographer, findeth the Citie of Eslas in the border of Calefyria and St. Hierome calleth Elles the Citie of Arioch, as in truth it was. Now although the same be seated by Stephanus in Calefyria, yet it standeth on the border

10 of Arabia, of which Arioch was king : who formerly joined with Ninus in all his conquests, being of the samo familie, and descended from Cham and Chiu; after whom the name of Arius was by the Hebrews written Arioch : and afterward againe Aretas: as in the Macchabes : the kings of Arabia holding that name even to the time of St. Mee. 25 500 Paul, who was fought to be betraied by the Lieutenant of Aretas commanding in Cor. 2.11. Damascus. They were Princes for the most part confederate and depending vpon the Affrian Empire. It is true that we finde in Daniel, that in the time of Nabucho- Dana. donofor, one Arioch was Generall of his armie, and the principall Commander under him, who was a king of kings: which makes it plain, that Arioch heere spoken of, the fonne of that Arioch confederate of Ninus, was no king of Pontus; nor of Scythia; repi-

to ons farre removed from the Affyrians and Babylonians. The name also of Arioch who commanded under Nabuchodonofor is mentioned in Iudith by the name of king of the Elymeans : who are a Nation of Persians bordering Assyria: according to Stephanus: though Plinie fets it betweene the Sea-coaft, and Media: and if any brother of the Arabian Kings or other of that house (knowne by the name of Arius, Arioch, Areta or Aretas) had the government of that Perfian Province called Esymais (as it feemeth they had by the places of Daniel and Iudith) yet the same was in Nabucho doneforstime. But this Arioch heere spoken of may with more reason bee taken for the king of Arabia, the sonne of Arius, the confederate of Ninus : whose sonnes held league, as their Fathers did, being the next bordering Prince of all on that fide to-30 wards the West to Bahylonia, and Chaldea : and in amitie with them from the beginning, and of their own house, and bloud: which D. Sieulus also confirmeth. Disd. Sie. 12.6.3

He fourth King by Abraham ouerthrowne was Tidal, king of the Nations. The Hebrew writes if Goym, which Patablus takes to be a proper name: Lyra of mixt people: Calain of runnagates without habitation: Pererius out of Strabo, findes that Galilaa was inhabited by divers Nations, which were a mixt people: namely of Ægyptians, Arabians, and Strabo. ii. 16/6. Phanicians. Namtales sunt qui Galilaam habitant, Such are the inhabitants of Galilee faith 523. Strabo: and therefore was Tidal called king of these Nations, as they suppose. And it may be fo : but the authoritie of Straho is nothing in this question. For Galilaa was not peopled at this time, as it was in the time of Strabo. For when Abraham came Gon, 12,6. into Canaan, the Cananite was then in the Land, how soener they might be afterwards mixt; which I know not. But there are many pettic kingdomes adioyning to Phanicia, and Palæstina; as Palmyrena, Batanea, Laodicene, Apamena, Chalcidice, Cassioris Chalibonitis, and all these docalso ioine themselves to Mesopotamia, on the North, and to 50 Arabia on the East. And that these Nations gathered themselves together under Tidal, I take to be the probablest consecture.

That CHEDORLAO MER the chiefe of the 4. Kings was not of Affyria, but of Persia; and that the Assyrian Empire at this time was much impaired.

Afly, whereas it is conceined that Chedorlaomer was the Affrican Emnour of Babylonia, and that the other kings named were fuch alfo, I cannot agree with Pererius in this. For Moses was too well acquainted with the names of Assur, and Shinar, to call the Assurance a king of E-10

lam: those kings being in the Scriptures euermore called by the name of Chaldea, Shinar, Babylonia, or Affyria : but neuer by Elam; and Chedorlaomer or Kedarlaomer was fo called of Kidor, from Cidarim which in the Hebrew fignifieth Regale : for fo Q. Curtius calleth the garment which the Perlian kings ware on their heads.

Neither doe I beleiue that the Affyrian or Babylonian Empire stood in any greatneffeat the time of this inualion, and my reasons are these: First, example and experience teach vs, that those things which are set vp halfily, or forced violently, do not long last : Alexander became Lord of all Asia, on this side of Indus, in a time of so fhort a life, as it lasted not to ouer-looke what it selfe had brought forth. His fortunes were violent, but not perpetuall. For his Empire died at once with himfelfe : all 20 whose cheife Commanders became kings after him. Tamberlain conquered Asia and India with a storme-like and terrible successe: but to prevalent furie God hath adioined a short life: and what socuer things Nature herselfe worketh in hast, she taketh the least care of their continuance. The fruit of his victories perished with him, if

Ninus beeing the first whom the madnesse of boundlesse dominion transported, inuaded his neighbour Princes, and became victorious ouer them: a man violent infolent, and cruell. Semiramis taking the opportunitie, and being more proud, aduenturous, and ambitious, then her Paramor: enlarged the Babylonian Empire, and beautified many places therein with buildings vnexampled. But her fonne hauing chan- 20 ged Nature and Condition with his Mother, proued no leffe feminine then the was masculine. And as wounds and wrongs, by their continuall smart, put the Patient in minde how to cure the one, and reucinge the other: fo those kings adjoining (whose subjection, and calamities incident was but new, and therefore the more greiuous) could not fleepe, when the aduantage wasoffered by fuch a fucceffour. For in regno Babylonico hic parum resplenduit, this King shined little (faith Nauclerus of Ninias) in the Babylonian kingdome. And likely it is that the neckes of mortall men hauing been neuer before gawled with the yoke of forraine dominion, Nor hauing euer had experience of that most miserable and detested condition of liuing in slauery: no long descent having as yet inuested the Asyrian with a right: nor any other 40 title being for him to bee pretended than a ftrong hand; the foolish and effeminate fonne of a tyrannous and hated Father, could very ill hold fo many great Princes and Nations his vaffals, with a powerleffe maftering, and a mindleffe industrious than his Father, and Mother had vsed before him. And he that was so much given ouer to licentious idlenesse, as to suffer his Mother to raigne 42 yeares, and thereof the greatest part after he came to mans estate; witnessed thereby to the World, that he so much preferred ease before honour, and bodily pleasures before greatnesse, as he neither indeauoured to gaine what he could not gouerne, nor to keep what he could not without contentious perill enjoy.

These Considerations being joyned to the storie of Amraphel, delivered by Mo- 50 fes, by which we finde that Amraphelking of Shinar was rather an inferiour to the king of Persia, than either his superiour, or equall, make it seeme probable, that the Empire of Ninus and Semiramis was at that time broken afunder, and restrained again to Babylonia.

For

For conclusion I will adde these two arguments confirming the former: First, that at fuch time as it pleafed God to impose that great trauaile vpon Abraham from Vr in Chaldea to Charran, and then to Canaan, a paffage of 700 miles, or little leffe, with women, children, and carriages: the Countries through which he wandred were then fetled, and in peace. For it was in the 22 years of Ninias, when Abraham obeying the voice of God; tooke this great journey in hand; in which time of 22. yeares after the death of Semiramis, the neighbor Princes had recovered their liberric and former effaces. For Semiramis armie of foure millions, with herfelfe vtterly small 25 confumed in India, and all her armes and engins of war, at the fame time loft, gave an to occasion and opportunitie even to the poorest soules and weakest hearted creatures of the World, to repurchase their former libertie.

Secondly, it is affirmed by the best and auncientest Historians, that Arius the fonne of Ninias, or Amraphel, invaded the Bactrians and Calpians, and againg fubicated them which needed not if they had not been revolted from Minias, after Winus death. And as Arioch recovered one part, so did Baleus or Balaneus, otherwise Xerxes. reduce the rest revolted to their former obedience. Of whom it is said that he conquered from Egypt to India: and therefore was called Xerxes, ideft Victor & triumphator a conquerour and triumpher, which undertakings had been no other then the eftects of madnesse, had not those Countries freed themselves, from the Babylonian Subto jection. Now if we shall make any doubt heereof that is of the reconquest of Arius and Nerwes, both which lived after Ninus and Ninias, wee may as well thinke the rest of Ninus and Semiramis to be but fained; but if wee graunt this reconquest, then is it true that while Winias or Amraphel ruled, the Assyrian Empire was torne afunder. according to that which hath beene gathered out of Moles as before remembred.

¿. XIII.

That it is not unprobable that the foure Kings had no dominion in the Countries named, but that they had else-where with their colonies planted them (elucs; and so retained the names of the Countries whence they came: which if it be forwe neede not fay that AMRAPHEL was NINIAS, nor trouble our (elues with many other difficulties.

He consent of all writers, whose workes have come to my perusall agreeing as they doe, that these 4.kings, Amraphel of Shinar, Chedorlas-mer of Elan, and their fellowes were Lords of those Regions, whereunto they are or feeme intituled doth almost inforce vs to thinke that the Historic must so be understood, as I have delivered. But if in this ple of those lands or if (as Hierome hath it) Chedorlaomer was king of the Elamites, as Tidal was faid to be of the Nations, that is of people either wanting a fixed habitati-40 on, or gathered out of fundrie regions : then may we otherwise conceine of this Historie: remouing thereby some difficulties which men perhaps have been vnwilling to find, because they could not find how to resolue them. For as it had been a strange conjecture to thinke that Arioch was drawn to affift the Perlian, against the Sodomite; as far as from Pontus, where it is very vnlikely that Chedorlaomer was knowne, and almost impossible that the vale of Siddim should have been once named: so in true estimation it is a thing of great improbabilitie, that Chedorlaomer, if he were king of Perin alone, should passe through so great a part of the World, as the Countries of Allyria, Chaldea, Mesapotamia, Syria, and part of Arabia, and Canaan, to subdue those fine Townes, whose very names how they should come to his eare, being distoined by so

50 many great Nations of different languages, a wife-man could hardly coniecture. And if all the Countries bordering Persia together with the Babylonian himselfe, year the kingdome of Ellafar, & that of Tidal, so far offremoued were become his dependants, what reason can we finde that might have induced him, to hearken after Sodome and Gomorah?& when he shold have fought the establishment of his new-gotten Empire, by rooting out the posteritie of Ninus (as Ninus had dealt by Pharnus of Media. and Zoroalter of Bactria) then to imploy the forces of Amraphel, and those other kings, against five pettic townes, leaving Tyrus, and Sidon, and the great Citie of Damalco, with many other places of much importance, and larre neerer vnto him, vnfubdued? Now as these doubts which may bee alleadged against the first conquest of the vale of Siddim, are exceeding vehement: fo are the objections to be made a gainst his reconquest of these sine Cities, when they had revolted, as forcible; year and more, as being grounded partly vpon the text it felfe. For first, what madnesse had it beene in that small Province to rebell against so powerfull a Monarch? Or ifit were so that they dwelling farre from him, hoped rather to bee forgotten, then that hee should come or fend to reclaime them; was it not more then madnesse in them. when his terrible armie approached, still to entertaine hope of euasion: yea to make relistance (being themselues a dissolute and therefore vinwarlike people) against the power of all the Nations betweene Euphrates, yea betweene themselues and the riuer of Indus? Likewise on the part of Chedorlaomer we should finde no greater wifedome, if he knowing the weakeneffe of this people, had raifed fuch a world of men against them : whom by any Lieutenant, with small forces hee might have subdued. For the perpetuall inheritance of that little Countrie, was not fufficient to counteruaile one moneths charges of fo huge an armie. How fmall then must his valour haue beene, who with so mightic preparations effected no more then the wasting of an that Palley, wherein he left the Cities standing, taking no one of them; but returned well contented with a few prisoners, and the pillage of the Countrie, although hee had broken their armie in the field? Now the Scriptures doe not of this inualion (supposed so great) make any fearefull matter : but compose the two armies, as equally matcht, faying they were foure kings against fine: yea, if the place be literally expounded, we shall finde that Abraham slew all these kings, of which great slaughter no Historie makes mention : Neither will the raigne of Ninias who lived foure or fine yeares longer, permit that he should have died so soone: neither would Histories haue forgotten the manner of his death, if hee had so strangely perished in Syria. Whereby it appeares that these foure kings, were not the same that they are 30 commonly thought: nor their forces fo great as opinion hath made them. It may therefore well bee true, that these kings were such as many others, who in that age carried the fame title: Lords and Commanders every one of his owne companie, which he carried forth as a Colonie, feeking place where to fettle himfelfe and them, as was the viuall manner of those times.

Neither is it unprobable, that Chedorlaomer leading a troupe of Persians, Amraphel some people out of Shinar, and Tidal others gathered out of fundry places, might consort together, and make the weakest of the Countrie which lay about them, to pay them tribute. Wholocuer will consider the beginning of the first booke of Thucydides, with the manner of discoueries, conquests and plantations, in the infan- 40 cie of Greece, or the manner of the Saracens inuading Affrica, and Spaine, with almost as many kings as feuerall Armies : or the proceedings of the Spanyards in their new discoueries; passages, and conquests in the West-Indies: may easily perceive, that it was neither vnufuall, for the leaders of Colonies to receive title from the people whom they conducted: nor to make alliances together, and breake them againe, disturbing sometimes one the other, sometimes helping in pursuit of a conquest. That Amraphel and his affociates were fuch manner of Commanders, it may feeme the more likely, by the flothfull qualitie of Ninias then raigning in Affyria: whose vnmanlike temper was fuch, as might well gine occasion to such vndertaking spirits, as wanted the imploiments whereunto they were accustomed, in the raigne of Semi- 50 ramis, rather to seeke aduentures abroad, than to remain at home vnregarded: whilst others more vnworthie than themselues, were advanced. If the consent of the whole streame of writers upon this place make this coniecture disagreable to the Text, to the authoritie whereof all humane reason must subscribe, then wee may hold our felues to the former coniecture, that Amraphel was Ninias ; and that the power of his Auncestours being by his sloth decaied, he might well be inferiour to the Perlian Chedorlaomer ; or if this doe not fatisfie, wee may fay that Amrablel was an Vnder-king or Satrape of Shinar, vnder Ninias; who may be supposed to haue had his Imperial feat in his Fathers. Citie Niniue and to have preferred it before Shinar and Babylon the Citie of his Mother, whom hee hated as an viurger of his right. But if it were possible that in a case not concerning any mans Saluation, and wherein therefore none hath cared to take great paines, all might erre: then can I thinke that the opinion, That these foure kings were leaders of Colonies, sent out of the 10 Countries named in the Text, and not kings of the Countries themselves, is most consonant both to the condition of those times, and to the Scripture. And heereto adde that Chedorlaomer feemes rather called a Persian king, then king of Persia; and that Arioch (whose kingdome vindoubtedly was betweene Syria and Arabia) having beene a man of action, or being a worthy mans fonne, was very well pleafed, to giue passage and assistance, to these Captaines or pettie kings. These and such like things heere to vrge, were but with circumstances to adorne a supposition, which either may stand without them, or if it must fall, is vnworthie to haue cost bestowed vpon it : especially considering that it is not my intent to imploy any more time in making it good, but to leaue it wholy to the Readers pleasure, to follow any of these 20 opinions, or any other, if he finde any that shall seeme better than these. But of what Countries or people focuer these foure were kings, this expedition is the only publique action that we know of performed by Abraham. And as for other things belonging to his Storie, and of his fonnes, and of his Nephews Elau and Jacob as they are registred by Moles, because it is not our purpose, neither to stand upon things gonerally knowne to all Christians, nor to repeate what hath beene elsewhere alreadie fpoken, nor to preuent ourselues in things that may hereafter in due place be remembred, wee passe them heere in silence. And because in this Storie of Abraham and his posteritie, there is much mention of £gypt: by which it appeares that euen in the time of Abraham, it was a feeled and flourishing kingdome, it will not be amisse in the next place to speake somewhat of the antiquities, and first kings thereof.

The Table and especially the Chronologie, is to be confirmed by probabilities and coniectures, because in such obscurite manifest and resisting the cannot be found. For S...nagus $\frac{1}{2}$, a man of exceeding great using ement, and incomparable diligence, who had fought into all antiquities, and had read the bookes of $\mathcal{E}$ who, which now are lost, yet omitted the fluccession of the $\mathcal{E}$ gyptian kings. which he would not have done, if they dan not been more uncertainten the stropniums, whom he remembreth, then whom doubtless they were more glorious. One great occasion of this obscurite in the $\mathcal{E}$ gyptian Storic, was the ambition of the Presits: who to magnife their antiquities, filled the Recordes (which were in their hands) with many leasings; and recounted vnto strangers, the names of many kings that neuer resigned. 50 What ground they had for these reports of supposed kings, it shall appear anon. Sure it is that the magnificent workes and royall buildings in $\mathcal{E}$ gypt, such as a recover found but in States that have greatly flourished, witnesse that their Princes were of merapalous greatnesses.

ther false. A second cause of our ignorance in the **Exprium** Historie, was the too much credulitie of some good **Aubors,** who beleiving the manifold and contrariere-ports of sondiere **Exprium**, and publishing in their own name, such as pleased them belt; have consirmed them, and as it were enforced them yon vs. by their authoritie. A third and general cause of more than **Exprium** darknesses in all auncient Histories, is the edition of many Authors by **John **Annius**, of whom (if to the censures of fundrie verie learned I may adde mine) I thinke thus; That **Annius** hauing seene some fingements of those writers, and added vnto them what he would, may be credited, as an auoucher of true Histories, where appround writers confirme him: but otherwise is to be deemed fabluous. Hereupon it comment to passes the him: but otherwise is to be deemed fabluous. Hereupon it comment to passes the chim: but otherwise is to be deemed fabluous. Hereupon it comment to passes the cascount of Authors, either in the Chronologie or Genedagie of the **Exprium** Kings, runnes three altogether different waies. The Christian writers fullow the edition of **Annius** his Authors: The prophane Histories follow **Herodotus**, bidderus**, and such others.

That by the account of the Ægyptian Dynastics, and otherwise, it appeares that CHAMS reignein Ægypt began in the yeare after the Floud 101.

O reconcile these, or gather out of them the times of the auncient kings, about whom is most controuerse, the best meane is by helpe of the Dynassies: of whose continuance there is little or no disagreement. The account of the Dynassies (besides the authoritie of approued Authors) hath this good ground, that it agreet hor the most part, if not altogether with the Histories of the Assertion, Troians, Italians, and others. &c. The beginning of the 16. Dyn. is joined by general confent, with the 42, years of 30 Ninus: in which Abraham was borne. The twelve first Dynasties lasted each of them feuen yeares, under the twelve, which were called the greater Gods: fo that all the yeares of their continuance were 84. The thirteenth Dynast indured foureteene yeares : the foureteenth 26 : the fifteenth 37. These three last are faid to haue beene under the three yonger Gods. So the fifteene first Dynasties, lasted 161. yeares. As I doe not therefore beleiue that the continuance of these Dyn, was such as hath beene mentioned, because Annius in such-wise limits out their time : so I cannot reject the account vpon this only reason, That Annius hath it so : considering that both hitherto it hath paffed as current, and is greatly strengthened by manie good reasons. For, whereas Eusebius placeth the beginning of the sixteenth 40 Dynastie, in the yeare of Abrahams birth, as aforesaid : the reckoning is easily casts by which the fumme of 161. yeares, which according to our account were spent in the fifteene former, being subducted out of the summe of 352 yeares, which were betweene the floud and Abrahams birth, shew that the beginning of the first Dynaftie, which was the beginning of Chams reigne in Agypt, was in the yeare 101. As also by other probabilities the same may appeare. For it is generally agreed, that the multitude of mankind which came into Shinar, arrived at Babel, Anno à dilusio 131. In building the Tower were confumed fortie yeares as Glycas recordeth: whose report I have else-where confirmed with divers probabilities. That Cham was long in paffing with his companie, their Wittes, Children, Cattle, and fubfiance, 50 through all Syria then defolate, and full of bogges, Forrests, and bryers (which the deluge and want of culture in one hundred feuentie one yeares had brought vpon it) no reasonable man will doubt. To this his passage therefore, and the seating of himselfe in Egypt, wee allow twentie yeare : and these summes being added together, to wit one hundred thirtie one yeares after the floud, before they arrived at Babel, 40. yeares for their flay there, and 20. for Chams paffage into Agypt, and fetling there, make up the fumme of 191 yeares: at which time we faid that Chambegan his reigne in Agypt, in the beginning of the first Dynastie. And to this summe of 191. yeares if we adde the 161. yeares of the 15. first Dynasties, as they are numbred • in common account, wee shall fall right with the yeare of Abrahams birth, which was An. Dil. 252. And heereto omitting manie other reasons, which might be brought to proue that these first Dynasties must needes have beene verie short, and not containing in the whole fumme of their feuerall times about 161. yeares: Let it fuffice that had they lasted longer, then either must Agypt have beene peopled as soone as Babel after the floud : or the Dynafties (as Mercator thinkes) must have beene before 10 the floud. That the arrivall at Babel was manie yeares before the plantation of Agrot, after the floud, enough bath beene faid to proue : and that the Dynasties were not before the floud the number of the longlin'd generations betweene Adam and the floud, which was leffe than the number of the Dynafties, may fufficiently witnesse. Or if we will thinke, that one life might (perhaps) be divided into manie Dynaffies, then may this have have been aswell after the floud, as before : considering that the fonnes of Nosh did not in cuerie Countric creet fuch forme of Policie, as had been yfed in the fame ere the Deluge : but fuch, as the disposition of the people. the authoritie and power of the Conducter, together with manie other circumfiances, did induce or inforce them to.

That thefe Dynasties were not diners families of kings, but rather successions of Regents, off times many under one king. He short continuance of the Dynasties, doth shew that they were not feuerallraces of kings, as the vaunting Asyptians were wont to file them. What they were it cannot certainly be warranted. For in refittutions of decaied antiquities, it is more casie to denie than to al- 30 arme. But this may bee said, partly vpongood circumstance, partly vpon the surest proofe, That it was the manner of the Egyptian kings, to put the gouernment of the Countrie into the hands of some trustic Counsellor, only referuing the four-raigntie to themselves, as the old kings of France were wont to the Mafters of the Palace, and as the Turke doth to the chiefe Visier. This is confirmed first by the number of the Dynasties, whereof many are under Cham, and more then one under Ofiris or Mizrain; and must therefore have beene successions, not of Kings, but rather of Counfailors and Regents. Secondly, by custome of such Princes borderers to Egypt, as are mentioned in the Scriptures : of whom Abimilech the Philistim in his dealing with Abraham and Ifaac about confederation, did no- 40 thing without Phisol Captaine of his Hofte; though in taking Abrahams wife, and in his private carriage, hee followed his owne pleasure. Likewise of Abimilech the fonne of Gideon it was faid : Is not hee the fonne of IERVBBAAL ? and ZEBVL is his Officer? Also Ilbolbeth the sonne of Saul, feared Abner the Captaine of the Hoste. Yea, David himselfe hating Toab for his crueltie did not punish him, in regard of his greatnesse, which was such, as was feared even of Hadad the Edomite living then in Egypt. Thirdly, this is confirmed by the temper and disposition of Cham; who waslewd, as appeares by the Scriptures : therefore likely both for his owne idleneffe and pleafure, to have laied the burthen of government upon others; and vpon lealousie, the companion of vnworthinesse, to have changed his Lieute- 50 nants often. Aboue all other proofes is the advancement of Ioleph by Pharach. william Ter de For Pharaoh faid to Ioseph; Only in the Kings throne will I bee about thee : behold I bell Sacro. 1.19 have fet thee over all the Land of Egypt. William, Arch-biflop of Tyre, who flourished about the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred eightie, affirmes that the like or verie fame forme of gouernment by Viceroies, was in his time practifed in Agypt, having there beene in vse (as he beleived) ever fince the time of 10/eph. He plainly shewes, that the Soldans of Agypt were not Lords of the Countrie, how euer they have been so deemed ; but that they acknowledged and humbly perfourmed the dutie of subjects vnto the Caliphe: who residing in a most magnificent Palace in Cairo, did commit the charge, not only of civile government, but the power of making war and peace, with the whole office and authoritie roiall into the soldens hands. He that shall reade in William of Tyre, the state of the Caliphe, or Mulene Elhadech, with the fourme of his Court, shall plainly behold the image of the ancient 10 Pharaoh, ruling by a Lieutenant, as great in authoritie as Iofeph was, though farre in-

To thinke that manie names of fuch Regents or Lieutenants as Joseph was, haue crept into the lift of the Agyptian Kings, were no strange imagination. For sofephs brethren called him , Theman that is Lord of the Land, and the Lord of Gangago the Countrie: Belides, it is not valikely that the vainglorious Egyptian Preifix 33, would as cafily report him a king to posteritie as ignorant men and strangers deeme him fuch, under whose hand all dispatches of importance, and rotall managing of the State had paffed, whilst that the king himselfe intending his quiet had given his office to another. How strangers have mistaken in this kinde, the example alreadie 20 cited of tofephs brethren, doth sufficiently witnesse. The reports of presists do appear in Diedorus, and Herodotus : each of whom, citing their relations, as good authoritie, fay; Diodorus, that Sefofiris was the ninetieth king after Menas; Herodotus, that he was the 222 after Menas: which could not have been if Menas had been Adam. Therfore we may well conclude, I'hat the Dynasties were not so many races of kings, but succeffions of Regents, appointed by the kings of so many fundrie linages or forts of men. Now by what soeuer means a Dynastie or Regencie continued: whether in one famiic, as being made an hereditarie office: or in one order of men, as held by faction: fure it is that it was the kings guift, and free choice, that gaue the office. But the Crown roial alwaies passed by descent, anot by election; which (beside consent of Authors) 30 the Scriptures also proue. For whereas Infeph bought all the land of Agypt for Pharash, if the crowne had paffed by election, then should Pharash's children heereby either have beene inthralled amongst the rest of the people, to the next successiour: or inioying their Fathers land, though not his estate, haue beene more mightie then the king: as Land-lords of all Agypt, and the king himselfe their Tenant. Likewise wee finde in Exod. 12. that God fmoto the first borne of PHARAOH, that was to fet on his throne : And in Efay it is faid of PHARAOH: I am the sonne of the ancient king.

of CHAM, and the sonne Muza aim, or Ostais.

Hat the succession of kings began, and continued in such wife as the Table hath thewed from Cham to Cheseres; now it followeth to thew. Egypt is called in the Scripture, the land of HAM. That this name is not Pal, 18.11. given to it because the posteritie of Cham did reignethere, but for that 195.13.

himselfedid first plant it, we may gather by many circumstances. For

I thinke it is no where found, that the Countries of Culb, Put, of Canaan, as well as *Egypt, were called the land of Ham. Further it is found in Diodorus Siculus, that O- pied Sicht. fire calleth himselfe the eldest sonne of Cham, saying; Mihipater Satarnes deorum om-

10 nium iunior : alfo, Sum Saturni filius antiquior , germen ex pulchro & generofo ortim : which must needs be understood of Cham: for this Saturnus & gyptius was Cham: as it is faid, that on the monument of Ninus was an inscription, wherein Cham was called Saturnus Agyptids. Likewise the Temple of Hammon not farre from Agypt doth testifie, that Ham resided in those parts: And St. Hierome in questionibus Hebrai-

ais faith, that the £gyptians themselves did in his daies call their Countrie Ham; as in foure feuerall places in the Pfalmes this Countrie is called the land of Cham. And Ortelius, noting out of Plutarch in Ofride, that in the facrifices of the Agyptians this Countrie of Agypt was called Chemia, expounds it for Chemia: vt puto (laith he) a Chamo No Es filio, to which also he addeth out of Hidor, Agyptum via, hodie Agyptiorum lingua K A M vocari: that Agypt wnto this day in the tongue of the Agyptians is called KAM. For the beginning and continuance of Chams reigne, the same reasons may suffice to be alleadged, which I have already given in profe of the time Spent in the 15. first Dynasties: Neither is it strange that the reigne of Cham, should laft folong as 161, yeares : confidering that Sem lived 600. Arpachshad and Shelah 10 each about 400. But strange it had beene, if one Saltis created by Manetho, had in those long-lived generations reigned there, 19. yeares, and with Baon, Apachnas, . Apochis, and others of the same brood, obscured the same and glorie of Ofiris, Orus, and Sefostris. Reineccius in histor. Iulia, placeth Mizraim next, otherwise called Ofiris according to Diodorus : who faith he was the fonce of Hammon : Krentz hemius faith that Mizraim and Ofiris are words of neere affinitie and found in the Hebrew tongue. Howfocuer it bee, weeknow that Mizraim the fonne of Cham, was Lord of Egypt, and Reineccius citing good authoritie in this case, affirmeth that Leypt is now called by the naturals in their owne language Mezre. Neither doe I fee cause of doubt whether Ofiris were the same with Mizraim. It is more necessarie, and hard 20 to they manifeftly, how long Mizraim or Ofiris reigned. For whereas the yeare of his death is no where precifely fet downe, we must be faine to follow probabilities. That he is not vainly faid by Annius his Berofus, to have begun his reigne at the birth of Abraham, when the Dynastie of the Thebai began, it appeareth, first, by the authoritic of Eulebius; who auoucheth as much; next by Diodorus, who faith that he inhabited Thebes: which habitation of Ofiris there, that it might be cause of that Dynast. I can well beleiue : affenting so farre to Reineccius, who thinkes the Dynasties were named only, according to the feuerall feates of the kings;

Of the time when Osiris reigneended: and that Ircos came into Agypt in the time of ORVs the forme of OsiRis.

He death of Ofris, when it was, none can certainly affirme. The only coniecture that I know, is made thus. Lebabim the fonne of Mizraim called Hercules Lybius, made warre in Italie, to reuenge his Fathers death, on the affociates of Typhon, in the 41 years of Baleus king of Af-(yria: before which yeare he had made many great warres in Agypt, Phanicia, Phrygia, Crete, Lybia, and Spaine: and having ended his Agyptian warres, 40 left the kingdome to Orus. Thus farre Berofus, or authors following Berofus. That Dist. Ste. 12.4.1 Orus laft of all the Gods (as they were ftiled) held the kingdome of Ifis, Disderus Si-Plet. Lie Ifide culus plainty faith and Plutarch as much; to which all old Histories agree. Krentzhemius heereupon inferres, that fixe yeares may be allowed to the warres, which Hereucules made in fo many Countries, after the Agyptian warres were ended : follould the death of Ofiris have beene the 34 of Baleus: when himfelfe had reigned 297. yeares. I thinke that Krentzhemius was a greater Scholler than Souldier. For furely in those daies when commerce was not such as now, but all Nauigation made by coasting, a farre longer time would have been required, to the subduing of so manie Countries. An allowance of more time though it would after his computation, yet 50 would it well agree with his intent ; which was (doubtleffe) to finde the truth. If according to his account the death of Ofiris had beene the 34. of Baleus, then must Ifrael haue come into Egypt but feuen yeares before the death of Ofris v and haue fined there in the reigne of Typhon. A thing not eafily beleined. For it was the fame

king who advanced Iofeph, bad him fend for his Father, and gave him leave to goe into Canaan, to the performance of his Fathers funerall; as may casily be gathered out of the booke of Genelis. Whereas therefore the raigne of Oliris, cannot be extended by any possible allowance in account of times; beyond the seventh years of 1/2 raels comming into Forpt; we must needs cut off 23, yeares from that number. which Krentzhemius coniectures his raigne to haue continued; namely feuen which he should have lived after Jacobs comming into Agypt : nine in which Joseph had there flourished, ere his fathers comming: and other feuen in which Trohon and Hercules had raigned after the death of Ofiris, yet before Iofephis advancement.

Neither will this difagree with the time of Hercules Lybius his wars. For the war which Hercules made in Italie, is faid to have indured 10 yeares: After which proportion we may well give not only fixe yeares as Krentzhemius doth but 22 more to fo many wars in fo many and fo far-diffant Countries, as are named before; yea, by this proportion we may attribute vnto Orus the 13. yeares, which paffed betweene the time of Infephs being fold into Agypt, vnto his advancement; confidering that Putiphar who bought him, and whose daughter he may seeme to have married, continued all that while cheif Steward vnto Pharaoh : a thing not likely to have been if fo violent alterations had hapned the whilest in £gypt, as the tyranous vsurpation of Typhon must needs have brought in. If citing some fragment of a lost old author, I shold an confidently fay, that Putiphar for his faithfulneffe to Orus, the sonne of Ofiris, was by him in the beginning of his raigne made his cheif Steward: at which time buying Toleph and finding him a just man, and one under whose hand all things did prosper, he rather committed his estate into Iosephs hands, than vnto any of his Agyptian followers (many of whom he had found either false-hearted, or weake and valucky in the trouble for daies of Typhon) I know not what could be objected against this, Perhaps I might proceed further & fay, That when the faying of Ioleph pleafed Pharaoh. and all his feruants: then Putiphar Preift of On being cheife Officer to Pharaoh, did acknowledge in Iofeph, the ancient graces of God, & his injurious imprisonment; wherupon he gaue him his daughter to wife : and being old religned his office of cheife 30 fleward vinto him: who afterward in regard of Putiphar, did fauour the Preiles, when he bought the lands of all other Egyptians. This might appeare to some a tale not vnlike to the frierly book of Alenath, Putiphars daughter: but vnto fuch as confider that God workes visially by means; and that Putiphar was the Steward of that king, vnder whom Jacob died : it would feeme a matter not vnprobable; had it an Author of fufficient credit to anough it. Concerning the warres of Hercules, in which by this reck oning he should have spent 42 yeares after he left Agypt, ere he began in Italie, it is a circumstance which (the length of his Italian wars considered, & his former enterprises & atcheiuements proportioned to them) doth not make against vs. but for vs: or if it were against vs, yet could it not so weaken our supposition, as these probabilities collected out of the vndifputable truth of Scripture doe confirme it. Neuerthelesse I freely grant that all these profes are no other, than such as may be gathered out of Authors, not well agreeing, nor to be reconciled in such obscurities otherwise than by likelihoods, answerable to the holy Text.

of Typhon, Hercyles Egyptivs, Orvs, and the two Sesostres, Successively reigning after MIZRAIM: and of divers errors about the former Sesostres.

Oncerning the reigne of Typhon, and of Hercules, I finde none that precifely doth define how long either of them continued. Daniel Angelocrator giveth three yeares to Typhon, omitting Hercules. But he is so peremptorie without profe, as if his owne worde were sufficient authoritie, in many points verie questionable; alledging no witnesse;

but as it were faying, Testemeipso: yet herein we may thinke him to speake probably, forasmuch as the learned Krentzhemius affirmeth, that Hercules did verie soone undertake his Fathers reuenge: and was not long in perfourming it: and that leauing Ægypt to his brother, he followed other warres, in the same quarrell, as hath beene shewed before. True it is, that I cannot collect (as Krentzhemius doth) out of Berosus, that Hercules reigned after Typhon: yet seeing Auentinus a follower of Berosus hath it so, I will also beleiue it. That in the reigne of Typhon and Hercules, feuen yeares were spent, how soeuer divided betweene them, I gather out of Krentzhemius onely, who placeth the beginning of Orus feuen yeares after the death of Ofiris: forgetting to fet downe his reasons, which in a matter so probable I thinke he wanted not. Now whereas he alloweth 90. yeares of the eighteenth Dynastie to 0fire Typhon, Hercules, and Oris: it feemes that the reigne of Orus lafted 115, yeares, 10 From the death of Orus to the departure of Ifrael out of Agypt, there passed 122. vegres by our account : who (according to Beroaldus and others,) thinke that Abraham was borne in the 1.20. yeare of Terah, and thereupon reckon thus. From the end of the floud to the birth of Abraham____

which fumme divers other waies may be collected. Since therefore to the departure out of Agypt, there doc remaine (as is aforefaid) onely 122, yeares from the death of orus: wee are now to confider how many of them are to be allowed vnto 20 Selostris or Seloncholis: who is placed next vnto Orus, by authoritie of the Scholiaftes Apollonii: not without good probabilitie. For this great king or conquerour, is by many Histories recorded to have over-run a great part of Alia: to have built a fleete of thippes on the red Sea: and to to have entred into India: likewife with an other fleete on the middle-earth Seas, to have paffed into Europe, and fubdued manie Nations. This is he (as Reineccius indgeth) whom Instine erring in account of his time calleth Vexoris: For Infline placeth Vexoris in ages before Ninus: whereby it would follow that Sefostris, if hee were Vexoris, was more ancient then was Osiris (otherwise Mizraim) a thing altogether vnlikely. Certaine it is that after the departure of Ifrael out of Egypt, no one Pharaoh came into the land of Canaan (which lieth in the 30 way from Egyptinto Asia) till the Father in law of Salomon, Pharaoh Vaphres, tooke Gerar, and gaue it to his daughter: after which time Sefac oppressed Rehoboams, and gaue it to his daughter : after which time Sefac oppressed Rehoboam, & Necho fought passage through the land of Israel, when hee made his expedition against the Chaldeans. Ofking Paphres and Necho it is out of question, that neither of them was the great king Sefostris. Of Sefac it is doubted by some, forasmuch as he came into Indea, with a great armie. Reinecoius propounding the doubt leaueth it yndecided; ynleffe it bee sufficient proofe of his owne opinion, that hee himselfe placeth Sefostris next to Orus: following the Scholiastes Apollonii. But further answere may be made to shew that they were not one. For as Iustine witnesseth, Sefostris, otherwise Vex- 40 oris, made warre on people farre removed, abstaining from his neighbours. Selac came vp purposely against Hierusalem. Sesostris as Diod, witnesseth, had but 24000. horse : Selachad 60000 : Selostris had 8020. Chariots, Selac but 1200 : Selostris made his expedition for no private purpole, but to get a great name : Sefae, as most agree, had no other purpose then to succour Ieroboam, and give him countenance in his new reigne: whom he had fauoured euen against Salomon; therfore Sefostris must needes haue reigned whilft Ifrael abode in Ægypt.

Whereas Krentzhemius collecteth out of Herodotus, and Diodorus, that one Menas, or Menis, was next to Orus : because those Historians affirme that hee reigned next after the Gods; it moueth me nothing. For Ofiris did fucced those 15. Gods, 50 namely the twelue greater and three leffer : himfelfe alfo (as the learned Reineccius noteth) being called Menas. Which name, as also Mineus, and Menis, were titles of dignitie: though mistaken by some as proper names. Krentzhemius doth verie probably gather, that Menas was Mercurius Ter-maximus : the Hebrew word

Meni fignifying an Arthmetician: which name Ter-maximue might well be attributed to Ofris: who was a great Conquerour, Philosopher, and benefactor to mankind, by giuing good Lawes, and teaching profitable Artes. In prowesse and great undertakings Sefoftris was no whit inferiour to Ofiris. For he fought victorie not for gaine, but for honour only : and beeing well contented, that many Nations had acknowledged his power, and fubmitted themselues to his will and roiall disposition, leauing them in a manner to their libertie, returned into Agypt. Soone vpon his returne he was endangered by a great Treason, the house in which he was, being by his owne brother purposely fired : which neuerthelesse hee is said to have escaped, and to haue reigned in all thirtie three yeares : after which time hee chose rather to die then to live : because he fell blinde. Both Herodotus, and Diodorus, affirme that Sefostris left a sonne, whose name was Pheron or Pherones: who afterwardes tooke the name of Sefostris: but was nothing like to his Father in glorie: for hee shortly fell blinde. The cause of his blindnesse Herodotus attributes to his affaulting the river Nilus with a laueline: which tale Diodorus having likewise heard, yet reports as a fable faying that perhaps he tooke the disease naturally from his Father. How long this man reigned it is no where expressed yet for a smuch as or us the second, (otherwife Busiris) who succeeded him, began 14. yeares after that this Sefostris had been king, it must needes bee that this reigned 14. yeares at least. That Bushris began not 20 vntill these 14. yeares at least were expired, the very account of time from the first of Busin's, to the departure of Ifraelout of Egypt plainly shewes, beeing almost generally agreed vpon, to have beene 75 yeares. That none came betweene Sefosiris the fecond and Businis or Orus the second, it stands only vpon probabilities: which are these. After sefostris had reigned somewhile, he fell blinde: after certaine yeares hee recouered his fight, as is faid : which may have beene true, but is more like to haue beene a fable: furely the manner of his recouerie as it is fet downe, is verie fabulous: namely that by looking vpon a woman, or washing his eies with her water, who had onely knowne her owne hulband, he got his fight againe. As the time of his reigne, before his blindneffe, and when hee was well againe (if euer hee were) 30 may haue taken vp a good part of 14 yeares: fo his workes which were great doe much more ftrongly argue, that his reigne was not verie short. His words are largely let downe by Herodotus, and Diodorus: a part of which may feeme to have beene the finishing of that which his Father had begun, about the channels and sluces of Wilus: whom I thinke he rather frighted, (as his Father had done) with spades and shouels, then with darts, and iauclins : and by his diligent ouerlight of that worke, was like enough to loofe both his eye-fight and his peoples loue: whom his Pather had verie bufily emploied in excessive labour about it.

of Bystris the first oppressor of the stractices; and of this successor Queene Thermore Myris that tookerp Moses out of the water.

Nd heerein (if I may prefume to coniceture) Busiris, who was afterwards king, is like to have dealt with him, as Ieroboam did with the fonne of Salomon. For that Busiris himselfe was much addicted to magnificent workes, it well appeared, by the drudgerie wherewith he wearied the children of Ifrael in his buildings: If therfore he were emploied by the great Sefostris, as Ieroboam was by Salomon, in the overlight of those businesses, he had good opportunitie to worke his greatnesse with the king by induftrie: and afterward with the people by incenting them againft their new king: as Ierobosm did. For what the multitude will endure at one Princes hands, they will not at an others: vnleffe he haue either an equall spirit, or a surer foundation. If moreouer he fought to derine all the paine and labour of publique workes from the Acyptians. Exad.1.

Egyptians, to the Ifraelites: he furely did that which to his owne people was verie plautible: who (as appeares in Exodus) were nothing flack in fulfilling the kings crueltie, Now that Orus the 2.or Busiris was the king that first oppressed Israel, and made the Edict of drowning the Hebrew children, which (faith Cedrenus) lasted tenne moneths:it is a common opinion of many great & most learned writers; who also think that hereupon grew the fable of Businis facrificing strangers. It is also a common interpretation of that place, Ex. 1. that the King, who knew not lofeph, was a king of a new family. That Bufiris was of a new familie, Reineccius doth shew: who also thinks him Author of the bloudy edict. Neuertheleffe, true it is, that Bufir is according to all mens computation, began his reigne 5. yeares after the birth of Moses; before whose 10 birth it is most manifest, that the Law was made, and much more that the perfecution began: which Bunting thinks to have lasted 87. yeares, ere the departure out of Ægypt. Let vs therfore confider, besides the blindnesse of Sesastris the second, how great the power of the Regents or Viceroyes in Egypt was : and how great confidence the kings did put in them: feeing Iofeph ruled with fuch full power, that he bought al Ægypt,& all the Ægyptians for bread; giving at the same time the best of the land to his owne father & brethren, for nothing: feeing allo that when the Azyptians cried out vpo Phwaoh, for bread: Phwaoh faid to all the Azyptians, Go to 10 feeh what he faith to you, do ye. If to a stranger borne, lately setcht out of prison, a king well able to have gouerned himself, would give such trust, and sourraigne authoritie: it is not vnlikely 20 that a blind Prince should do it to a man of especial reputation. For God often profpers, not only the good (fuch as to feph was) but wicked men also, as his instruments against the day of wrath. Therfore perhaps the king did (as many haue done) resigne his kingdom to him, though his reign was not accounted to haue begun, til the death of Selollris. But whether Businis did vsurpe the kingdom, or protection of the land by violence: or whether the blind king religned it, keeping the title: or whether Bufiris were only Regent, whilft the king liued, and afterwards (as is acknowledged by all) king himselfe: it might well be said that Pharaohs daughter tooke vp Moses, and that Pharaoh vexed Ifrael: feeing he both at that time was king in effect, and shortly after king in deed and title both. It were not abfurd for vs to fay that the blind king Se- 30 fostris the second oppressed Israel: but forasmuch as it may seeme that the wicked Trant shewed his cuill nature euen when he first arose: I thinke it more likely, that Business did it, vsing at first the power of a king, and shortly after the stile. Thus of the 122. yeares which passed betweene the beginning of Selostris his reigne, and the departure of Israel out of Egypt, 47. being spent: the 75. which remaine are to bee accounted to Businis or Orus the second, and his children Businis himselfe reigned 30. yeares, according to Eufebius: whom verie many judicious authors herein approue. After him his daughter, who tooke Moses out of the water, is said by all that I haue read, to haue reigned 12. yeares : Her name was Thermutis Phareis, or Muthis according to Cedrents: Eufeb. cals her Aceneris: and out of Artabanus his Historie Me- 40 ris: 10 sephus cals her both Acenchere, & Thermutis. Epiphanius in Panario saith that she was honoured afterward of the Azyptians, by the name of Thermatis the daughter of Amenoph, the fon of Pharaoh. Of this last title question might be made & much spoken: for the Scriptures call her not Pharaohs fonnes daughter, but Pharohs daughter. Amenophis indeed is placed next before Busiris or Orus the second by Eusebius and others: but whether he were a king or onely a Regent I cannot coniecture. For Herodotus, Diodorus, and the ancient Historians name the sonne of Sesostris, Pheron. Perhaps his name was Pharaoh Amenophis: and his daughter by the Egyptians called rather the neece or grandchilde, then the daughter of Pharado, because of the gloric of sefoffris, and the differentiation of his sonne. If so, and if that Bush is or Orns the second marrying her, pretended any title by her, then is our coniccture strengthened, and then was she both daughter, grandchild, and wife vnto Pharaoh: and furnining him, Queene of the land, 12. yeares. But if the were the daughter of Orus the 2. & lifter of Athoris, or Rashoris, as many thinke, to whose conicedure I will not oppose mine, then may it feeme, that either her brethren were degenerate, or too yong to rule when her Farher died.

λ. V I I I.

Of the two brethren of Queene THERMYTIS and what king it was, under whom Moses was borne: and who it was that perished in the red Sea.

So Hee had two brethren the onewas Ratheris of Atheris who fuccees [6] DA ded her; the other Telegonus, who is only named by Eufebius; but his lineage and offpring described by Reineccius. Rathoris after his litters death reigned o. yeares:after whom Chenchres, thought to behis fon, reigned 10 and then perilhed in the red Sea: During the reign of Chen-eres, Eufebuss faith, that Telegonus begat Epaphus vpon to: of which Hiltorie elfwhere he reporteth otherwise. After the death of Cheneres (whom some call Aegacheres: but all or most do stile 3, 6 max a fighter against God) Acherres reigned 8 weares; and but all or motion one superse an injured against God) Accepted regime objecters and then Cherrie 15. This defeatt feemes from Father to fonne. In the 11 years of Cherries it is faid by Eufels that Epaphus reigning in the lower part of Ægype built 10 Memphis. This is an argument of that which otherwise was not valikely viz. That £gypt was greatly brought out of order by the plagues which God had laid vpon it, and the destruction of her king and armie in the red Sea: else could it not have had two reigning in it at once; the later of whom, or his posteritie seemes to have raken all from Cherres the grand-child of Cheneres. For whereas Armais is faid to have reigned 4 vegres after Cherres: and Armelis one after Armais: these two kines are by Eulebius and others accounted as one; and his reigne faid to have beene 5. yeares. His name is called Armeus, otherwise Danaus: and his pedigree thus described by Reineccius in Historia Iulia,

Telegonus : Epaphus : Lybia, who had

Agenor, Belus, and Busiris.

Ægyptus or Ramesses who gaue name to the Countrie, hauing expelled his brother Danaus, reigned, and begat Lyncens, maried to Hypermneslra.

Danaus or Armeus expelled by his brother ofgyptus, after hee had reigned fine yeares, became king of Arges in Greece: was Father to Hypermnellra.

How it might come to paffe that the Nephews fons of Epaphus shoul have occupied the kingdome after Cherres, it is hard to fay : confidering that Epaphus himfelf is reported by Enfebrus to have been borne in the time of Cheneres. But for a finuch as the Historie of Epuphus his birth, is diversly related by Eufebius, it may suffice, that Belis the Father of Danaus & Ægyptus, otherwise called Armeus and Ramesses, was c-50 qually distant from Businis or Orus the second, with Cherres the grandchild of Cheneres. And that the posteritie of Telegonus did marrie very yong, it appeares by the historie of these two brethren, Danaus & Egyptus: of whom the former had 50 daughters, the later 50. sons: perhaps, or rather questionlesse, by divers women: yet surely they began to beget children in their first youth: How societ were, the generall conwho reigned 68. vares. This Ramesses or Egyptus is that Armesesmamum or Arme-Comismus, under whom, in the opinion of Mercator, and of Bunting that followes Mergator, Moses was born: and the cruell Edict made of drowning the Hebrew children. The length of his reigne feemes to me the chiefe, if not the only ground of Mercators opinion. For whereas the Lord faid to Mofes, Go returne to Layot, for they are all dead which went about to kill thee, Mercator hecreupon conceives, that it was one and the fame king vnder whom Moses was borne, and vnder whom he slew the Levoti-

an at the 40. yeare of his age: and fled into the wilderneffe, and there abode for feare: 10 all which Circumstances could agree with none, but this Ramesses, who reigned so long: wherefore defirous rather to hold a true Paradox, then a common errour, hee placeth one Aliffragmuthofis (whose name is found in the lift of Agyptian kings, but the time vncertaine wherein he reigned) in an age 112. or 112, yeares more ancient than others left him in : and fo continuing the Catalogue of his fucceffors from by these reasons. First, I see all other writers agree, that Chencres was the king who was drowned in the red Sea : Secondly, the place Exod. 4. all are dead &c. may bet-

by Mercator, and peremptorily by Bunting pronounced, to be the king that perished in the red Sea: of which our opinion beeing alreadie laied open, I thinke it most expedient to referre the kings ensuing to their owne times (which a Chronolo-

Of the deliverie of Ifrael out of Ægypt.

Of the time of Moses birth, and how long the Ifraelites were oppref-

Rue it is that the Historie it selfe is generally and well knowne: yet concerning the time of Moles his birth, who was the excellent and famous instrument of this, and other great workes of the Highelt, the different opinions are verie neere as manic, as the men that haue written of that Argument.

I. Viues in his annotations vpon St. Augustine citeth manie of their conicctures : as that of Porphyrie out of Sanchoniato, that Mofes lived in the time of Semiramis: but if he meant the first Semiramis, it was but a fond conceit: for besides that the same is contrarie to al stories Divine and humane; while that Semiramis lived face commanded Syria, and all the parts thereof absolutely : neither were the Ammonites or Moabites or Edomites while the ruled, in rerum natura.

A second opinion he remembreth of Appion, taken from Ptolomiea Preist of Mendes, who faith that Mofes was borne while Inachus ruled the Argines, and Amesis in *Egypt.

The third opinion is taken out of Polemon, in his Greeke Historie the first booke: that Moles was borne while Apis the third king ruled Argos.

A fourth is borrowed from Tatianus Asyrius, who though hee cite some authorities, that Moles lived after the Troian warre, is himselfe of opinion, that Moles was farre more ancient, prouing it by manie arguments.

Fiftly, he fetteth downe the testimonic of Numenius the Philosopher, who tooke Muleus and Moles to be one: confirming the same out of Artapanus, who confesfeth that Moles was called Muleus, by the Grecians : and who farther delivereth that he was adopted by Chenephis, or Thermutis, the daughter of Agypt: the same which Eupolemus calleth Meris; others (as Rabanus Maurus) Thermothes. Eufebius also affir-40 meth that by Eupolemus in his first booke de bono, Moses vir Deo coniunctissimus is cal- Ented deprepar.

led Museus Iudeorum. Eusebius in his Chronologie, findes that Moses was born while Euses, 1,3,6,3. Amenophis ruled Egypt. The ancient Manethon cals that Pharao, which lived at Mofesbirth, Thumosis or Thmosis: the same perchance which Appion the Grammarian will have to be Amosis, and elsewhere Amenophis the Father of Sethosis : to whom Lysimachus and Cornelius Tacitus give the name of Bocchoris. To me it seemeth most probable, that while Saphrus, called also Spherus or Iphereus, gouerned Assyria; Orthopolis Sieyonia; and Criafus the Argines; that then (Sefostris the second ruling in Agypt) Moses was borne. For if we beleiue St. Augustine, it was about the end of Cerropstime, that Mofesled Ifraelout of Agypt. Eduxit Moses ex Agypto popu- Aug. 182.11. 50 lum Deinouissmo tempore CECROFIS Atheniensum regis: Moses (faith he) led the decounted people of God out of Agypt, about the end of CECROPS time king of the Athenians. 2514.

In this fort therefore is the time of Mofes birth, and of his departure out of Agypt best proued. St. August. affirmes (as before remembred) that Moses was borne: Saphrus gouetning Affyria; and that he left Agypt about the end of Cecrops time.

CHAP. III.

Now Saphrus ruled 20. yeares; his fucceffor Mamelus 20. yeares; Sparetus after him 40. veares : in whose fourth yeare Cecrops began to gouerne in Attica : Ascatades followed Spareius, and held the Empire 41: So as Atofes beeing borne while Saphrus ruled Affyria, Orthopolis Sicyonia; and Criafus Argos (for these three kings lived at once at his birth, faith S. Augustine, as Cecrops did when he departed Agypt) it will follow that the birth of Moles was in the nineteenth yeare of the Affyrian Saphrus: for take one yeare remaining of 20. (for so long Saphrus reigned) to which adde the thirtie yeares of Mamelus, and the 40. yeares of Sparetus, these make 71. with which there were wasted three yeares of Cecrops his 50. yeares: then take nine yeares out of the reigne of Afratades, who was Sparetus fucceffour, those nine yeares added to 71. make 10 80 at which age Moles left Agypt: and adde these nine yeares to the three yeares of Cecrops formerly spent, there will temaine but foure yeares of Cecrops his 50: and fo ic fallethright with S. Augustines words, affirming that towards the end of Cecrops his time, Mofes led the people of Ifrael out of Egypt.

Now the time in which the Hebrewes were opprest in Agypt, seemeth to have had beginning some eight or nine yeare before the birth of Moses, and 54. yeare, or rather more, after Ioseph: betweene whose death and the birth of Moses, there were confirmed 64. yeares : some of which time, and 80. yeares after, they liued in great feruitude and miserie. For as it is written in Exodus: They fet taske-maflors over them, to keepe them under with burdens : and they built the Cities Pithom and 20 Ramafes &c. And by crueltic they caused the children of Israel to serue; and made them wearie of their lines, by fore labour in claie and brick, and in all worke of the field, with all manner of bondage. All which laid vpon them by a masteting power and strong hand, they endured to the time by the wisedome of God appointed: euen from 54. yeares, or not much more after the death of Iofeph, who left the World, when it had lafted 2370. yeares, to the eightieth yeare of Moses, and untill he wrought his miracles in the field of Zoan, which he perfourmed in the Worlds age 2514, towards the end thereof, according to Codoman, or after our account, 2513. And because those things which we deliner of Agypt, may the better be understood, I thinke it necesfarie to speake a few wordes of the principall places therein named, in this dif- 30

His Cittie which the Hebrewes call Zoan, was built feuen yeares after Hebron. Ezechiel calleth it Taphnes; and fo doth Hieremie; the Septusgint, Tanis ; lofephus Protaidis, after the name of an Egyptian Queenc; 40 Antonius giues it the name of Thanis ; Hegelippus Thanna ; and William Tyrius, Tapius. It adioineth to the land of Gofen, and is the same, wherein Hieremie the Prophet was stoned to death, for preaching against the Agyptian and Iewill idolatrie.

Zoan or Taplmes was in Mofestime the Metropolis of the lower Agypt, in which their Pharaohs then commonly refided; and not vnlikely to be the same Citie, where Abrahamin his time found him. But Eufebius out of Artapanus affirmeth, that Abraham read Astronomie in Heliopolis or On, to Pharetates King of Agypt, Alex. Polyhiftor out of Eupolemus hath it otherwise : faying, that Abraham instructed the A-Euclide prep. gyptian Priests, and not the king; both which authorities Euclebius citeth. The Sep- 50 tungint, and the Vulgar edition, for Zoan write Heliopolis. Pagnin, Vatablus, Innius, and our English call it on; and Ptolomie Onium. There are two Cities of that name; the one on the frontier of the lower Agypt, towards the South; the other somewhat lower on the Easter-most branch of Nilus falling into the Sea at Pelusium. And it it may be that Heliopolis to the South of the river Train, was the fame which Vatablus, and our English call Auen. Of the latter it is, that the Scriptures take certaine Exchange knowledge : the fame which Pomp. Mela, and Plinie call Solis oppidum : Tyrius in the Holie warre, Malbee; the Arabians Bahalbeth; and Simeon Sethi, fons Solis. Of this Helievelis or On, was Putiphar Prieft, or Prince, whose daughter to feph married. In the territorie adioining lacob inhabited, while he lived in Egypt. In the confines of this Joseph. L. bell. Citic, Onias the high Priest of the Iewes built a Temple, dedicated to the eternal Induition. God : not much inferiour to that of Hiernfalem (Ptolomic Philopater then gouerning in Agret) which flood to the time of Velpalian, 333. yeares after the foundation by onias, whom Iofephus falfely reporteth, heerein to have fulfilled a prophecie of Efai. 6.10. In die illa erit altare Domini in medio terra Egypti. In that day shall the altar of the Lord bein the middest of the land of Agypt. Antiochus Epiphanes at that time of the building tyrannifing ouer the Iewes, gaue the occasion for the creeting of this Temple in Legyt. Lastly, there it was, that our Sauiour Christ Iesus remained, while Io-

Teph and the Virgin Marie feared the violence of Herod : neare which (faith Brochard) Broch attr. (Antithe fountaine is still found, called Iefus Well, whose streames doe afterward water the gardens of Ballamum, no where else found in Egypt. And heercof see more in

Brochard in his description of Agypt. There is also the Citie of Noph, remembred by Esai and Ezechiel; the same which 20 Hofen the prophet calleth Moph: which latter name it tooke from a mountaine ad- Exception ioining, fo called, which mountaine Herodotus remembreth. And this is that great Hofal 9.6. Citie, which was called Memphis; and fo the Septuagint write it. It is knowne to the Arabians by the name of Mazar. The Chaldeans name it Alchabyr; and Tudalen-

Pelusium, which Vatablus, Pagnin, Iunius, and our English write Sin; the Septuagint call Sais; and Montanus Lebna; is not the fame with Damiata, as Gul. Tyrius witnef- G.Tyr 1. 20.6.17 feth. In the time of Baldwin the third, Pelufium was called Belbeis. Belbeis (faith Tyri- lib.z.c.s. us) qua olim dicta est Pelusium, Belbeis, that in times past was called Pelusium.

The Citie of No, the Septuagint call Diospolis. Of which name there are two or Exchanges 30 three in Agypt. Hierome converts it Alexandria, by anticipation, because it was so called in the future.

Bubastus, for fo Hierome and Ziegler write it, is the same which the Hebrews call Exchange. Pibefeth.

To make the storic the more perceivable, I have added a description of the land of Gosen, in which the Ifraelites inhabited; with those Cities and places so often remembred in the Scripture: as of Taphnes or Zoan, Heliopolis or Bethfemes, Balfephon, Succeth, aud the rest; together with Moses passage through the Desertes of Arabia the Stonie. For all storie without the knowledge of the places, wherein the actions were perfourmed, as it wanteth a great part of the pleasure; so it no way enricheth the knowledge and vnderstanding of the Reader, neither doth any thing serue to retaine, what we read, in our memories, so well as these pictures and descriptions do. In which respect I am driven to digresse in manie places, and to interpose some such discourse, otherwise seeming impertinent : taking for my authoritie, after many others more ancient, that great learned man Arias Montanus; who in his Preface to the Storie of the Holie land, hath these words. Si enim abs fg. locorum observatione res gesta narrentur, aut sine Topographia cognitione historia legantur, adeò consusa atý, perturbata erunt omnia, vt ex ijs nihil non obscurum, nihil non difficile elici possit. If narration (faith he) bemade of those things which are perfourmed, without the observation of the places, wherein they were done: or if Histories be read without Topographicallknowledge; all 53 things will appeare fo intricate and confused, as we shall thereby understand nothing but obscurely, nor draw thence any knowledge, but with the greatest difficultie.

Of the crueltie against the Ifraelites yong children in Agypt : and of Moses historefernation, and education.

Vt to returne to the storie it selfe. It appeareth that not with standing the labour and flauerie, which the Ifraelites endured, yet they decreafed not in numbers: infomuch as Pharaoh confidering the danger of discontented pouerty, and the able bodies of an oppressed multitude, how perilous they might be to his effate, by fuggeftion of the Deuill refolued to flaughter all the male children of the Hebrews, as fooneas they should be born. To which end he fent for Sephora & Thua, women the most famous and expert amongst them, quapraerant (faith Commessor) multitudini obstetricum, who had commaund ginen them ouer all midwines; by whom (as it seemeth) he gaue order to all the rest for the execution of his Edict. For to have called all the midwines of Agypt together, had beene a ftrange Parliament. Now whether these two, before named, were of the Hebrens, or of the Agyptians, it is diverfly disputed. St. Augustine calls them Hebrewes, because it is written Exodus the first, The King of Agypt commanded the midwines of the Hebrew women &c. But tofephus, Abulenfis, and Pererius beleine Abul & Farer, them to be Agyptians. Who socuer they were, when it pleased God to frustrate the 20 execution of that fecret murder, to the end the world might witnesse both the wickednesse of the Ægyptians, and the just cause, thereby made manifest, of his future

> feare of God, commanded others of his people to execute his former intent; and publikely, or howfocuer, to destroic all the male Hebrew children borne within his dominions.

Now besides the doubts, which Pharash had of the multitudes of the Hebrewes, the greatest part of whom he might have assured, by assording them the justice, which cuerie king oweth to his vassals, and the rest he might have emploied or sent 10(ep.am.l. 12.0.5 awaicat his pleasure; 10/ephns giueth an other cause of his rage against them, name-indignation and reuenge: Pharaoh finding those women filled with pietie, and the

ly, T hat it was prophetically deliuered him by an Agyptian Preift, that among the Hebrewes there should bee borne a childe; who growing to mansestate should become a plague and terrour to his whole Nation. To preuent which, (and prefuming that he could relift the ordinance of God, by a mean, contrarie to the lawes of Heauen and of nature) he stretched out his bloudie and mercilesse hand to the execution of his former intent. The same preuention Herodlong after practifed, when fearing the spirituall kingdome of Chrift, as if it should have beene temporall, he caufed all the male children at that time borne to be flaughtered. And that Pharaoh had some kinde of foreknowledge of the future successe; it may be gathered by these his owne words, in the tenth verse of the fift of Exodus. Come,let vs workenifely with 40 them, least they multiplie; and it come to passe, that if there bee warre, they ioine themselves alfounto our enemies, and fight against us, and get them out of the Land. But wee see, and time bath told it vs from the beginning, how God derideth the wisedome of the worldly men, when forgetting the Lord of all power, they relie on the inuentions of their owne most feeble; and altogether darkened understanding. For even by the hands of the dearely beloued daughter of this tyrant, was that great Prophet and minister of Gods meruailous workes taken out of Nilus, being thereinto turned off, in an Arke of reedes, a fucking and powerleffe infant. And this Princeffe hauing beheld the child his forme and beautie, though but yet in the blouth, so peirced her compassion, as she did not only preserue it, and cause it to be softered; but 50 commanded that it should be esteemed as her owne, and with equall care to the fonne of a King nourished. And for memorie that it was her deede, shee called the childe Moses, as it were, extractus, or ereptus, taken out, to wit, out of the water : or, after to fephus and Glycas, Nioy, a voice expressing water, and hifes, as much to say, as that which is drawne out of water, or thence taken. Clemens Alexandrinus was of strom. Li. opinion, that Mofes was circumcifed, before he was put into the Arke of Reedes. and that Amram, his father, had named him Toachim. In his youth he was carefully bred, by the care and at the charge of Pharaohs daughter, and by men of the most vnderstanding taught and instructed : quem regio more educauit, prafect is ei sapientibus Phil. devita Agyptiorum Magistris, à quibus erudiretur, faith BASIL; Vnto whom shee gaue Prince- Moys. lie education, appointing ouer him wife Masters of the Agyptians for his instructers. Thereby (fay Iofephus and Philo) he became excellently learned in all the doctrine of the Leyptians; which also the Martyr Stephen in the leuenth of the Acts confir-10 meth. And Moses was learned in all the wifedome of the Leyptians. Which wife-dome or fapience, fuch as it was, or at left fo much thereof as Six. Senensis hath gathered, we have added, betweene the death of Moles, and the raigne of Iolus.

Hen Moles was growne to mans effate, Tolephus and Eulebius, out of Artapanus, tell vs of ten yeares warre that he made against the Athiopians; of the belieging of Saba, afterward by Camby (es called Meroe: and how he recoursed that Citie by the fauour of Tharbis, a Daughter of Ethiopia, whom he tooke to wife. So hath Commestor a pretie tale of Mofes, Howafter the end of that warre, Tharbis refulling his returne into * Egypt, Moles, most skilfull in Astronomie, caused two Images to be ingrauen in two pretious stones : whereof the one encreased memorie; the other caused forgetfulneffe. These he set in two rings; whereof he gaue the one, to wit, that of oblinion,

That Moles, in this time of his abode at Madian, wrote the Booke of Job, as Pererius Supposeth, I cannot judge of it, because it is thought; that lob was at that time liuing. Neither dare I subscribe to Pererius opinion, That Moses, while he liued in that part of Arabia, wrote the bookes of Genelis; although I cannot denie the reason of Pererius coniecture, That by the example of Jobs patience hee might strengthen the oppressed Hebrewes: and by the promises of God to Abraham, Ifaac, and Iacob, put them in affurance of their deliuerie from the Egyptian flaueric, and of the Land of rest, and plentic promised.

But for the first, it is to be noted, that when Moses defired to be taught by God, by what name he should make him knowne, and by whom he was fent; he received from God fo much, as man could comprehend of his infinite and everbeing nature. Out of which he deliucred him in the first part of his answere, a name to be considered of by the wifest; and in his second, to bee understood by all. For there is nothing that is, or hath being of it selfe, but the eternall: which truly is; which is about all; which is immutable. The bodies of men are changed every moment: their substance wasteth, and is repaired by nutriment; neuer continuing 49 at one flay, nor being the fame follong, as while one may fay Now. Other things that are created, although they seeme to be, yet they are not; for sometimes they were not: and that which hath not beene, may againe want being. And with this, in respect of the divine nature, the faying of Zeno Eleates excellently agreeth: Tota rerum natura vmbra eft, aut inanis, 50 aut fallax; The whole nature of things is but a shadow, either emptie or deceiptfull: in comparison of whom (faith Esay) all Nations are as nothing, leffe then nothing, and

The reft of the plagues by Frogges, Lice, Flies, or flinging Waspes; by the death of their Cattaile; by leaprous scabbes; by haile and fire; by Gralhoppers; by darkneffe; after which Pharach forbad Mofes his presence: moved the hardned 19 heart of the vibelecuing King no longer, then the paine and perill lasted, till such time as his owne first-borne, and the first-borne of all his Nation perished. He then; while he feared his owne life, (a time wherein we remember God perforce ) stood you no condition: whereas before, hee first yeelded but to the departure of the men; then of the men, women, and children, referuing their bestiall; but hee was now content for the prefent, that the Israelites should not only depart with all their owne, but with a part of the filuer, gold, and jewels of his owne people : of which (the feare being past) he suddainly repented him, as his pursuit after them proued. For when every one of the Hebrewes had (according to direction from Moles receiued) flaine a Lambe, without spot or blemish, for the Passeouer, (a Sacrament of the 20 most cleane and unspotted Saujour) and with the bloud thereof coloured the poste and linterne of the dores; the Angell of God in the dead of the night smote every first-borne of Egypt, from the sonne of the King, to that of the begger and slaue: the children of the Israelites excepted. At which terrible judgement of God, Pharach being more then euer amazed, yeelded, as before is faid, to their departure. The Agyptians (faith Epiphanius) did in after times imitate this colouring with Epiphan, lib. 16 bloud, which the Ifraelites vied after the Paffeoner; afcribing an exceeding vertue cont. Heref. to the red colour: and therefore they did not only marke their sheepe and cattell, but their trees bearing fruit, to preserue them from lightning and other harmes.

Ow, when the people were remoued, and on their way, (his heart being hardened by God ) hee bethought him aswell of the honour loft, as of the thame remaining after to many calamities and plagues, in fuffering them to depart with the spoiles of his pleople, and in despight of himselfe. And having before this time great companies of 40 Souldiers in readinesse, hee consulted with himselfe, what way the Ifraelites were like to take. He knew that the shortest and fairest passage was through the Countrie of the Philistims. But because these people were very strong, and awarlike Nation, and in all probabilitie of his Allies, hee suspected that Moses meant to finde fome other outlet, to wit, through the Defert of Etham; and there, because the Countrie was exceeding mountainous, and of hard accesse, and that Moses was peftered with multitudes of women, children, and cattaile, he thought it impossible for the Hraelites to cleape him that way. In the meane while having gathered together all the Chariots of Agypt, and 600. of his owne, and Captaines ouer them; he de- exed. 14.07 termined to fet vpon them in the plaines of Gofen, which way foeuer they turned themselues. For it was the ancient manner to fight in those Chariots, armed with brode and tharpe hookes on both fides; in fathion like the Mowers Sythe. Which kinde of fight in Chariots, but not hooked, the Brittaines vsed against the Romanes, while they made the Warre for the Conquest of this Land. Of this Armie of Pharaoh, Insephus affirmeth, that it consisted of 50000. 10, am. 1, i.e.s. horse, horse, and 20000. foot; which, were it true, then it cannot be doubted, but that to fet on them. For, as it is written in the first of Exedus, hee doubted two things.

cither that the Hebrewes might joyne themselves to his enemies within the Land or being so multiplied, as they were, might leave his service, and get themselves thence at their pleasure. But the plagues which God grieued him withall, enforst him at this time to give an affent to their departure; perchance fore-running his intent. But were it otherwise, and Infephus partiall in this affaire, yet by the wordes of the Text it appeareth, that he gathered all the Chariots of Agypt: which could not be done in hast. For Moses made but three daies march, ere Pharaoh was at his heeles; and yet the last day he went on sixteene miles: which, in so hot a Countrie, and to drive their cattell and sheepe with them, pestered with a world of women and children. was a march witneshing the dread of a powerfull enemie at hand. Now, as Moles well knew, that he went out with a mightie hand, and that God guided his vnderstanding in all his enterprises: so he lay not still in the ditch crying for helpe, but v-fing the vnderstanding which God had given him, he left nothing vnperformed, becomming a naturall wife man, a valiant and a skilfull conductor; as by all his actions

E Adar was an intercalarie Moneth, added, fome yeares, vnto the other twelue, to make the Solarie and Lunarie yeare agree; which (befides the generall inconvenience that would otherwise have risen, by casting the Moneths of Sommer into the Winter season, to the by calting the Monetus of Journal was more necessarily to bee regarded great confusion of all accounty was more necessarily to bee regarded of the Hebrewes, because of the dinine precept. For God appointed especiall Feasts Dout.ie, to be celebrated precisely in such a Moneth of the yeare, and withall on a set day, both of the Moone and of the Moneth; as the Feast of the first fruits; the new Moones, and the like: which could not have so beene kept, if either the day of the 30 Moone had fallen in some other part of the Moneth, or the Moneth it selfe beene found farre diffant from his place in the feafon of the yeare.

Other Nations, the better to observe their solemnities in the due time, and to afcertaineall reckonings and remembrances, (which is the principall commoditie of time, that is the measure of endurance) were driven in like manner to make their yeares vnequall, by adding fometimes, and fometimes abating one or more dates, as the errour committed in foregoing yeares required. The errour grew at first, by not knowing what number of daies made vp a compleat yeare. For though by the continuall course of the Sunne, causing Sommer and Winter duly to succeede each other, it is plaine enough euen to the most sauage of all people, when a yeare hath 40 paffed ouer them; yet the necessitie of ordinarie occurrences, that are to bee numbred by a shorter talie, makes this long measure of whole yeares insufficient for the fmaller fort of more daily affaires. Therefore men observed the monethly conspicuous reuolution of the Moone, by which they divided the yeare into twelve parts, fubdiniding the Moneth into 20. daies and nights, and those againe into their quar- 10. 0 29. ters and houres. But as the markes of time are fensible and easily discerned : so the exact calculation of it is very intricate, and worketh much perplexitie in the vnderstanding. Twelve revolutions of the Moone, containing leffe time by eleven daies orthereabout, than the yearelie course of the Sunne, through the Zodiack, in the space of fixteene yeares, every Moneth was found in the quite contrarie part of the 50 yeare, to that wherein it was placed at the first. This caused them to adde some daies to the yeare, making it to confift of twelue Moneths, and as many daies more, as they thought would make the courses of the Sunne and Moone to agree. But herein were committed many new errours. For neither did the Sunne determine his yearelie renolution by any fet number of whole daies; neither did the Moone Z 2 and counfailes from this day to his death well appeared. When Moses perceived that Pharaoh was enraged against him, and commanded 20 him not to dare to come thenceforth into his presence: after hee had warned Israel of the Paffeouer, he appointed a generall Affemblie or Rende-vous of all the Hebrewes The territorie at Ramales, in the Territorie of Golen; a Citie standing indifferent to receive from of Goles was af- all others parts of the Countrie the difperfed Hebrewes: and gaue commandement. terward called that euery familie should bring with them such store as they had, of Dow and Paste, the name of no staying to make it into bread; knowing then that Pharaoh was on foot, and on this Citie, as his way towards them. Which done, and hauing confidered the great strength of appeareth in Pharaohs Horse-men and Chariots, of which kinde of defence Moles was ytterly ynprovided (though as it is written, the Ifraelites went vp armed) hee marched from Ramales Eastward, towards the Deserts of Etham, and incamped at Succoth; which 20 he performed on the fifteenth day of the Moneth Abib. Which Moneth from that time forward they were commanded to account, as the first Moneth of the yeare. Whether in former times they had been accustomed to beginne their yeare exod.23.0.16. in some other Moneth, following the manner of the Agyptians, and were now re-6.34.0.22. called by Moles to the rule of their forefathers, it is vncertaine. Certaine it is, that they had, and retained, another beginning of their politike yeare, which was not now abrogated, but rather by some solemnities thereunto annexed, was confirmed, and still continued in vse. Wherefore in referring things done, or happening among them, vnto the beginning, middeft, or ending of the yeare; that diffinction of the daies in euery Moneth, and the whole forme of their yeare, like enough it is that

Moles himselfe in fourtie yeares space, did sufficiently instruct the Priests, to whose care the ordering thereof (as common opinion holds) was given in trust: but that any rule of framing their Kalendar, was made publike, before the captiuitie of Babrlon, I doe not finde. Now because time and motion beginne together, it will not,

I thinke, be any great breach of order, to shew here at their first setting forth, what was the forme of the Hebrew yeare: with the difference betweene them and other

change alwaies at one houre; but the very minutes and leffer fractions were to bee observed by him; that would seeke to reduce their motions (which motions also were not full alike) into any certaine rule. Here lay much wisedome and deepe art. which could not foone be brought to perfection. Yet as making an estimate at randome, the Athenians held the yeare to containe 260, daies, wherein most of the Greekes concurred with them. That 260, daies filled up the Greeian yeare (befides many collaterall proofes) it is manifelt by that which Plinie directly affirmeth, telling of the Statues, erected in honour of Demetrius Phalereus, which were (faith he) 260, whileft as yet the yeare exceeded not that number of daies. By this account neither did any certain eage of the Moone beginne or end their Moneths, neither 10 could their Moneths continue many yeares, in their owne places; but must needes be shifted by little and little, from Winter to Sommer, and from Sommer to Winter, as the daies forgotten, to be inferted into the Almanacke by men, but not forgotten by the superiour bodies in their courses, should occupie their owne roomes in their due turnes. Now, because the solemnitie of the Olympian games was to be held at the full Moone, and withall on the 15. day of the Moneth Hecatombeon (which answereth in a manner to our ium) they were carefull to take order, that this moneth might cuer beginne with the new Moone; which they effected by adding some two daies to the last moneth of every yeare; those games being held once infoure yeares. This intercalation sufficed not to make the matter eyen; which 20 caused them sometimes to omit one day in the fourth yeare, which was the second of the moneth Badromian; (agreeing nearely with our August) fometimes not to omit it, or (which is all one) to infert another for it into the fourth Lunarie years. accounting by the Moone, after a manner that was not vulgar. All this not withflanding, their moneth of tune would every years have growne colder and colder, had they not fought to keepe all vpright, by intercalating in each other Olympiad, that is, each eighth yeare one whole moneth, which they called the fecond Polideon, or December; which was the deuice of Harpalus, who also taught them to make one moneth of 20 daies, another of 30, and fo fucceffinely through the whole yeare. Thus with much labour they kept their yeare as neare as they could, vnto the high 30 way of the Planets; but these markes which they observed, were found at length to be deceiptfull guides. For it was not possible so to fashion this eighth yeares intercalation, that it should not deceive them in 11. houres and 18. minutes at the least, or some waies in 24. houres and 10. minutes, or 26. and 41. minutes; which differences would, in few ages, haue bred much confusion. The first that introduced a good methode, likely to continue, was Meton the Athenian, who not regarding the Olympiads, and the eighth yeares intercalation, deuised a Cycle of 10. yeares, wherein the Moone having 235, times runne her circuit, met with the Sunne in the fame place, and on the same day of the yeare, as in the 19. yeare before past shee had done. This invention of Meton was entertained with great applause, and paffing 40 from Greece to Rome, was there inferted into the Kalendar in golden letters, being called the golden number, which name it retaineth vnto this day. Hereby were auoided the great and vncertaine intercalations that formerly had beene yied; for by the intercalation of 7. moneths in the 19. yeares, all was fo euen, that no fenfible difference could be found. Yet that errour which in one yeare could not be perceiued, was very apparent in a few of those Cycles: the new Moones anticipating in one Cycle 7. houres, and some minutes of the precise rule. Therefore Calippus denised a new Cycle containing foure of Metons, that is to fay, 76. yeares; and afterwards Hipparchin, a noble Astrologer, framed another, containing foure of Calippus his Periods, each of them finding some errour in the former observations, which they diligently 50 corrected. The last reformation of the Kalendar was that which Julius Celar made, who by aduise of the best Mathematicians, then to be found, examining the courses of those heavenlie bodies, reduced the years vnto the forms which is now in vse with vs, containing 365, daies and fixe houres, which houres in foure yeares make vp one whole day, that is intercalated energy fourth yeare, the 24. of Februaric. The correction of the Inlian yeare by Pope Gregoriethe 13. Anno Domin. 1582. is not as yet entertained by generall confent; it was indeede, but as a note added vnto the worke of Cafar : yet a note of great importance. For whereas it was observed. that the Sunne, which at the time of the Nicene Councell, Anno Dom. 324 entred the £auinoctiallon the 21.day of March, was in the yeare 1582, ten daies fooner found in that time. Pope Greeorie strooke out of the Kalendar ten daies, following the fourth of October, fo that in steade of the fifth day was written the fifteenth; by which meanes the moueable Feafts depending on the Sunnès entrance into Aries, were a-10 gaine celebrated in fuch time, as at the Nicene Councell they had beene. And the better to preuent the like alterations, it was by the Councell of Trent ordained, that from thence forward in euery hundreth yeare, the leape day should be omitted, excepting still the fourth hundred : because the Sunne doth not in his yearelie course take vp full fixe houres aboue the 365. daies; but faileth fo many minutes, as in 400. yeares make about 2. whole daies.

But the Cycle of 19. yeares, which the Hebrewes vsed, was such as neither did neede any nice curiofitie of houres, minutes, and other leffer fractions to helpe it; neither did in fumming vo the daies of the whole yeare, neglect the daies of the Moone, confounding one Moneth with another. For with them it fellout fo, that 20 alwaies the Kalends or first day of the moneth was at the new Moone, and because that day was festivall, they were very carefull aswell to observe the short years of the Moone, paffing through all the 12. figures in one moneth, as that longer of the Sunne, which is needfully regarded in greater accounts. First, therefore they gaue to Nilan their first moneth, which is about our March or Aprill, 30. daies; to lar their fecond moneth 29. daies; and so successively 30. to one, 29. to another. Hereby it came to passe, that every two moneths of theirs contained somewhat enenly two revolutions of the Moone, allowing 29. daies, 12. hours, and odde minutes, from change to change. The spare minutes were bestowed among the superfluous or Epact daies; which made vp 7. moneths in 19. yeares; to 6. of which 7. 20 were commonly given 30.daies; to one of them 20.daies, or otherwife as was found requilite. Their common yeare (as appeareth by the seuerall daies of each moneth) contained 354 daies, which faile of the yeare, wherein the Sunne finisheth his course, 11. whole daies, with some fractions of time. But these daies, and other broken peeces, howfocuer they were neglected in one yeare, yet in the Cycle of 19. yeares were fo disposed of by conuenient intercalations, that still at the end of that Crele, both the Sunne and Moone were found on the fame day of the yeare, moneth and weeke, yea commonly on the same houre of the day, where they had beene at the beginning of it 19. yeares before.

Divers have diverfly fet downe the forme of the Hebrew yeare, with the manner of their intercalations. Sigonius tells vs, that every fecond yeare they did adde Sigde res. Hebr. a moneth of 22. daies; euery fourth yeare a moneth of 23. in the regard of 11. 43.61. daies and a halfe wanting in 12. Moones to fulfill a yeare of the Sunne. But herein Sigonius was very much deceiued. For the Moone doth neuer finish her course in 22. or 23. daies: and therefore to have added so many daies to the end of the yeare, had been the way to change the fashion of all the moneths in the yeares following, which could not have begunne as they ought, with the new Moone. Genebrard faith, Geneb. Chronic that every third yeare, or second yeare, as neede required, they did intercalate one 1.2. moneth, adding it at the yeares end vnto the other 12. This I believe to have been true; but in which of the yeares the intercalation was ( if it be worthy of confide-30 ration) me thinks they do not probably deliuer, who keepe all farre from euenneffe untill the very last of the 19. yeares. For (to omit such as erregrosly) some there are who fay, that after three yeares, when befides the daies spent in 36. courses of the Moone, 33. daies are left remaining, that is, 11. daies of each yeare; then did the Hebrewes adde a moneth of 30. daies; keeping three daies, as it were in pluffage vnto the next account. The like, fay they, was done at the end of the fixt yeare; at which time, belides the intercalarie moneth, remained fixe daies, namely three furmounting that moneth, and the Epact of three yeares, befides the three formerly reserved. Thus they goe on to the 18. yeare; at which time they have 18. daies in hand : all which with the Epact of the 19. yeare make vp a moneth of 20. daies, that being intercalated at the end of the Cycle makes all eyen.

Whether this were the practife, I can neither affirme nor denie; yet furely it must needes have bred a great confusion, if in the 18, yeare every moneth were removed from his owne place by the distance of 48. daies, that is, halfe a quarter of the yeare and more; which inconvenience by such a reckoning was vnauoidable. Wherefore, 10 I preferre the common opinion, which preventeth such diflocation of the moneths. by fetting downe a more conuenient way of intercalation in the 8. yeare. For the 6. daies remaining after the 2. former intercalations made in the 3d and 6th yeares. added vnto the 22. daies, arifing out of the Epacts of the 7th and 8th yeares, doe fitly ferue to make vp a moneth, with the borrowing of one day or two from the yeare following; and this borrowing of two daies is fo farre from causing any disorder, that indeede it helps to make the yeares enfuing varie the lesse from the proper seafon of euery moneth. This may fuffice to bee spoken of the Hebrew Moneths and Yeares, by which they guided their accompts.

δ. VII.

Of the passage of Is RAEL from Succoth towards the Red Sea: and of the divers waies leading out of Agypt.

Rom Succeth in the morning following, Mofes led the Ifraelites towards the Defert of Etham, to recouer the mountaine foot, by the edge of that Wildernesse, though he intended nothing lesse then to goe out that way, of all other the nearest. But being affured of the multitude of Horsemen and armed Chariots, that followed him, he kept himselfe 30 from being incompassed, by keeping the rough and mountainous ground on his left hand. At Etham he rested but one night, and then he restected backe from the entrance thereof, and marched away directly towards the South; the distance betweene it and Succeth being about eight mile. That he forbare to enter Arabia being then in light thereof, it seemeth to proceede from three respects; the first two naturall; the third divine. For Pharsoh being then at hand, and having received intelligence of the way which Moles tooke, perswaded himselfe, that the numbers which Moses led, confishing of aboue a Million, if not two millions of soules, (for as It is probable it is written Exod. the 12. Great multitudes of fundrie forts of people went out with them) that all those could not possibly passe ouer those desertand high mountaines with so great multithe prime was could not pointly pair ouer triote actert and inguinountains waith or great indus-cions brought, tudes of Women, Children, and Cattell, but that at the very entrance of that fall-by-therebrews neffe he flouid have ouer-taken them, and defiroied the greatest numbers of them. to the know- For these his owne wordes. They are tangled in the Land, the Wildernesse half but them ledge of the true. God, followed in, doe shew his hopes and intents; which Moses by turning another way did fru-Moses at his de ftrate. Secondly, Moses by offering to enter Arabia that way, drew Pharaoh towards the East lide of the land of Gofen, or Ramefes: from whence (miffing Mofes there) his pursuit after him with his Chariots was more difficult, by reason of the roughnesse of the way; and howsoeuer, yet while the Hebrewes kept the mountaine foot on the left hand, they were better secured from the ouer-bearing violence both of the horse and chariots. Thirdly, Moses confidence in the all-powerfull God was 50 fuch, by whose spirit, only wise, he was directed, as he rather made choice to leave the gloric of his delinerance and victorie to almightie God, than either by an escape the next way, or by the strength of his multitude, consisting of 600000. men, to cast the successe vpon his owne vnderstanding, wife conduction, or valour. The third day he marched with a double pace from Etham towards the Valley of Pilhacheroth, 16. mile distant; and sate downe betweene two ledges of mountaines adjoyning to the Red Sea; to wit, the mountaines of Etham on the North, and Balzephon towards the South : the same which Oforius calleth Climax : on the top whereof there stood a Climax is rather Temple dedicated to Baal. And as Phagius noteth, the word fo compounded, is as fo called in remuch to say, as Dominus specule, sine ensired at Lord of the watch tower. For the £277-sage vp and tians believed, or at least made their slaves believe, that if any of them offered to e-dower, than scape that way into Arabia, this Idoll would both arrest them, and force them to that it is any returne to their Lords and Masters. For the Agyptians had Gods for all turnes. Proper name, 10 Agyptij Dijs facundi; The Agyptians were fruitfull in Gods, faith St. Hierome. But Moles who incamped at the foot of this mountaine with a million of foules, or as other conceine, with two millions, found this Lord of the watch-tower alleepe, or out of countenance.

Now these two passages leading out of Agypt into Arabia vpon the sirme land Moses refused, as well that of Pelusium and Casiotis, the fairest and shortest of all other, in respect of Indea, as the other by Etham; from which he restected, for the Exed, 13, 2,170 reasons before remembred and tooke the way by the valley of Pihacherotis, between the mountaines, which made a straight entrance towards the Sea. After whom Pharaoh made to great speede with his horsemen and chariots, as hee gaue the He-20 brewes no time at all to rest them after so long a march; but gat fight of them, and they of him, even at the very brincke and wash of the Sea: insomuch as the Hebrewes being terrified with Pharaohs fudden approch beganne to despaire, and to mutine, at that time when it behoued them most to have taken courage for their owne defence; laying it to Moles charge, that themselves foresaw those perils in which they were wrapped. And feare, which, faith the booke of Wifedome, is the be- c.17, 112 traying of those succours which reason offereth, made them both despaire in Gods former promifes, and to be forgetfull of their owne ftrength and multitudes.

Of their paffage ouer the Red Sea : and of the Red Sea it felf.

Vt Moles who feared nothing but God himselfe, perswaded them to be confident in his goodness, who hath neuer abandoned those, that affuredly trust in him; vling this comfortable and resoluted speech. Fearenot, &c. for the Agyptians whom yee have feene this day, yee shall Exod. 14. v. 12. neuer see them againe. The Lord shall fight for you. After which Mofes calling on God for fuccour, received encouragement, and commandement to goe on, in these wordes. Wherefore crieft thou unto me : speake unto the children of 16- Exed, 16, 115. 40 rael that they goe forward; and lift thou up thy rod, and firetch out thy hand upon the Sea, and divide it, and let the children of Ifrael goe on drie ground through the middest of the Sea. Moses obeying the voice of God, in the darke of the night finding the sands vncouered, past on towards the other side and coast of Arabia: two parts of the night being spent ere hee entred the Foord, which it pleased God by a forcible

Easterne winde, and by Moses rod to prepare. Pharaoh followed him even at the heeles, finding the fame drie ground which Mafes trod on. Therefore, as It is written, The Angel of God which went before the Holt of Ifrael, removed, and went behinds them : also the piller of the cloud went from before them, and flood behind them; which is, that it pleased God therein either by his im-50 mediate power or by the ministerie of his Angell, to interpose his defence between the Hebrewes and their enemies; to the end that the Agyptians might hereby bee tolar 24. 1.73

blinded, in fuch fort, as they could not purfue Ifrael with any harmefull speede. But in the morning watch Moles feifed the other banke of Arabia fide; and Pharaoh ( as the dawne of day beganne to illighten the obscureaire) finding a beginning of the

Each. 14, 207. Seas returne, hafted himfelfe towards his owne coaft: but Moses firethed forth his hand, and the Searcturned to his force, that is, the Sea moued by the power of God, ranne backe towards the land with unrefitable furie and flwitineffe, and ouer-whelmed the whole Armic of Pharaob, so as not one escaped. For it is written, that God tooke off their Charior wheeler, that is, when the waters began to couer the sinds, the sex graptims being strucken with fear of death, ranne on athwart another, and missing the path by which they had past on after the Hebrewes, their wheeles stucke fast in the mudde and quick-stands, and could not be drawne out: the Sea comming against them with sipernaturally volence.

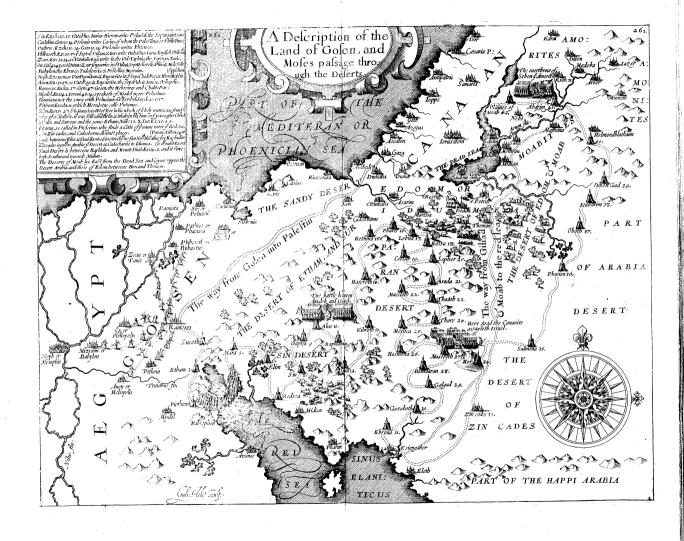

Lymnus upon Evolu 14, and others, following the opinions or old Traditions of 10 the Hebrever, conceiued, that after Hofes had by the power of God divided the Red Sea, and that the children of Ifrad were Fearefull to enter it, Immundab Prince or Leader of the Tribe of Inda first made the adventure, and that therefore was that Tribe ever after honoured about the rest, according to the prophecie of Indab. Gen. 49. 8. The fathers formes splad bow denive wate these. But Hierome upon the 11. of Hofe condemnes this opinion. And though it be true, that Inda had the first place in all their marches in the Defert, and, as we now call it, led the Vanguard; (where upon it may bee inferred, that hee also led the way through the Red Nea) yet that Insafe hindle was the conductor of Ifrae at that time, it signemeally received. For, as it is written in the 77. Pfalme; Thou didst led thy people like fleepe by the hand of 20

The Hebrewe haue also another funcie, that the Red Sea was divided into 12. parts, and that every Tribe path over in a path apart, because it is written in the 132 Pfalms, according to the Vassar, Divisifis macrobrom in divisions. Also that the bottome of the Sea became as a green field or pathere. But Origon, Epiphamia, Abhelasi, and Genebrard, Suvouring this conceit, had forgotten to consider, that there were not 12. pillers, nor 12. armies of the Ægyptims. It is written in the 77-11 falme, v. 16. Thy way is in the Sea 3 not thy water 3 and in the last of the book of Utilesleeme, verif. 7-1 in the Red Seathere was away.

Now this Sea, through which Moses past, and in which Pharaoh, otherwise cal- 30 led Chenchres, perished in the 16. yeare of his raigne, is commonly knowne by the name of the Red Sea; though the same differ nothing at all in naturall colour from other waters. But as Philostratus in his third booke noteth, and our selves know by experience, it is of a blewith colour, as other Seas are. It entreth at a narrow strait betweene Arabia the Happie and Ethiopia, or the land of the Abylins : the mouth of the indraught from the Cape, which Ptolomie calleth Poffodium, to the other land of Athiopia, hath not about fixe leagues in breadth: and the fame also filled energy where with Ilands, but afterwards it extendeth it felfe 58. leagues from coaft to coast: and it runneth up betweene Arabia the Happie, and Arabia Petraa, on one side, and Athiopia and Agrpt on the other, as farre as Sues, the vttermost end and in- 40 draught of that Sea: where the Turke now keepeth his fleete of Gallies. The Cofmographers commonly give it the name of the Arabian Gulfe: but the North part towards Sues, and where Mofes past, is called Heropolites of the Citic Hero, fometime Troy: and of later times Sues. Plinie calls it Cambifu, by which name it was knowne, faith he, before it was called Hero many yeares. The Arabians call this Sea towards the North, Apocopa, Eccant, and Eant. Artemidorus writes it Alemiticum: King Iula Laniticum: others more properly Elaniticum, of the Port and Citic Elana: which the Septuagint call Elath: Ptolomic Elana: Plinie Lana: Iosephus Ilana, and Marius Niger Aila: there is also Ilalah in Affyria, to which Salamanaffer carried the Ifraelites captive Kings 2. c. 8. 11. which Ilalah in Affyria, the Septuagint call Elaa: and in the first of 50 Chron. the 5. Ala. But as for this red Sca or the parts thereof, thus diverly named, the Moores and Arabians (Vaffals to the Turke) know it by no other appellation, then the Gulfe of Meca, after the name of Mahamets Towne Meca. The Greekes swrite it the Sca Erythraum: of a King called Erythrau, or Erythrau ; and because Erythree in the Greeke fignifieth red, hence it is, that, being denominated of this Erg-

threws, the sonne of Perseus and Andromeda, yet it tooke the name of the red Sea, as Quin, Curtius coniectureth: which Arianus and Strabo confirme. But it feemeth to Arian, de cets Minis Commented the Market Sea in the yeare 1544 performed by Steum Alexand, 18, 66. Gama, Viceray of the East India for the King of Portugall, that this Sea was focalled Strabel. 6. from a reflection of rednesse, both from the bancks, clifts, and fands of many Ilands. and part of the Continent bordering it. For finde by the report of Cafro, a principall commander under Gama (which difcourfe I gaue Mr. Richard Haduit to publish) that there is an Iland called Dalaqua, fometime Leques, containing in length 25.

10 leagues, and 12 in breadth, the earth, fands, and clitts, of which Iland, being of a reddish colour, serue for a foile to the waters about it: and make it seeme altogether of the same colour. Secondly, the same Castro reporteth, that from 24. degrees of Septentrional latitude, to 27 (which make in length of coast 180. mile, lying as it doth Northerly and Southerly) all the clifts and banks are of red earth, or itone, which by reflection of the Sunne beames, give a kinde of reddilh luster to the waters. Thirdly, those Portugals report, and wee know it by many testimonies, that there are found in the bottome of this Sea towards the shore, great abundance of red stones, on which the greatest store of Corrall growes, which is carried into most parts of Europe, and elsewhere. There are also on the Ilands of this Sea many red 20 trees, faith Strabo, and those growing vnder water, may also be a cause of fuch a colour. Of these appearances of rednelle by the shadowes of these tiones, sands, earth, and clifts, I suppose that it first tooke the name of the red Sea, because in so many places it feemeth to be fuch: which Iohannes Barros in his fecond Decade, eight Booke and first Chapter, confirmeth.

The breadth of this Sea from Elana, or Exion Gaber adioyning, now Tore, called by the ancient Cosmographers Sinus Elaniticus, which washeth the banks of Madian or Midian, is for 16. or 17. leaguestogether, along Northward towardes Sues, fome three leagues or nine English mile ouer, and from this Port of Toro, to Sues, and the end of this Sea it is in length about 28. leagues, of which the first 26. haue 30 nine miles breadth as aforefaid, and afterward the lands both from Aeypt and Arabia, thrust themselues into the Sea, and straighten it so fast, as for fixe miles together it is not about three mile ouer; from thence vpward the land on Agypt fide, falleth away and makes a kinde of Bay or Coue for some ten miles together, after which the land growes vpon the Sea againe, and so binds it into the very end thereof, at four emiles breadth or thereabout, in which tract it was that Moses past it ouer, though others would have it to be over against Elana or Toro; but without iudgement : for from Ramases to Pihacheroth and Balzephon, there is not aboue 30. miles interjacent, or 35. miles at most, which Moses past ouer in three dates: and betweene the land of £gypt oppolite to Elans or Toro, the diffance is about 80.

40 miles. For Ramsfer to which Citie Mofes came (being the Metropolis of Gofen) when he left Pharaott Zoan, and tooke his last leaue, standeth in 30. degrees fine minutes of Septentrional Latitude: and Migdell, or the Valley of Pithebrenth, at the foote of the mountaine Climax, or Baalfephon, in nine and twentie and a halfe, which made a difference of flucand thirtie English mile: the way lying in effect North and South.

That the paffage through the red Sea was miraculous, and not

He Ægyptians, and of them the Memphites, and other Heathen Writers, who in hatred of the Hebrewes have objected that Alofes past ouer the red Sea at a low ebbe, vpon a great spring-tide, and that Pharao conducted more by suriethen discretion, pursued him so far, as before conducted more by furie then differention, purfued nim to tar, as perore he could recouer the coast of Ægypt, he was ouertaken by the floud 10 and therein perished, did not well consider the nature of this place with other circumstances. For not to borrow strength from that part of the Scriptures, which makes it plaine, that the waters were divided, and that God wrought this miracle by an Easterly winde, and by the hand and rod of Moses (which authoritie to men that beleeue not cherein perswadeth nothing) I say that by the same naturall reason unto which they fasten themselues, it is made manifest, that had there beene no other working power from about or affiftance given from God himfelfe to Moles. and the children of Ifrael than ordinarie and cafuall, then could not Pharae and all his armic haue perished in that pursuite.

For wherefoeuer there is any obbing of the Sea in any gulfe, or indraught, there 20 doe the waters fall away from the land : and runne downeward towards the Ocean : Icaning all that part towards the land as farre as the Sea can ebbe, or fall off, to bee drie land. Now Moses entring the Sea at Migdoll under Balzephon (if hee had taken the aduantage and opportunitie of the tyde) must have left all that end of the Red Sea towards Sues, on his left hand drie and vincouered. For if a paffage were made by falling away of the water, ten or twelue mile farther into the Sea then Sues; much more was it made at Sues, and betweene it and where Mofes past: who entred the same so farre below it, and towards the body of the same Sea. It followeth then, that if all that part of the Sleene or Strait, had beene by the ebbe of a spring-tide discouered, when Pharao found the floud increasing, he needed not to haucreturned 30 by the same way toward Agypt side, but might have gone on in his returne before the tide, on his right hand : and so taken ground againe at the end of that sea, at Sues it selfe, or elsewhere. But the Scriptures doe truly witnesse the contrarie, that is, That the sea did not fall away from the land, as naturally it doth; but that Moses past on betweene two seas: and that the waters were divided. Otherwise, Pharao by any returne of waters could not have perished, ashe did: and therefore the effects of that great Armies destruction, proue the cause to have beene a power about nature, and the miraculous worke of God himselfe. Againe, those words of the Scriptures, that God caused the Sea to runne backe by a strong east-winde, doerather proue the miracle, than that thereby was caused an ebbe more then ordinarie: for that sea doth not lie East and West, but, in effect, North and South. And it must have been a West and North-west winde, that must have driven those waters away through their proper channels, and to the South-east into the Sea. But the East-winde blew athwart the sea, and cut it afunder: so as one part fell backe towards the South, and maine body thereof: the other part remained towards Sues, and the North. Which being vnknowne to Pharae; while he was checkt by that fea, which yfed in all times before to ebbe away: the floud prefthim and ouerwhelmed him. Thirdly, seeing Tofephus auoweth, that Mofes was not only of excellent judgement generally, but alfo fo great a Captaine, as he ouerthrew the Athiopians in many battels, being imploied by Pharao, and wan divers Cities feeming impregnable: it were barbarous to 50 condemne him of this groffenesse, and distraction: that rather then he would have endured the hardneffe of a mountainous paffage at hand, (had not God commanded him to take that way, and foretold him of the honour which hee would there winne vpon Pharao) he would have trufted to the advantage of an ebbing water.

Por hee knew not the contrarie, but that Pharae might have found him, and prefhim, as well when it flowed as when it ebbed, as it feemeth he did. For the people, beholding Pharaes approch, cr.ed out against Moses, and despaired altogether of their fafetie and when Moles praied vnto God for helpe, he was answered by God : Wherefore crieft thou unto me : fleake unto the children of Ifrael that they goe forward, and lift thou vo thy rod, and firetohout thy hand upon the Sea, and divide it : which prones that there was not at the time of Pharaes approach any ebbe at all; but that God did disperse and cut through the weight of waters, by a strong East-winde, whereby the fands discovered themselves betweene the sea on the left hand toward Sues, from whence the waters moued not, and the fea which was towards the South on the right hand, (o that the waters were a wall unto them on the right hand, and on the (14, v. 22) left hand, that is, the waters fo defended them on both fides, as the Agyptians could only follow them in the fame path; not that the waters flood vpright as walls doe. as some of the Schoolemen have fancied. For had Pharaoh and the Agyptians perceiued any fuch buildings in the fea, they would foone have quitted the chace and purfuit of Israel. Furthermore, there is no man of judgement, that can thinke, that Pharaoh and the Leyptians, who then excelled all Nations in the observations of heauenly motions, could be ignorant of the fluxes, and refluxes of the fea. in his owne Countrie, on his owne coast, and in his owne most traded and frequented 20 Ports and Hauens, and wherein, his people having had fo many hundreds of yeares experience of the tides, he could not be caught, as he was, through ignorance nor by any foreknowne or naturall accident, but by Gods powerfull hand only; which then falleth most heavily on all men, when looking through no other spectacle but the Armie of the Egyptians had beene ouertaken by the ordinarie returne of the floud, before they could recouer their owne coast; their bodies drowned would have beene carried with the floud which runneth vp. to Sues, and to the end of that fea, and not have been east ashore on that coast of Arabia where Moles landed . to wit, vpon the fea-banke ouer against Baalzephon, on Arabia fide: where it was that 30 the Ifraelites faw their dead bodies; and not at the end of the Red Sea, to which place the ordinarie floud would have carried them: Which floud doth not any where croffe the Channell, and runne athwart it, as it must have done from Agypt side to Arabia, to have cast the Agyptians bodies there; but it keepes the natural course towards the end of that sea: and to which their carcases should have been carried, if the worke had not beene supernaturall and miraculous. Apollonius in the lines of the Fathers affirmeth, that those of the Agyptians which staied in the Countrie, and did not follow Pharaoh in the pursuit of Ifrael, did euer after honour those Beasts, Birds, Plants, or other Creatures, about which they were busied at the time of Pharaohs destruction; as he that was then labouring in his garden made a God of that Plant or Roote, about which he was occupied: and so of the rest. But how those multitudes of Gods were erected among them, a more probable reason shall be gi-vs, that in his time, who lived some 400. yeares after Christ, the prints of Pharaphs Chariot wheeles were to be feene at a low water on the Agyptian fands : and though they were fometime defaced by winde and weather, yet soone after they appeared againe. But hereof I leave every man to his owne uen elsewhere. Orosius in his first Booke and tenth Chapter against the Pagans tells beleefe.

Of the iournying of the Hraelites from the Red Sea, to the place where the Law was given them: with a dycourfe of Lawes.

A transition, by way of recapitulation of somethings touching Chronologie :
with a continuance of the storie, wntill the Amalekites met with the Ilraelites.

V 1 to goe on with the floric of Ifrael, in this fort I collect the times. Angles was borne in the yeare of the world 24,44. Sapirus then gouerning Affria; Orthopolis Systemia, or Peleponne[in ; Crissius the Argi-20 are; Orus Ægypt; and Deuasium Thessalia. He fled into Missius when he had lined 40. yeeres, in the yeere of the world 24,74 and two yeeres after was Calabborne. He returned by the commandement and ordinance of God into Ægypt, and wrought his miracles in the sields of Exam, in the yeere 2314 in the Alast moment of that yeere. On the 14. day of the first

Hebrew moneth Abib, or the 1 y, of that moneth, beginning the day (as they) at Sunne fetting, in the years of the world 2 y 1 4, was the celebration of the Palfeuner: and in the dead of the night of the faine day were all the first borne flaine through y a Leypt, or in all those parts where the Hebrewes inhabited. The 1 y, day of the first moneth, of the Hebrewes called Abib, being about the beginning of the yeare of the world 2 y 1 4. Chasses with the children of Wastermoued from the general laffembly at Rama(es, and marched to Succoth. And departing thence they made their third Station at Etham: and journying from Ethan they incamped in the valley of Pihacheroth, or Migdell, under the mountaine Budzephon; and in the same night after mid-night, they past the Red Sea : Pharaoh and his Armie perishing in their returne, about the first dawne of the day. Moses hauing recoursed the banks of Arabia, gaue thanks vnto God, for the deliverie of Israel; and making no stay on that coast, entred the Deserts of Arabia Petras, called 40 Sur. But finding no water in that paffage, he incamped at Marah, in the Defert of Etham, which in Exod. 15.0.22. is also called Sur, 25.miles from the Sea: where the children of Israel prest with extreme thirst, murmured against Moses the second time; first at Pharaohs approch in Pihacheroth, and now in Arabia. But Mosestaking the branches of a tree, growing neere a lake of bitter water, and easting the same thereinto, made the same sweet: a plaine Type and figure of our Sauiour; who vpon the tree of the Croffe changed the bitterneffe of cuerlasting death into the sweetnesse of eternall life. Plinie remembers these bitter fountaines in his sixth Booke and 20. Chapter. From whence to Delta in Egypt, Sefostris first, Darius after him, and lastly Ptolomie the second, beganne to cut an artificiall River, thereby by Boats and 50 fmall shipping to trade and nauigate the Red Sea, from the great Cities vpon Wilus. From Marah he remoued to Elim; the fixth Mansion, a march of eight miles: where finding twelue fountaines of fweet water, and 70. Palme trees, hee rested divers

Whether

Whether this Helim were the name of a Towne or Citie in Mofes time, I cannot affirme. And yet the learnite of waters in that Region was fuch, as Helim, which had two the Fountaines, could hardly be cleft upeopoled. Whilms, Archibility of Tyre, in his Hiltorie of the Helim Kurze, found at Helim the ruines of a great and ancient Citie. Mose who had not as yet trained those of the Hebrares, appointed to beare arms:
nor affured the minds of the rest, who encountring with the least missine, were

In the sixteenth Chapter of Exodus, Mossomitteth this retrait from Elimto the red Sca, but in the collection of enery seuerall incamping, in the 23.0 f Numbers, it is set downe.

Here it pleafed God to find formany flights of Quailes, as all the Countrie about their incamping was coursed with them. The morning following it allo rained Annua, being the fixteenth of their Moneth, which ferued them in flead of bread.

For now was the flore confumed which the people carried with them out of Egyl. And though they had great numbers of Cattle, and Sheepe among them, yet it feemeth that they durft not feed themfelues with many of those but referso ued them both for the milk to relecue the children withall: and for breede to flore themfelues when they came to the land promised.

themseliuss when they came to the land promised.

From hence towards Raphidins they made two remoues of twentie mile: the one to Daphas, the other to Alus, distant from Raphidinn fixe miles. Here being againe preft with want of water they murmured the fourth time, and repented them of their departure from Agypt, where they rather contented themseliuss to bee fed and beaten after the manner of beaths, than to suffer a cassall and sometime necessarily.

farie want, and to vindergoe the hazzards and trauailes which every manly minde feeketh after, for the love of God and their owne freedomes. But Mofes with the fame rod which hee divided the Sea with all, in

Of the Amalekites, Madianites, and Kenites, upon occasion of the battell with the Amalekites, and I ET HROES comming : who being a Kenite. was Priest of Madian.

nd while Moses incamped in this place, the Amalekites who had knowledge of his approch, and gheffed that he meant to leade the children of Ifrael through their Countrie (which being barren of it felfe, would bee vtterly wasted by so great a multitude of People and Cattle) thought it most for their advantage to set you them at 10

Raphidim: where the want of water, and all other things needfull for the life of man infeebled them. On the other fide Moles perceiuing their resolutions, gaue charge to Iolia, to draw out a fufficient number of the ablest Hebrepes, to incounter A malech. Betweene whom and Israel, the victorie remained doubtfull, for the most part of the day : the Hebrewes and Amalekites contending with equall hopes and repulses for many houres. And had not the strength of Moles praiers to God beene of farre greater force, and more preualent, than all reliftance and attempt made by the bodies of men; that valiant and warlike Nation had greatly indangered the whole enterprise. For those bodies which are vnacquainted with scarcitic of foode, and those minds whom a seruile education hath dulled, being beaten, and despaired 20 in their first attempts, will hardly, or neuer be brought againe to hazard themselues.

After this victorie lethro repaired to Mofes, bringing with him Mofes his wife, and his two Sonnes, which either Jethro forbare to conduct, or Moles to receive, till he had by this ouerthrow of Amalech the better affured himfelfe of that part of Arabia. For it is written in the 18. of Exodus, v. 1. When I ET HRO the Prieft of Midian, Moses Father in law, heard all that God had done for Moses, &c. of which, the last deede, to wit, the ouerthrow of Amalech, gaue Jethro courage and affurance. he then repaired to his sonne in law Moses , at Sinai ; where amongst other things, headuised Moses to appoint Indges, and other Officers, ouer Israel; being himselfe vnable to giue order in all causes and controuersies, among so many thousands of 30 people, full of discontentment and private controversie. This tethro, although he dwelt amongst the Midianites, yet he was by Nation a Kenite, as in the fourth of Indges v. 11. & 17. it is made manifest; where it is writton. Now HEBER the Kenite, which was of the children of HOBAB, to wit, the Conne of IETHRO, the father in law of Moses, was departed from the Kenites, and pitched his Tents untill the Plaine of Zaanaim, which is by Kedelh. Likewise in the first of Samuel, Saul commanded the Kenites to depart from among the Amalekites, leaft hee should destroy them with the Amalekites. For the Kenites inhabited the mountaines of Sin Kadelh: and the Amalekites dwelt in the Plaines, according to the faving of Mum. 24, v.21 Balaam, speaking of the Kenites. Strong is thy dwelling place, and thou hast put thy nest 40 in the Rocke. And that Saul spared this Nation, he giveth for cause, that they shewed mercie to all the children of Ifrael, when they came up from Agypt. For these Kenites were a Nation of the Madianites, and the Madianites were of the iffnes of Madian, one of the fixe fonnes which Abraham begat on Kethura: and might also take that name of Kenites from Kethura, of whom they descended by the Mother, who as it seemeth kept the knowledge of the true God among them, which they receiued from their parent Abraham. For Moles, when he fled out of Agret into Midian, and married the daughter of Ieiling, would not (had hee found them Idolaters) haue made lethroes Daughter the Mother of his children. And although the Kerites are named amongst those Nations, which God promised, that the seede 50 of Abraham should roote out, and inherite their lands; yet it cannot bee meant by these; who are descended from Abraham himselfe: but by some other Nation, bearing the same name; and in all likelihood of the race of Chus. For in the fifteenth of Genef, verf, nineteenth these Kenites or Chusites are listed with the Hittites and Perizites, with the Amorites, Canaanites, Gergofites, and lebufites, which were indeede afterwards rooted out. But these Kenites, descended from A- Genus. braham, had separated themselves from among the rest, which were altogether idolatrous. For, as is before remembred, Heber the Kenite, which was of the children Tade a of Hobab, was departed from the Kenites, that is to fay, from those Kenites of Canaan, and inhabited in Zaanaim, which is by Kedelb or Kadelb. Againe, Moles nameth that Nation of the Kenites, before Midian, or any of Abrahams other sonnes were borne : which he did (referring my felfe to better judgement) rather , because they were more ancient, than by anticipation.

10 And as of the Kenites, fo we may confider of the Madianites, parted by Moles in- Genas, at to five Tribes. For some of them were corrupted, and Heathens; as those of Madian by the River Zared, afterwards destroied by Moses. But the Madianites neare the bankes of the Red Sea, where Mofes married his wife Zipora, and with whom he left her and his children, till after the ouerthrow of Amalech, feeme likewife not to haue beene corrupted. For these Madianites with the Kenites affished Ifrael, and guided them in the Deferts. But the Madianites in Moab, and to the North of the Metropolis of Arabia; called Petraa; were by I/rael rooted out, when those adjouning to the Rea Sea were not touched.

And though it may be doubted, whether those of Madian, of whom Jethrowas 20 Priest, and the other Cities in Moab were the same, yet the contrarie is more probable. For Moses would not have fent 12000. Ifraelites, as farre backe as the Red Sea, from the Plaines of Moab, to have destroied that Madian; where his wives kindred inhabited: feeing himfelfe comming with 600000. able men, was encountred by Amalech, in that paffage. Neither could Moses forget the length of the way through those discomfortable Deserts, wherein himselfe and Israel had wandered

And fois it in the first of Kings 8.6. and the 2. of Chron. 5.10. and in Malachie 4.4. Finally, in Ecclefiasticus the 48. 7. they are named as one: Which heardest (faith Ecclefiasticus) therebuke of the Lordin Sinai, and in Horeb the indgement of the vengeance. Somewhat they are diffoyned at the top by the report of Peter Belonius: who in the yeare 1588 50 pall out of Agypt into Arabia, with Monsieur de Fumet of France, and travailed to the top both of Sinai and Horeb : Sinai being by farre the higher hill. From the fide of Horeb (faith he) there falleth a very faire firing of water into the Valley adioyning: where he found two Monafleries of Christian Marronites, containing some 100. Religious persons of divers Nations, who had pleasant gardens, delicate fruits, and excellent wine. These (faith the same Author) give entertainment to all strangers. which paffe that way.

Now, that there was some such Torrent of water neare Singi in Moles time, it is very probable: First, because he incamped thereabout almost a yeare, and drew no water, as in other places, by miracle: fecondly, because it is written Exed, 22, 20. that when Moles had broken the golden Calfe to powder, which Agren fet vpin his absence, he cast the powder thereof into the water, and made the children of 1/2 rael to drinke thereof.

On this mountaine, the Law by the Angell of God was given to Moles, where he staied a whole yeare, wanting some ten or twelue daies: for he removed not till 10 the 20 day of the second moneth of the second years; and he arrived about the 45 day after the egression; the Law being given the 50, day,

At this Mansion all was done, which is written from the beginning of the 20. Chapter of Exodus, to the end of that booke; all in Leuitieus; and all in Numbers, to the 10. Chapter. Whereof (because there is no storie nor other passage) I will omit the repetition, and in place thereof speake somewhat of the Law, and the kinds and viethereof: whereby, if the Reader finde the storie any way distoyned, he may turne ouer a few leaves, and, omitting this, finde the continuation thereof. We must first consider, that as there can be neither foundation, building, nor continuance of any Common-wealth, without the rule, leuell, and fquare of Lawes: fo 18 it pleased God to give thereby vnto Moses the powerfullest meane (his miraculous grace excepted) to gouerne that multitude which he conducted; to make them victorious in their passage, and to establish them assuredly in their conquest. For as the North starre is the most fixed directour of the Sea-man to his defired Port : fo is the Law of God the guide and conducter of all in generall, to the hauen of eternall life: the Law of nature, from God his eternall law deduced, the rule of all his Creatures: the Law humane, depending on both these, the guard of Kings, Magistrates, and vertuous men; yea, the very spirit, and the very sinewes of enery estate in the world, by which they line and moue: the Law, to wit, a just law, being resembled to an Heart without affection, to an Eie without luft, and to a Minde without paf- 20 fion; a Treasurer, which keepeth for euery man what he hath, and distributeth to euery man what he ought to haue.

This benefit the Ancient, though barbarous, effeemed to highly, that among them, those, which were taken for the first makers of Lawes, were honoured as Gods. or as the fonnes of Gods and the reft, that made either additions or corrections, were commended to all posteritie for men of no lesse vertue, and no lesseliberally beneficiall to their Countries, than the greatest and most prosperous Conquerours that ever governed them. The Ifraelites, the Lacedemonians, and the Alhenians, received their Lawes from one : as the Ifraelites from Mofes; the Lacedemonians from Lycargus; the Athenians from Solon; the Romanes formetime from 48 their first Kings, from their Decemviri, from their Senatours, from their Lawyers, and from the people themselues : others from the Prince, Nobilitie, and People; as in England, France, and in other Christian Monarchies and Estates.

ø. IIII.

Of the name and meaning of the words, Law, and Right.

He word Lex, or Law, is not alwaies taken alike, but is diverfly, and 50 in an indifferent fense vsed. For if we consider it at large, it may be vnderstood for any rule prescribing a necessarie meane, order, and methode, for the attaining of an end. And fo the rules of Grammer, or other Arts, are called Lawes. Or it is taken for any private ordinance of Superiours to Inferiours: for the commandements of Tyrants, which they cause to be observed by force, for their decrees doe also vsurpe that title, according to the generall acceptation of the word Law: of which E/ay, Was unto them E/ay 10. that decree wicked decrees, and write grieuous things. Likewise, the word is yied for the tumultuarie resolutions of the people. For such constitutions doth Artsiotle also call lawes, though cuill and vnfufficient. Mala lex oft, qua tumultuarie polita est; It is an Ethiclas xi ill law that is made tumultuoully. So as all ordinances, good or enill, are called by the

The word Law is also taken for the morall habit of our minde, which doth (as it 10 were) command our thoughts, words, and actions: framing and fashioning them according to it selfe, as to their patterne and platforme. And thus the law of the flesh which the Diuines call legem fomitis, is to be vinderstood. For every law is a kinde of patterne of that which is done according vnto it : in which sense as * elsewhere, * Gen.6.5. this morall habit or disposition of the heart is called the frame or figmentum of the Hem 8.2. heart : fo in St. Paul to the Romanes it is called a Law. But I fee another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my minde, and leading mecaptine unto the law of sinne Againe, the nature and inclinations of all creatures are sometime called 4 lawes, so g $9 Viscus farre as they agree with the reason of the law eternall; as the law of a Lyon, to bee continuo has lefierce or valiant.

Also private contracts among Merchants and other Tradesmen, doe often pur possibility attention to on the name of lawes. But law commonly and properly is taken, for a right rule, (6) it is to be prescribing a necessarie meane, for the good of a Common-wealth, or Civill com-noted that he munitie. The reft, to wit, the commandements of Tyrants, &c. which have not joynes legis & the common good for their end, but being leges inique, are by Thomas called violentiamagis quam leges; rather compulsions then lawes: And what soener is not just, Saint Scripture the Augustine doth not allow for lawes, how soener established : for he calls them iniqua called the cohominum conflituta, que nec iura dicenda, nec putanda funt; The vniust conflitutum, cuenticunant.
men which are neither to be termed nor thought layes. For faith ARISTOTLE, Legaliz Anst. stille, 5. infta funt factina, & confernatina falicitatis : Inft lawes are the workers and preferences of cap. 1.

30 happinelle: because by them we are directed advitam quietam, to a quietlife, according to Cicero. Yea, to life everlafting, according to the Scriptures. For the end of the law. faith Plato, is God and his worthip. Finis legis Deus & cultus eius. Lex, or the Law Plato in Dial, si is so called by the Latines alegendo, or a ligando, of reading or binding: Leges quia letta deleg, & ad populum lata, faith Varro; For after Lawes were written and published, all men might reade them, and behold in them whereto they were bound. The other Etys mologie, a ligando, is no leffe agreeable with the nature of a Law: whence in the Scripture it is called also a yoke, and a band: as confregerunt ingum, diruperunt vincula they Hierem, 5.5. haue broken the yoke, they have broken the bands. And in the fecond Pfalme, dirumpamus vincula corum, & projetamus a nobis funes ipforum; Let vs breake their bands plats 40 in funder, and cast away their cordes from us.

The Couenant it is called, because of the conditionall promises of God : and because of Gods peoples voluntarie submission of themselves vnto it: for which word the Septuagint, and the Epiffle to the Hebrewes, vie the word sudbuxu. a Testament or last will: which name it bath, because it is not otherwise effectuall for our saluation. but in respect of the death of the Testator, for without the death of the Testator, the Testament is of no force : as Hebr. 9. 17. it is faid, Testamentum in mortuis ratum ett.

The Hebrewes call the law Thorah of teaching, because every man is thereby taught his dutie, both to God and Men. The Greekes call it Nomos of diffributing. 50 because it distributeth to every man his owne due; the power of the law is the power of God: Iustice being an attribute proper vnto God himselfe. Imperiumlegis imperium Dei eft; The raigne of the law, is the raigne of God.

Law in generall is thus defined by the Philosophers : Lex est with regula, pracipiens que sunt sequenda, & que suzienda; Law is the rule of life, commanding what to follow and what to shunne, or Lex oft omnum divinarum & humanarum rerum Regina; Law is the Queene or Princesse of things both humane and divine. But this description is grounded upon the opinion of ineuitable fate. Law is the very wisedome of Nature : the reason and understanding of the prudent; and the rule of right and wrong. For as aright line is called Index (ui & curus, the demonstrance of it selfe, and of the crooked : fo is the law, the Judge and measure of right and wrong.

Mr. Hooker calls the Law a directive rule to goodnesse of operation: and though law as touching the fubstance and effence, consist in vnderstanding: Concludit tamen actum voluntatis; Tet it comprehends the act of our will. The word Ius is also diverly taken, as sometime for the matter of the law and for common right: sometime for 10 the law it felfe: as Ius Civile, or Ius gentium. Isidore distinguisheth the two generall words Ius and Fas: whereof Ius, faith he, hath reference to men, Fas to God. Fas lex divina, Iuslex humana. To goe ouer an other mans field, is permitted by Gods law, not by mans : and therefore in a thing out of controuerlie, Virgil vsed both those words : as Fas es jura sinunt : God and Men permit.

The word Iss or Right, is derived or taken from the old substantive Nowne influs, a bidding or commandement : or perhaps from the Greeke (we, which is the name of Inpiter : or of the Latine genitiue case Ionis : because as the Scripture speaks, the indeement is Gods. For as it is certaine that ins-inrandum came of Ionis-inrandum 2 (bron.19.6. (for fo we finde it written in Nonius out of the ancient, in which fenfethe Scripture 20 calls it iuramentum Iehoue) fo also we may say, that Ius came of Iouis, quia Iouis est: because as God is the Author, and Patterne, and Maintainer of right, so also in his Vicegerents the Magistrates, he is the pronouncer and exequutor of right. Of this Ins the just are denominated, influs à jure, and institu à insto; The right gines name to the righteous : and instice takes her name from the inst.

Of the definition of Lawes, and of the law eternal.

Vt because lawes are manifold, and that every kinde hath a proper 30 and peculiar definition, it agreeth with order, first to divide and diftinguish them. I meane those forts of lawes, from whence all other particulars are drawne : leauing the individuals of humane lawes to particulars are grawne....... their infinite and horrible confusion.

The law eternall is thus defined by T H O MA'S. Lex aterna est aternus dinina sa- V.2.79 ant. 1. pientia conceptus, secundum quod ordinatur ad gubernationem rerum ab ipso pracognitarum : The eternall law is the eternall concept of Gods wifedome, as it is referred to the gouernement of things foreknowne by himselfe. Or Lex aterna oft summa at q, aterna ra- Thio, on, art. tio dining latientia; augtenus resomnes ad destinatos fines ita dirigit, vt illis iuxta conditionemiplarum modum aliquem necessitatis adferat; It is the high and eternallreason of diuine Spience : as it directeth all things in such fort to their proper ends, imposing akinde of necessitie according to their severall natures, or conditions. Now the difference lieth in this: That as the fame divine vinderstanding directeth all these to their proper ends; To fo it is called providence; but as it imposeth a necessitie according to the natures of all things which it directeth, fo it is called a law.

CHAP.3. $.5.

Of this eternall law Cicero tooke knowledge, when in his booke of Lawes, hee wrote in this manner. Erat ratio perfecta, rerum natura, & adrecte faciendum impellens of a delicto auocans: que non tumincipitlex effe cum feripta eft: fed tum cum orta est. Orta autem simil est cum mente diuina : quamobrem lex vera atque princeps, apta ad iubendumes ad vetandum ratio est recta summi Jouis : That perfect reason and nature of things incouraging or impelling to rightfull actions, and calling vs backe from eaill, did not (faith he) then beginne to be a law when it was written : but when it had being. Being and beginning it had together with divine understanding, and therefore a true law and a fit Princesse 20 to command and forbid is the right reason of the most high God. This eternall law, (if we consider it in God, or as God,) is alwaics one and the same; the nature of God being most simple: but as it is referred to divers objects, so the reason of man finds it divers and manifold. It also seemeth one law in respect of things necessarie, as the motions of the heavens, stabilitie of the earth, &c. but it appeareth otherwise to things contingent : another law to men : another to other creatures, having life, and to all those that be inanimate. By this eternall law all things are directed, as by the counfaile and providence of God: from this law all lawes are derived, as from the rule vniverfall; and thereto referred, as the operation of the second to the first. 30 The eternall, and the divine Law, differ only in confideration; the eternall dire- Tho. 6 Airs. ching more largely, aswell enery creature, to their proper and naturall ends, as it doth man to his supernaturall : but the divine law to a supernaturall end only : the Naturall law is thence derived, but an effect of the eternall : as it were a streame from this fountaine.

The Lawhumane or temporall is also thence drawne: in that it hath the forme of right reason : from which if it differ, it is then impositio iniqua, a wicked imposition: and only borroweth the name of a law.

To this eternall law all things are fubicated : aswell Angels and Men, as all other creatures, or things created; whether necessarie or contingent, naturall, or morall, and humane. For the law eternall runneth through all the vniuerfall, and therefore it is the law also of things which are simple, naturall, and inanimate.

Hence it is, that all things created are commanded to praise God their Creatour and Directour: as Praise him all yee his Angels: praise yee him Sunne and Moone, all Plalia? bright Starres: heavens of heavens, for he hath established them for ever and ever. Hee hath made an ordinance which shall not passe: Praise yee the Lord from the earth yee Dragons and all depths: Fire, and haile, fnow, and vapours, stormie winds, which exequate his Word: mountaines, and hils: fruitfull trees and all Cedars: Beafts, and all Cattell, &c. Now as the reasonable Creatures are by this eternall law bound, by the glorie and felicitie proposed ynto them (beatitude being both the attractive, and the end) so all other 50 naturall things and creatures, have in themselves, and in their owne natures, an obedience formall to it: without any proper intention, knowne cause, or end propofed. For beafts are led by fense, and naturall inftinct: things without life by their created forme, or formall appetites, as that which is heavie to fall downeward: things light to mount vpward, &c. and fire to heate what focuer is apposed. This

kinde of working the Ariftotelians afcribe to common nature : others to fate: a difference vsed in termes only; it being no other then Gods generall providence; for as it is truly faid of God, that he is omnia super omnia: so are all things which appeare in themselves, thence derived : there-ynder subjected : thence-from by his eternall law and prouidence directed, even from the greatest to the least of his creatures, in heaven and in earth.

The Schoolemen are very curious and ample in the confideration of these lawes: and in discourse of the profit, and of the matter, and object of the eternal! law. But as the profit is manifest in the good of all creatures, who have thence-from, either reason, sense, vegetation, or appetition, to conduct them : so is the object and mat- 10 L. t. delib, arb. ter of the law, the whole creature. For according to St. A v G V S T I N E. Lex aterna est, quainstumest ut omnia sint ordinatissima; The law eternall is that, whereby it is just. that all things should be disposed in the best and goodliest order.

Lastly, it is disputed, whether the eternal law be immutable, yea or no? But the refolution is, that it changeth not; for which St. Augustine vieth a sufficient argument in his first Booke of Free-will the fixth Chapter. For the law of Moles which had a time prefixed, was eternally by God ordained to last untill the time of the Perdagogia of Gods people, or introduction to Christ should be expired; which time of expiration fome thinke our Saujour noted to be come, when on the Croffe hee faid. Consummatum oft. But I rather thinke these words of our Saujour to have no other 20 fignification, then that now the prophecie of their giuing him Vineger to drinke was fulfilled. For fo S. Iohn expounds it, when he faith v. 28. That Christ feeing all (other) things to be fulfilled , Vt confummaretur Scriptura , That the Scripture in this also might be fulfilled, said I thirft: though I denie not, but at the same time also the date of the Law was expired, to wit, of the law cerimoniall, and of so much of the indiciall, as appertained peculiarly to the Iewes, and agreeth not with the law of the new Tellament and Gospell of Christ. For the immutable law of God, though prescribing things mutable, is not therefore changed in it selfe: but the things prescribed change according to this eternall ordinance; of which the Wifedome of SAL o-MON. And being one speecan doe all things, and remaining in her selfereneweth all.

Q. VI. Of the Law of Nature.

🎖 F the law of Nature as it is taken in generall, I finde no definition among the Schoolemen: only as a social money of the eternal law in the response in mpression of dutine light, and a participation of the eternal law in the response in able creature. Lex naturals of invastoria. VLTIAN defines the naturallaw patio legis aterna invationali creatura. VLPIAN defines the naturalllaw 40

& lured 1 die to be the same which nature hath taught all living creatures 3 Jus naturale est quod Natura omnia animalia docuit : and he afterward addeth, Itu islud non humani generis proprium, sed omnium animalium qua terramariá, nascuntur, auium quoque commune est; The law of nature is not proper to man alone, but the same is common to all living creatures : as well to birds, as to those which the Landand Sea produceth. But this definition is not generall, but of the naturall law in things of life.

The law of nature in generall, I take to be that disposition, instinct, and formall qualitie, which God in his eternall prouidence hath given and imprinted in the nature of enery creature, animate, and inanimate. And as it is diainum lumen in men, inlightning our formall reason: so is it more then sense in beasts: and more then ve- 50 getation in plants. For it is not sense alone in beasts, which teacheth them at first fight, and without experience or instruction, to flie from the enemies of their lives: fecing that Bulls and Horses appeare vnto the sense more fearefull and terrible, then the least kinde of Dogs: and yet the Hare and Decre feedeth by the one, and flieth from the other, yea though by them neuer feene before, and that as foone as they fall from their Dammes. Neither is it fense which hath taught other Beasts to prouide for Winter, Birds to build their nefts, high or low, according to the tempefluous or quiet feafons : or the Birds of India to make their nests on the smallest twigs which hang ouer Rivers, and not on any other part of the tree, or elfewhere: to faue their egges and yong ones from the Monkies, and other beafts, whose weight fuch a twig will not beare : and which would feare to fall into the water. The instances in this kinde are exceeding many which may be given. Neither is it out of the vegetable or growing nature of plants, that some trees, as the semale of the Pal-10 mitte will not beare any fruit except the male grow in fight. But this they doe by that law which the infinite and vnscarchable wisedome of God, had in all eternitie provided for them, and for every nature created. In man this law is double corrupt. and incorrupt; corrupt where the reason of man hath made it selfe subject, and a Vaffall to paffions, and affections brutall; and where time and cuftome hath bred in men a new nature, which also, as is aforesaid, is a kinde of Law. For it was not by Sapra $.4.02 the law of Nature incorrupt, which St. Augustine calleth the law of reason, but by a nature blinded and corrupted, that the Germans did anciently allow of theft; and that other Nations were by law constrained to become Idolaters; that by the lawes of Lycurgue it was permitted to men to vie one anothers wife, and to the wo- Thread to decise nen to choose them others besides their hulbands, to beget them with child: Which randia affect of the manual affects of the state of t law in those parts hath lasted long, and is not forgotten to this day. The Scythians, and the people of both Indies, hold it lawfull to burie with them the best beloued wives : as also they have many other customes remembred by G. Valentia, against nature and right reason.

And I know not from what authoritie it is that these lawes some men auow to be naturall: except it be of this corrupt nature, as (among others) to pay guile with guile: to become faithlesse among the faithlesse : to prouide for our selues by another mans destruction: that injurie is not done to him that is willing: to destroy Memojure wethose whom we feare : and the like. For taking the definition of natural lawes, ej- tura com alteri-20 therout of St. Augustine or Aquinas, (the one calling it the impression of dinine light; sustained it, the other, the dictate or fentence of practique reason) the same can teach vs, or incline dibe. vsto no other thing, then to the exercise of Iustice and vprightnesse: and not to offer or performe any thing toward others, faue that which wee would bee content should be offered or performed toward our selves. For such is the law of nature to the minde, as the eie is to the bodie; and that which according to David the weth Pfalm. vs good, that is, the observation of those things which leade vs thereby to our last end; which is eternall life: though of themselves not sufficient without faith and

Now, that which is truly and properly the law of Nature, where the corruption 40 is not taken for the law, is, as aforefaid, the impression of Gods divine light in men, and a participation of the law increated and eternall. For without any law written the right reason and understanding, which God hath given vs, are abilities within our felues, fufficient to give vs knowledge of the good and euill, which by our gratitude to God, and distribution of right to men, or by the contrarie, wee prepare and purchase for our selves. For when the Gentiles (faith S.P AV L) which have not the Law; Rom, 2.ver, 14; doe by nature those things contained in the law: they having not the law, are alaw unto themfelues. Now, to love God by whom wee are, and to doe the same right to all men, which we defire should be done vnto vs, is an effect of the purest reason : in whose highest Turrets, the quiet of conscience hath made her resting place, and habitation. 50 In arce altissimarationis quies habitat; Therefore, the Gentiles (faith S. PAVI) which Roma ver. 15:

show the effects of the law written in their hearts, have their consciences for witnesses of those effects : and the reprobate their thoughts to accuse them.

And it is most true, that who so euer is not a law vnto himselfe (while he hopeth to abuse the world by the advantage of hypocrisie) worketh nothing else, but the betraying of his owne foule, by craftic varighteounfeeffe, purchasing eternall perdition. For it helpeth vs not to hide our corrupt hearts from the worlds eie, seeing from him, who is an infinite eie, we cannot hide them: some Garlands wee may gather in this May-game of the world, seel flasiste, dam loquimme, are feit; Thofe shores wither while we disconse of their colours, or are in gathering them. That we should therefore inhabite and dwell within our selenes, and become fearefull witnesses of our secreteft cuils, did that reusernd Philosopher Pythogonast each in this golden precept. Wil turp committees, request economic tectum, mostime eminion were exterplim; Committenthing foule or disposeli, faith he, meither to be knownet others, not to time-owne heart: but above all monreusernet time owne conscience. And this may be a pre-10 expense heart is that above all monreusernet time owne conscience. And this may be a pre-10 expense in the constitution of the properties of the constitution of the properties of the constitution of the properties. Now, as the reasonable minde is the forme of man, so is he apsly, mound to those things which his proper forme presented not hand in the properties.

The Earth performeth her office, according to the Law of God in nature: for it bringeth forth the budde of the hearbe which feedeth feede, &c. and the Beaff, 20 which lineth thereon. He gaue a Law to the Seas, and commanded them to keepe their bounds: which they obay. He made a decree for the raine, and a way for the lightning of the thunders. He caufed the Sunnet o moue, and to give light, and to ferue for tigness and for feafons. Were the feas rebellious as man, for whose fake they were created, or did they once breake the law of their natures and formes, the whole world would then perith, and all returne to the first Chass, darkenesse, and confission.

in the breach of the rules of this reason, is man least excusable: as being a reasonable

By this naturall Law, or Law of humane reafon, did Caine perceive his owne wickeneffe, and offence, in the murther of Mol. for he not only feared the differentire of God, but the reuenge of Men: it being written in his reafon, that what focuer 30 he performed towards others, the same by others might be edone with him againe. And that this udgement of well and cuil doing, was put into our natures by God, and his eternall law, before the law written: Mofes in the perfon of God witneffeth, Ger. the fourth. If thou doeweld Bodt thou not be accepted? and if thou doe not well, finne lepth at thy dore...

The Śchoolemen are large alló in this question of the natural! Law: the same being opened amply by Reinerius, Antoninus, and Valentia. But it is not my purpose to write a volume of this subiest.

But this law which Thomas Aquinas calleth an act of reason taken properly, and not ababite, as it is an euident naturall indgement of practique reason: they divide into 49 indemonstrable, or needing no demonstration (as that good is to be followed, and cuill eschewed) and demonstrable, which is euidently proved, out of higher and more vinuerfall propositions. Againe, as it answereth the naturall appetite, preserving things to be desired as good, or to be avoided as cuill (as of the first to desire to live, and to statisfie hunger, &c. and of the second, to eschew paines, forrow, and death) in this consideration they divided it, according to the diviners kinds of appetites are in the second in man is a being, Ens or Res: so bee doth desire good, and shunne eutil. For it is common to all things, to desire things agreable to their owne natures, which is, to desire their owne good. And so is Good desined by Artifolds, to be that which all desire. Like Li e.t. Which desire the Bestime approve the Reste quiden Benim desirierum, Quod omnia expetunt; Rightly have some men desired Good; or Goodnesse, to be that which all things desire.

The second kinde of appetite is of those things which appertaine to vs. as wee haue sense. Whence, by the law of Nature, wee desire the delights of every sense; but with fuch moderation, as may neither glut vs with fatietie, nor hurt vs with 10 excesse. For as Sense it selfe is for the preservation of life and being: so is it meete, euen by the law of nature, that the fenfitiue appetite should not carrie vs to the deftruction, either of our life or being. And although (feeing both these kinds of appetites are in beasts) wee may well say, that Nature hath given divers lawes anto them: An which fenfe the Civilians define Naturall right, or Jus naturale, to bee the fame which Nature hath taught all living creatures. Yet the Schoolemen admit not. that the inftincts of beafts can be properly called a Law, but only a Ius, or Right, which is the matter, and aime of every Law. For so they distinguishit; where vipian affirmeth, that Ius naturale is that, which Nature hath taught all living creatures. In this place (faith Valentia) Ins is not to be taken for a Law, but for the mat-20 ter of the Law. And yet where Vipian also distinguisheth the right belonging to liuing creatures in generall, from the right belonging to men; calling the one Ius natura, the other Itis gentium: the Divines understand the law of nature more largely. that is, for all euident dictates, precepts, or biddings of divine reason; both in beasts

The third appetite is of those things which appertaine properly to man, as he is a lining creature reasonable: as well with relation to God, and to our Neighbour, as for our selues: and the lawes of this appetite are the Commandements of our reliand men; and restraine the law of Nations to a kinde of humane right.

Now although there are many other branches and diuifions of this law of nature of an anticology of the diuifion of matter, which it preferibeth, and as manifold, as the morall actions are which it commandeth or forbiddeth; yet is the law of nature but one law, according to Aguinas: first, because it hath one fountaine or roote in the naturall or motite faculties, which is but one, filtring yot ogood, and declining the contrarie: secondly, because all is contained in that generall naturall precept, That good is to be followed, and ill auxided: and thirdly, because all the parts are reduced to one and the same last end.

That this law of nature bindeth all creatures, it is manifelt: and chiefly man, becausing the he is indued with reason; in whom as reason groweth, so this band of observing the law of nature increaseth, Possanaria ad perfection venis, tune six quad for in Asia.

40 ptum off, Advaniente mandata pocositum reuixit; When resfon grew to perfection, then it came to pelfe, which was written by S.P. av L.; When the Commandement came, finne reuimed. Neither is it a finall warrant for this law of nature, when those which breake the fame, are faid by S.P. av L.; To be delinered over into a reproduct fenfe (or minde) Rom.1.28, to due those things which are not coincinner: and againe, that their conficiences bear with Rom.2.15, nelfe, and their thoughts accopie them. For, though this law of nature fireten not to eurory particular: as to command failing and the like; eyet, it commandeth in generall all good, and whatfocuer is agreeable to right reason. And therefore, said D.A.M. as c.R. is, homines failif furt mali, declinance in it quod constrantaran of § S. Avvestins, "350 to Mone vitium nature nocet; as per hoc contra naturean of § Luery vice doth wrong to nature, and is therefore constraine with it.

Neither yet are the rules of this law of nature fo flreight, but that they fuffer exceptions in some particulars. For whereas by this law all men are borne Lords of the earth, yet it well alloweth inequalitie of portions, according to vnequall ment:

by taking from the euill, and giving to the good: and by permitting and commanding that all men shall enjoy the fruits of their labours to themselues: according to the rules of justice and equitie.

And though the law of nature command, that all things bee reftored which are left in truft, yet in some causes this her law shee suffereth to be broken; as to denie a madde man his weapons, and the like, which he left in keeping while hee was fober. But the vniuerfall principles can no more bee changed, than the decrees of God are alterable: who according to St. PAVL, abideth faithfull, and cannot denie himselfe.

flood 2513, whole yeeres : and in the 67. day of this yeere when as Acatades or Alcades gouerned the Allyrians, Marathus the Sycionians, Triopus the Argines, Ce- 29 crops Attics, and Acherres Agypt: to wit, after the promife to Abraham 420. yeeres. And this, it feemes, was the first written lays which the world received. For the very word Nomes, fignifying a law, was not then, nor long after invented by the Gracians: no not in Homers time: who lived after the fall of Troy So, veeres at leaft: and Troy it selfe was cast downe 335. yeeres, after Moses led Israel out of Agypt. This law, it pleased God to ingraue in stone, that it might remaine a lasting booke of his express will in the Church; and that the Priests and people might haue, whereof to medicate, till the comming of Christ and that so these children of Ifrael, though bred among an Idolatrous people in Egypt, might be without excuse the slight defences of ignorance being taken from them.

The reason knowne to vs why this law was not written before, is, that when the people were few, and their liues long, the Elders of families might cafily without any written law instruct their owne children; and yet as they increased so doubtlesse they had belides the law of Nature, many precepts from God, before the law written. But now at length, for a fmuch as the law of nature did not define all kinds of good, and euill; nor condemne euery finne in particular: nor fufficiently terrifie the consciences of offenders : nor so expound divine worship, as for those after-ages was required, who gaue enery day leffe authoritie than other to the naturall law; In these respects it was necessarie, that the law should be written, and set before the cies of all men: which before, they might, but would not reade, in their owne confci- 49 ences. The Schoolemen, and the Fathers before them, inlarge the causes and necesfitie, why the law was written, whereof these are the chiefest.

The first, for restraining of sinne, directly grounded upon this place of DAVID, The law of the Lord is undefiled, converting foules: The testimonies of the Lord are faithfull, giving wifedome to children. For the humane law, faith St. Augustine, meeteth not with all offences, either by way of prohibition or punishment; seeing thereby it might take away fomething feeming necessarie, and hinder common profit : but the divine law written, forbiddeth every evill, and therefore by David it is called

Secondly, it ferueth for the direction of our minds. For the lawes of men, can 50 only take knowledge of outward actions, but not of internall motions, or of our disposition and will: and yet it is required, that we be no lesse cleane in the one, than in the other. And therefore were the words converting our foules, added by David: wherein are all our outward acts first generated, according to the Cabalists. Actiones hominum nulla effent, nist prius in mente dicerentur; The actions of men (fay they) would benone at all, were they not first conceived in the minde.

Thirdly, it leadeth vs to the knowledge of truth, which by reason of diversitie of opinion, and difference of peculiar lawes among fundrie Nations, wee cannot bee affured of; but the law of God bindeth all men, and is without errour; and therefore also said DAVID, That the testimonie of the law of God is faithfull guing wifedome to children.

Of the unwritten law of God, given to the Patriarks by Tradition.

Ow, that in all this long tract of time, betweene the creation and the written law, the world and people of God were left altogether to the law of reason and nature, it doth not appeare. For the Patriar ks of the first age received many presepts from God himselfe, and whatsoever first age received many presepts from God himselfe, and whatsoeuer was first imposed by Adam, the same was observed by Seth, who in-ftructed Enos: from whom it descended to Noah, Sem, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Ioleph, and Moses. Yea many particular Commandements afterward written, were for-20 merly imposed and delivered over by Tradition; which kinde of teaching the lewes afterward called Cabala, or Receptio. precepts received from the mouth of their Priests and Elders: to which the Iewes after the law written, added the interpretation of secret mysteries, reserved in the bosomes of their Priests, and vnlawfull to be yttered to the people. But the true Cabala was not to bee concealed from any; as being indeede the divine law reucaled to the Patriarks; and from them delivered to the pofteritie, when as yet it was vnwritten. The Commandements which God gaue vnto Adam in the beginning, were, that he should impose names to all beasts, according to their natures; to whose perfection of vinderstanding they were sufficiently knowne. For finding the reason of his owne name Adam of Adamah, Earth, or 20 red clay, hee gaue other names fignificant, not only to beafts, but to his Children and Nephewes, which afterward his iffues imitated; as the name of Seth fignifieth, . The come as some take it, one that was laid for the ground or foundation of the Church, reading is conor rather, one given in recompence for Abel that was flaine: and Enolb fignifieth terra: but God did not definoy man or miferable, &c. Further, God commanded Adam to till the ground, and the certh; and man or miscrapic, qc. 1 arcter, 300 cauchim the choise of all fruits, but the forbidden, and in Adam also was marriage first instituted: all men thence-after being this preposition on in this place commanded to cohabite with their Wiues, rather than with their Father and haue the fame Mother.

That murther and crueltic was also forbidden, both before the law written, and to Inniis, Gen. 40 before the floud it felfe, it is manifest. God himselfe making it appeare, that it was 4-1. Hem 44-4. one of the greatestcauses of the destruction of mankinde by the generall floud. For especially, see God faid vnto NoA, An end of all flesh is come before mee : for the earth is filled with ingeliefewords God filled the Constant of the sense of the mercie and indice interposing betweene the vntaught, and reuenge. This com. v.t. Delabor-mandement God repeated to Nos., after the waters were dried up from the earth. fixet one. Who fo fleddeth mans bloud, by man (hall his bloud be fied: for in the Image of God hath he Geneve 6. mademan.

Also the law of honouring and reuerencing our parents, was observed among the to faithfull, and the contrarie punished by the fathers curse: as, Cursed be Canaan; a servant Ging 25, of feruants (ballhe be onto his brethren. Againe, we finde that the vinatural finne of the Sodomites was punished in the highest degree; as with fire from Heauen. The finne of Adulterie and Rauishment, was before the law no leffe detefted than the rest, as appeareth by that reuenge, taken for Dina's forcing; and by the Gonzalate iudgement which Inda gaue against Tamar, That shee should be burnt : and by the repentance of Pharaoh and Abimelech, against whom this sentence was pronounced. Thou art but dead, because of the Woman which thou hast taken : for shee is a mans Wife. To these we may adde the ordinance of Sacrifice, of distinction of cleane and yncleane beafts, of Circumcifion, of the Brother to raife vp feede to his Brother that left a Widdow childleffe, and divers other constitutions, partly Morall, and partly Ceremoniall, which being deligered before the written law, were after by it confirmed. So that this Divine Law imposed, of which the law of Moses containeth that which is called The old Testament, may be faid, not only to have been written in the hearts of men, before it was ingrauen in stone, but also in substance to have beene to given in precept to the Patriarks. For as S. Paul witnesseth of himselfe, I knew not finne, but by the law: fo cuer the Law naturally preceded, and went before offences, though written after offences committed.

It is true, that all the creatures of God were directed by some kinde of vnwritten law; the Angels intuitinely; Men by Reason; Beasts by sense and instinct, without discourse; plants by their vegetative powers; and things inanimate by their necessarie motions, without fenfe or perception,

Ow as the word (Law) in generall, as is aforefaid, hath divers fignifications, and is taken for all doctrine which doth prescribe and reftraine : fo this Law, called the Law of Moses in particular, is taken by S. Paul diverfly; as sometime for all the old Testament, as, Now we know what soener the law faith, it faith to them which are under the law.

When it is opposed, or differenced from the Prophets, and Pfalmes, it is there 20 taken for the five Bookes of Moles. For fo Saint Luke hath diftinguished them; as, All must bee fulfilled which are written of mee in the Law, in the Prophets, and in the

When it is opposed to the Gospell, then it is taken for the Law Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall; as, Therefore we conclude, that a man is instified by faith without Kom.2,28.

> When it is opposed to Grace, it fignifieth the declaration of Gods wrath, and our guilt of condemnation; or the extremitie of law, and (immum ius : as, For yee are) not under the law, but under grace.

When it is opposed to the Truth, namely, where the ceremonies or signes are taken for the things fignified; as the Sacrifice for Chrift, and the like; then it fignifieth but shadowes and figures; as, The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by I E s v s Christ.

Lastly, when it is opposed to the time of Christs comming, it signifies the whole policie of the Jewes Common-weale; as, Before faith came, wee were kept under the Law, &c. or the law of the order and institution of the Aaronical Priesthood; as, All the Prophets, and the Law, or the Priests, prophecied unto IOHN. And if the Priesthood bee changed, the Law also, to wit, of the Priesthood, must needes bee

The word (Law) is sometime also taken by the Figure Metonymia, for Interest, 50 Authoritic, and Empire, or for constraining force; as, The law of the Spirit of life, the law or the force of sinne and death, the enforcements of concupiscence, &c.

But the Written Law of Moses, or the Lawc of the Old Testament, of which wee now fpeake, is thus defined. The Law is a doctrine, which was first out into CHAP.4.S.9. of the Historie of the World.

the mindes of men by God, and afterwards written by Mafes, or by him repeated, commanding Holinesse and Justice, promising eternall life conditionally, that is, to the obscruers of the law, and threatning death to those which breake the law in the least. For according to Saint James, Whosoever shall keepe the whole, and faileth in James 2, 10. one point, is guiltie of all. The definition vsed by the Shoolemen, in which both the Old and New law are comprehended, is thus given. Lex dismaelt distinum decretum, hominibus prascribens modum necessarium vt apte peruenire posint ad supernaturalem heatitudinem, que est vitimus humana vita finis; The divine law (fay they) is the decree of God, preferibing unto men a necessarie meane, whereby they may aptly attaine supernas o turall beatitude, which is the last end of mans life.

The law of Mases hath three parts : Morall, Ceremoniall, and Indiciall. The Morall part commaundeth this or that good to be done, and this or that cuill to be avoided, in particular, as also it declareth, for whose sake it is to be done; as Doethis for I am the Lord, whereas the law of nature commands it but in generall. Againe the Morall law entreateth of vertue and goodnesse; the Ceremoniall of dinine sernice, and of holineffe; (for externall worthip, and the order of hallowing our felues vuto God is called Ceremonie ) and the Judiciall teacheth the particular gouernment, fit for the Common-wealth of the Iewes; and prescribeth orders for inflice and equitie. And therefore was it faid of Saint Paule, The commandement is full, ho- Rom T. 12. 20 ly and good: iuft, or iuftice being referred to the Iudiciall; holy, or holineffe to the Ceremoniall:good, or honest to the Morall. The Iudiciall part is touching the gonernment of the common-wealth of the Ienes, in which manie things must need be proper to that estate, as such as were instituted either in respect of place or persons.

The Ceremoniall is divided into foure parts, according to the foure kindes of things, of which it speaketh, to wit, Sacrifice, Holie things, Sacraments, and Obferuances. To Sacrifices belong beafts, and the fruits of the earth; to Holy things the Tabernacle, Temple, Veffels, Altars, and the like; to Sacraments Circumcifion, the Paffeouer, and fuch like. For the Observances, they consisted either in prohibition of certaine meats, as not to eate the bloud and fat of beafts; or in some other

20 outward things, as in walkings, purifyings, annointings, and attire, as not to weare mixt garments of Linnen and Wollen; as also it prohibiteth other vnnaturall and vnproper commixtions, as thou shalt not yoke together in a plough an Oxe and an Asse, or cast mingled seede in one field. It also exhorteth naturall compassion; and forbiddeth crueltie euen to beafts, birds, and plants, whereby the creatures of God might be destroicd without any profit to man. For so some referre these precepts, Then shalt not kill the bird sitting on her nest, nor beate downe the first buddes of the tree, nor muzzle the labouring Oxe, and the like, to the Ceremoniall Law.

Neither is there any of these three parts of the law of Muses; but it hath as yet in some respects, the same power which it had before the comming of Christ. For 40 the Morall liueth still, and is not abrogated or taken away : fauing in the abilitie of instifying or condemning; for therein are we commanded to lone and worship God: and to vic charitie one towards another : which for ouer shall bee required at our hands. Therein also are wee in particular directed, how this ought to bee done: which power of directing by speciall rules and precepts of life, it retaineth still. For these things also are commanded in both Testaments to be observed though principally for the feare of God in the one, and for the loue of God in the other.

The Ceremoniall also liueth in the things which it foresignified. For the shadow is not destroied, but perfected, when the body it felfe is represented to vs. Besides, it ftill liueth, in that it giveth both instruction and testimonie of Christ, and in that it so giveth direction to the Church for some ceremonies and types of holy signification, which are still expedient; though in a farre fewer number than before Christs com-ming, and in a farre leffe degree of necessirie. Lastly, the Indiciall lineth in substance, and concerning the end, and the naturall and vniuerfall equitic thereof.

But the Morall faileth in the point of instification, the Ceremoniall as touching the vse and externall observation (because Christ himselfe is come, of whom the ceremonies were fignes and shadowes) and the Iudiciall is taken away, as farre forth as it was peculiar to the Iewes Common-weale, and policie.

A proposall of nine other points to be considered, with a touch of the five first.

S for that which remayneth in the generall confideration of the divine written Law, it may in effect bee reduced into these nine

- The dignitie and worth of the law.
- The Majestic of the law-giuer.
- The propertie and peculiaritie of the people receiving it.
- The conveniencie of the time in which it was given.
- The efficacie and power thereof.
- The difference and agreement of the old and new Testament.
- The end and vse of the Law.
- The fense and understanding of the Law.
- The durance and continuance thereof.
- 1. The dignitie of the Law is sufficiently proued by St. Paul in these wordes. Wherefore the Law is holy, and the Commandement is holy, and inst, and good: which three attributes are referred, as aforefaid, to the Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iu-
- 2. The Majestie of the Law-giuer is approued in all his creatures : who as hee hath given all things their lives, and beings, so he only gave the law, who could on- 20 ly give the end and reward promifed, to wit, the faluation of mankinde: but he gave it not to Moses immediately, but by the ministerie of Angels : as it is said. Andthe law was ordained by Angels, in the hand of a Mediatour : and in the Acts. He caue the law by the ordinance of Angels.
- 3. The proprietie and peculiaritie of the people, receiving this law, is in three respects. First, in that they were prepared; Secondly, in that they were a Nation apart and diffenered : Thirdly, in that they were the children of the promise made to Abraham. Prepared they were, because they had the knowledge of one God. when all other Nations were Idolaters. A Nation apart and feuered they were, because of Godschoise and election. Children of the promise they were, for the promise was made by God vnto Abraham, and his seede: not vnto his seedes, as to Esau and Jacob, but to his feede, as to Jacob, or Ifrael fingularly, of whom Christ. Now to ABRAHAM and his feede were the promifes made : he faith not to the feedes, as fleaking of many, but to thy feede, as of one, which is Christ.
- of many, out to 1my feeta, and your, immore const.

  4. The conteniencie of the time, in which it was given, is noted by S. Auguline: that it was about the middle time, between the Law of Nature, and Grace: the law of Nature continued from Adam to Moses: the law written in the Commandements, received by Moles in the worlds yeare 2514. continued to the Baprisme of Iohn: from which time begunne the Law of Grace, which shall continue to the worlds end. Other reasons for the conueniencie are formerly ginen.
- 5. The fifth confideration is of the efficacie of this law, the fame being a dispofition to, or figne of our justification : but not by it selfe sufficient, but as a figure of Christ in ceremonies, and a preparation to righteousnesse in morall precepts. For through the passion of Christ were sinnes forgiuen, who takethaway the sinnes of the world: and therefore S. Paul calleth the rudiments of the law beggerly and weake, Gal.4. beggerly as containing no grace, weake as not able to forgiue and inflifie. The bloud Hab 2. of Goates and Bulls, and the alhes of an Heifar could only cleanfe the body; but they were figures of Christs bloud, which doth cleanse the inward soule. For if the Gal x. law could instifie, then Christ died in vaine.

δ. X I.

Of the fixth point, to wit, of the difference and agreement of the old

He old and new Testament differ in name, and in the meane and way proposed for attaining to faluation; as the old by workes, the new by grace: but in the thing it selfe, or object and remote end, they agree: which is, mans happineffe and faluation.

The old Teftament, or Law, or Letter, or the Witnesse of Gods will, was called the old, because it preceded the new Testament; which is an explication of the old: from which the new taketh witnesse. Yet the new of more excellencie, in that it doth more lively expresse, and openly and directly delineate the 20 waies of our redemption. It is also called the old, to shew that in part it was to bee abrogated: In that he faith the new Testament, he hath abrogated the old. For the old Heb. c.3. v.12. law, though greatly extolled by the Prophets, and deliucred with wonderfull miracles, yet was it conflituted in a policie perishable: but the new was given in a promise of an cuerlasting Kingdome, and therefore called in the Apocalips, a Testament and Gospell for euer during.

The old Testament is called the law, because the first and chiefe part is the law of Moses, of which the Prophets and Psalmes are Commentaries, explicating that

The new Testament is called the Gospell, because the first and chiefe part there-30 of is the glad tidings of our redemption: the other Bookes, as the Epiftles or Letters of the Apolles, and the Acts or Storie of the Apolles, are plentifull interpreters thereof: The word Euangelian fignifying a joyfull, happic, and prosperous message, or (as Homer vsed it) the reward given to the Messenger, bringing joyfull newes. It is also sometime taken for a facrifice, offered after victorie, or other pleasing successes. as by Xenophon. In the Scriptures it hath three fignifications · First, for glad tidings in generall, as in Esay the 52. v. 7. concerning peace : Secondly, by an excellencie it is restrained to signific that most joyfull message of saluation, as in Luc. 2.10. whence also by figure it is taken for the Historie of Christ: and so wee vnderstand the foure Asi, s

Lastly, for the Preaching and disulging the doctrine of Christ, as Cor. 1.9. v. 14. and Cor. 2. 8. v. 18.

The agreement of both Tcftaments (taken, I thinke, as they are divided in volumes) is by Danaus comprised in these source.

In their Author.

In the fubstance of the Couenant, or things promised.

In the foundation, to wit, Christ.

In the Author they agree, because both are of God, and therefore both one Teframent and will of God in Substance of doctrine. For as there was ever one Church; 50 fo was there one couenant, one adoption, and one doctrine. As the old law doth point at Christ, so doth the new law teach Christ: the old proposing him as to come, the new as already come; one and the fame thing being promifed in both; both tending to one, and the fame end : even the faluation of our foules : which according to S. Peter is the end of our faith. For although it bee faid, that Mofes did promife by observing the law an earthly Kingdome, a land flowing with milke and honie, the propagation of children, and other worldly bleffings: yet all these were but figures to teach, and pledges to affure the Fathers of those spiritual bleffings by Christ; for by the earthly hee raifed their minds to the hope of heauenly. And the Fathers notwithstanding these worldly goods, did yet acknowledge themselues strangers, and pilgrimes, expecting the heavenly Hierusalem: according to this place of the Hebrewes: All these died in faith, and received not the promises, but law them a farre off and believed them confessing that they were strangers and pilgrimes on the earth. To which purpose also S. Avgvstine: Omnino pauci veterem legem intelligunt, non attendentes per promissaterrena aterna promitti. Few (faith hee) doe understand the old 10 law : not attending that by things earthly eternall are promifed. And S.HIEROME: Noluit Deus pascere Iudaos more pecorum corporalibus donis opibusque, vt Iudai somniant: God would not feede the Iewes as beafts with corporall gifts and riches as themselves dreame. And this may be gathered out of Gods owne words, Ego fum Deus tuus, er ero vohis in Deum: Iam thy God and I will bee your God. For the wordes, I will be your God. proue that it was not for the prefent, or for perishable things, that God gaue them this promife; but in respect of the future : to wit the safetie of their soules. For as God created both bodie and foule, fo hath he of his goodnesse, not left the better part vncared for, which liueth euer.

The agreement betweene the Old and New testament in substance, inferres also 20 the agreement in foundation. For Christ is called the foundation of the law, laid both by the Apostles and Prophets : in whom all the promises of God in the Old and New, are affured : the fathers having caten the same spiritual foode, which we

The agreement in effects is, in that the knowledge of our finne and miferie, which is taught vs by the law, maketh way, and as it were, serueth in subordination to the Gospell, the proper effects whereof are mercie and faluation: to which the law feruing as an introduction (for to those which acknowledge their sinne and miseric, God sheweth his mercie and saluation) may be said to agree with the Gospell in the effect. For otherwise if we seuer the law from subordination to the Gospell, the cf- 20 fects are very different: the one sheweth the way of righteousnesses by workes, the other by faith; the Law woundeth, the Gospell healeth: the Law terrifieth, the Gospell allureth; Moses accuseth, Christ desendeth: Moses condemneth; Christ pardoneth. The old reftraineth the hand, the new the minde. Data est lex que non fanaret (faith St. AVGVSTINE) fed que egrotantes probaret; The law was given not to Mamil. ad Rem. helpe but to discouer sicknesse : and S. CHRYSOSTOME, Data est lex, vt se homo inveniret, non vt morbus sanaretur, sed vt medicus quereretur; The law was giuen that man might finde and know his owne imperfection; not that his difease was thereby holpen; but that he might then feeke out the Philitian. For Christ came to faue the world, which the law had condemned. And as Moses was but a seruant, and Christ a sonne, so the 40 greatest benefit was reserved to be brought, as by the worthiest person, faith Cyril: for this law made nothing perfect, but was an introduction of a better hope.

> ð. XII. Of the rest of the points proposed.

He feuenth confideration is of the end, and vse of the law: which is to bring vs to Christ: for finding no righteousnesse in our owne works, we must secke it in some other. But this is the last, and remote, and 50 vtmost end: the next and proper end of the law, is to prescribe righteousnesse, and to exact absolute and perfect obedience to God. Cur (ed is he which continueth not in all the things of this law.

The second end of the law, is to render vs in excusable before God: who knowing so perfect alaw, doe not keepe it: the law requiring a perfect and intire, not a broken or halfe obedience: but both inward and outward rightcousnesse, and performance of dutie to God and Men.

The third and chiefe end of the law is, as hath beene faid, to fend vs to Christ, and his grace, being in our felues condemned and loft. For the law was deliuered with thunder, and with a most violent and searefull tempest, threatning eternall death.

The fourth end of the law was to deligne, and preferue, the place of the Church and true people of God: and to hold them in one Discipline, and awe, till the comming of Christ: after whom the Church was to be dispersed ouer the whole world. These be the ends of the Morall law. The end and vse of the Ceremonial law, is to confirme the truth of Christ, and the new Testament. The vse of the Iudiciall, to teach vs naturall equitie, and right, whereto we must conforme our selues.

The fense and understanding of the law is double, literall and spirituall: by the literall we are taught the worlhip and service of God: by the spirituall the figures and mysticall fore-speakings of Christ.

Lastly, for the durance or continuance of the law; the same had being vntill the paffion of Christ: before which time, and while Christ taught in the world, both the Genet. 40: 10. old and the new were in force. But after that the true facrifice was offered vpon the The Scepter Altar of the Croffe, then the Iewift facrifices and ceremonies, which were Types and from Itela. nor 20 figures of Christ (Christ being the body of those shadowes) ceased to binde the con- a Lawe-gine.

In token whereof the vaile of the Temple rent a funder; noting that the shile come. ceremoniall vailes and shadowes were now to be remoued, not that the morall law of the Commandements was hereby abolished, or weakened at all : otherwise then that it had not power to condemne according to the Iewish doctrine, as aforesaid. For the obseruing of the law was by Christ himselfe seuerely commanded : our loue towards God being thereby to be witneffed. And herein Danid fo much rejoyced, as he preferred the observation of the law, before all that the world could yeeld. In via testimoniorum tuorum delectatus sum, sicut in omnibus diuitis; Ihaue becne delighted 20 in thy law as in all manner of riches: And againe. The law of thy mouth is good for me aboue

John hath taught, to wit, that we keepe his Commandements : certainely he is but alvar, that professeth to love God, and neglecteth to observe the word of his will, with all his power. And though I confesse it is not in mans abilitie, without the speciall grace of God, to fulfill the law (Christ only as man excepted) yet if wee rightly conlider the mercifull care which God had of his people in those his Com-

of the seuerall Commandements of the Decalogue: and that the difficultie is not in respect of the Commandements, but by our

Or by the first we are commanded to acknowledge, serue, and loue one God. Now, whereby are we inticed to the breach of this precept? Fig. 6 (eing euery reasonable man may conceine and know, that infinite power cannot be divided into many infinites; and that it is of necessities to that by this almightie Vnitie, all things have beene caused, and are continued. And if brute beafts had this knowledge of their Creatour, and how in his prouidence he hath also prouided for every of them, which giveth to beaits their foode, &c. there is no doubt but that they would also serue and love himonly.

The fecond precept is the forbidding of Idolatrie, and worlhip of Images: the making whereof, out of doubt, was not the invention of an ill intent in the begin-Glotte in val. ming, feeing this is generally true. Omnia mala exempla bonis initiis orta funt; All ill examples did (bring and arife from good beginnings, For their first erection was to keep the memorie of men famous for their vertue; vntill (faith Lactantius ) the Deuill crept into them, and (hauing blotted out the first intent) working in weake and ignorant foules, changed the nature of the one, and the reason of the other, to serue himfelfe thereby. For what reasonable man, if he be not forsaken of God, will call on those blinde, deafe, dumbe, and dead flocks, more worthlesse then the most worthlesse of those, that having life and reason, implore their helpe, which have 30 neither: yea, of more vilde prize and bafer, then the bafeft of beafts, who have fenfe and estimation? for what doe wee thereby (faith the Wisedome of SALOMON) but call to the weake for helpe, pray to the dead for life, require aide of him that hath no experience, aftifiance in our journeis of him that cannot goe, and successe in our affaires of him that hathno power? And whether the Idolater, or the blocke, to which hee praieth. be more fenfeleffe: David maketh a doubt. For (faith he) they that make them are like unto them, and fo are all therest that trust in them.

The breach of the third Commandement is neither perswaded by worldly pleafure, nor worldly profit; the two greatest inchanters of mortall men. No, wee are no way allured to this horrible difdaine of God, vnleffe the hate of good men, and 40 Gods curfe, be accounted an advantage. For as our corruptest nature gives vs nothing towards it, so can it satisfience me appetite, except everlasting sorrow, and Hell dwell in our defire. And therefore this strange custome hath the Deuill brought vp among men, without all fubtletie of argument, or cunning perswasion, taking thereby the greatest and most scornefull advantage over vs. For slaughter fatisfierh hatred, Theft giues satisfaction to neede, Adulterie to lust, Oppression to conetonfineffe: but this contemptuous offence of blasphemie, and the irreverent abuse of Gods name, as it giveth no helpe to any of our worldly affections, so the most saluage Nations of the world doe not vse it.

The fourth Commandement, to keepe the Sabaeth day holy, hath neither paine, burthen, nor inconvenience. For it giveth rest to the labourer, and consolation to their Masters. And that this law was imposed on man for his benefit, Moses teacheth in the reason of the law; as in Exod, 23.12. And in the sewenth day thou shalt rest, that thine One and thine Affemay reft, and the sonne of thy maide, and the stranger may be

The first of the second Table to honour our Parents, with whom we are one and the same, is a gratitude which nature it selfe hath taught vs towards them, who after God gaue vs life and being, haue begotten vs, and borne vs, cherished vs in our weake and helpleffe infancie, and bestowed on vs the haruest and profit of their labours and cares. Therefore, in the Temporall and Iudiciall ordinances, curling of parents, or the offering them violence, was made death.

The next is, that thou shalt not Murther, that is, thou shalt not doe the acts following the affections of hatred. For the law of God, and after it our owne lawes, and in effect the law of all Nations, have made difference between flaughter cafuall, 10 and furious. Affectio enim tua (faith BRACTON) imponit nomen opers tuo; It is the affection and will that makes the worke fuch as it is. And certainely who focuer cannot for beare to commit murther, hath neither the grace of God, nor any vse of his owne

The third of the second Table, commands vs from adulterie. Now, if the prefernation of Virginitie have been poffible, for thousands of Men and Women, who Number relies in all ages have maftered their fleshly delires, and have returned chast to the grave: terram, Virginia It cannot be accounted a burthen, to forbeare the dishonour and injurie, which we offer to others by fuch a violation, feeing marriage is permitted by the lawes of God, and Men! to all that affect it. And there is no man living whom the defire of beau-20 tie and forme hath so constrained, but he might with ease for beare the prosequution of this ill : did not himselfe giue sucke to this Infant, and nourish warmth till it grow to from heate, heate till it turne to fire, and fire to flame.

The fourth of the fecond Table, is, that we shall not steale. And if that kind of violent robberie had beene vled in Moses time, which many Ruffians practise nowa-daies in England, and to the dishonour of our Nation more in England, than in any Region of the world among Christians, out of doubt, he would have censured them by death, and not by reflictation, though quadruple. For I speake not of the poore and miscrable soules, whom hunger and extreme necessitie inforceth, but of those detefted Theenes, who to maintaine themselves Lord-like, assault, robbe, and 20 wound the Merchant, Artificer, and Labouring man, or breake by violence into other mens houses, and spend in Bruterie, Drunkennesse, and voon Harlots, in one day, what other men fometime have laboured for all their lives: impourrishing whole families : and taking the bread and foode from the mouthes of their children. And that this Commandement might eafily be observed, it would soone appeare, if Princes would resolue, but for a few yeares to pardon none. For it is the hope of life, and the argument of sparing the first offence; that incourageth these Hellhounds. And if every man may prefume to be pardoned once, there is no state or common-wealth, but these men would in a short time impouerish or destroy it.

The fifth Commandement of this second Table, is, the prohibition of false witnoffe: from which if men could not forbeare; all furetie of estate, and life, were taken away. And so much did God detest a false witnesse, and a false accuser, especially in matters criminall, that the law ordained him to fuffer the fame death or punishment, which he fought by fallhood to lay on his brother.

The last of the ten Commandements forbiddeth vs to couet any thing, which belongeth to another man, either the bodies of their wives for concupifcence, or their goods for defire of gaine. And this precept feemeth the hardest for men to obferue; fo esteemed by reason of our fraile affections : and yet if wee judge hereof rightly, it may bee doubted whether it extend to all our inconfiderate fancies and vaine thoughts. For although it be not easie to master all our suddaine passions, yet 50 we may restraine and hinder their growing, and farther increase, if we please to intend our strength, and seeke for grace. How the word Coneting reacheth to all those it is to be considered. For Concupifeentia, according to some, Est offrenatus habendi appetitus; An unbridled, or unrestrained appetite of hauing: And as touching such an appetite, we cannot excuse our selues by any our naturall frailtie, or vnaduised error;

But, as I suppose, the word Concupiscence is more largely taken, either for a determinate and vabridled cuill intent, or for some vrging inclination thereunto. All the question is of the later fort : which is, Actus imperfectus, id est, non deliberatus ratione nucell principium proprium actus boni aut vitioli : Such palsions or inclinations are unperfeet acts, that is, not deliberated upon by reason, which is the proper principle of a good or vitious action. And fure, it may feeme, that fo long as wee relift fuch motions they harme vs not; as they fay, Quamdin refragamur nihil nocent: nocent autem cum eas dominari permittimus; As long as wee give no affent onto them, it is thought by somethat they hart us not : and that then only they hart when we suffer them to beare sway. But these men, as it feemes make nothing forbidden in this tenth precept, but what hath been to forbidden in the other: for in every Commandement, not only the outward act, but also the inward affent vnto euill, though it breake not out into act, is forbidden: therefore, that wee may know the difference betweene this Commandement and the reft, the distinction of desires is to be held; that some are with affent and unbridled; others bridled, and without affent. For so euen the Morall Philosopher can tell vs, that the Continent man hath cuill desires, but without affent (for they are bridled by the strength of right reason) as on the other side the Incontinent hath good defires, but restrained and suppressed by contrarie passions. The cuill defires when they are accompanied with affent, are in enery Commandement forbidden, together with the outward act : and therefore, if wee will have any thing proper to this 20 Commandement, we must needes say, that the cuill desires of the Continent man (that is, even those which we resist and bridle) are here forbidden. For though hee that bridleth his euill defires, be much better than he that veeldeth vnto them : vet fuch a man, even according to the Heathen Philosopher, is not worthy the name of a vertuous man. For Ariffotle himfelfe makes Continentia, not to be vertue, but only a degree vnto it : confessing, that though the Continent man doe well in bridling his cuill affections, yet he doth not all, feeing hee ought not fo much as to have them at all. Neither is it much more, that true divinitie delivereth touching this matter. For, as he faith, that in the Continent man the having of these euill desires, though he relift them, is the cause that he cannot be called a vertuous man; so we, that the 20 having of them is a finne. Only in this we excell him here: that we are able out of Divinitie to give the true reason of this doctrine : which is, that every one sinneth, that doth not loue God with his whole heart and affection: whence it followeth that the euill defires of the Continent man, that is, of him which bridleth them, must needs be finne; feeing fuch defires, though bridled, are a-pulling away of a part of our heart and affection from God.

Seeing therefore it hath pleafed God, to make vs know, that by our faithfull indenours to keepe his commandements, we witnesse our loue toward himselfe: wee may not fafely give libertie to our vanities, by cafting backe vpon God ( who is iuflice it selfe) that he hath given vs precepts altogether beyond our power, and commandements impossible for vs to keepe. For as he is accurfed (saith St. Hierome) that anowes that the law is in all things possible to bee observed: so hee hath made this addition. Maledictus qui dicit impossibilia Deum pracepisse; Accursed is hee that (aith that Godhath commanded things (in themselves, and not through our fault) impossible. Now, as the places are many which command vs to keepe the law: so is our weakenesse also in the Scriptures laid before vs, and therefore it is thus safely to bee vnderstood, that we should without euasion, or without betraying of our selues, doe our faithfull indeuours to observe them; which if we doe vnfainedly, no doubt, but God will accept our desires therein. For that there is no man just, Danid witnesseth. South macket out and the time to the way of the south of liberation; let euery mans conscience judge him, whether he give way willingly, or restraine himselfe in all that he can; yea, or no? For when a King gives to his subject a commandement upon paine of losse of his loue, to performe some service : if the fubicat neglecting the fame, feeke to fatisfie his Soneraigne with fhifting excuses, out of doubt fuch a Prince will take himfelfe to be derided therein.

d. XIIIÍ.

If there were not any Religion nor Iudgement to come, yet the Decalogue were most necessarie to be observed.

Снар.4.§.14.

Nd if we confider aduitedly and foberly, of the Morall law, or ten Commandements, which God by the hand of Moles gaue vnto his people, it will appeare that fuch was his mercifull proudence in the choise of them, as were there neither paine, nor profit adjoyned to the observing, or not observing of them, were there no divine power at all, nor any Religion among men, yet if we did not for our owne fakes striue to obferue these lawes: all societie of men, and all indeuours, all happinesse and contentment in this life would bee taken away : and every state and common-weale in the world fall to the ground and diffolue. Therefore, these lawes were not imposed as a burthen, but as a bleffing : to the end that the innocent might bee defended, that 20 euery man might enioy the fruits of his owne trauaile, that right might be done to all men from all men: that by inftice, order, and peace, wee might live the lives of reasonable men, and not of beasts; of free-men, and not of slaues; of civill men, and not of faluages. And hereof making our humane reason only Judge, Letvs see the inconveniences in this life which would follow by the breach and neglect of these

As first, what would the iffue be if wee acknowledged many Gods? would not a farre greater hatred, warre, and bloud-shed follow, than that which the difference of ceremonie, and diverlitie of interpretation, hath already brought into the world, euen among those Nations which acknowledge one God, and one Christ?

And what could it profit mankinde to pray to Idols, and Images of gold, mettall, dead stones, and rotten wood, whence nothing can be hoped, but the losse of time, and an impossibilitie to receive thence-from, either helpe or comfort.

The breach of the third Commandement bringeth there-with this disaduantage, and ill to man, that who foeuer taketh the name of God in vaine, shall not at any time benefit himselfe by calling God to witnesse for him; when hee may justly

The observing the Sabaoth holy, giveth rest to men and beasts, and nature her felfe requireth intermission of labour.

If we despise our Parents, who have given vs being, we thereby teach our owne 40 children to scorne and neglect vs, when our aged yeares require comfort and helpe at their hands.

If murther were not forbidden, and scuerely punished, the races of mankinde would be extinguished: and who focuer would take the libertie to destroy others, giueth libertie to others to destroy himselfe.

If adulterie were lawfull and permitted, no man could fay vnto himselfe, this is my sonne: there could be no inheritance proper, no honour descend to posteritie, no indeuour by vertue and vndertaking to raife families: murthers and poissinings betweene man and wife would be daily committed: and energy man subject to most filthie and vncleane diseases.

If stealth and violent rapine were suffered, all mankinde would shortly after perish, or line as the saluages, by rootes and acornes. For no man laboureth but to enioy the fruits thereof. And fuch is the mischiefe of robberie, as where Moses for leffer crimes appointed reflitution foure-fold, policie of State and necessitie hath made it death.

To permit false witnesses, is to take all mensiones and estates from them by corruption : the wicked would sweare against the vertuous : the waster against the wealthie: the idle begger and loiterer, against the carefull and painefull labourer: all triall of right were taken away, and inflice thereby banished out of the world.

The coueting of that which belongs to other men, bringeth no other profit than a distraction of minde, with an inward vexation: for while wee couet what appertaines to others, we neglect our owne : our appetites are therein fed with vaine and fruitlesse hopes, so long as we doe but couet; and if we doe attaine to the desire of the one, or the other, to wit, the wives or goods of our neighbours, wee can looke for no other, but that our selues shall also, either by theft or by strong hand, be de- 10 prined of our owne.

Wherein then appeareth the burthen of Gods Commandements, if there be nothing in them, but rules and directions for the generall and particular good of all liuing ? Surely, for our owne good, and not in respect of himseise, did the most mercitull and prouident God ordaine them; without the observation of which, the vertues of heavenly bodies, the fertilitie of the earth, with all the bleffings given vs in this life, would be vnto vs altogether unprofitable, and of no vse. For wee should remaine but in the state of brute beasts, if not in a farre more vnhappie con-

> δ. X V. Of humane Law, written and unwritten.

Vmane Law, of which now it followeth to speake, is first divided into two, viz. Written, and Vnwritten. The vnwritten confifts of vlage, approved by time : which Isidore calls Mores : and hee defines Mores to be Consuetudines vetustate probata, to be customes approved by antiquitie or unwritten lawes. Now custome differeth from vse, as the cause from the effect: in that custome is by vse and continuance established into a law: but yet 20 there where the law is defective, faith Isidore.

And of cultomes there are two generall natures, containing innumerable particulars, the first are written customes, received and exercised by Nations, as the cufromes of Burgundie, and Normandie: the ancient generall custome of England, and the customes of Castill, and other Provinces.

The fecond are these pettie customes, vsed in particular Places, Cities, Hundreds, and Mannors. The generall or Nationall customes are some written, others

The particular or pettie customes are seldome written, but witnessed by testimonie of the inhabitants. The customes of the Duchie of Cornewale comprehending 40 also the Stannerie of Deuon, as touching Tin, and Tin causes, are written in Deuon, but not in Cornewale. But how soeuer vse and time hath made these customes as lawes, In Reg. larin, v. 2 yet ought every custome to be rationabilis, as well as prascripta. Non firmatur tractu q.1.7. at.1. temporis quod de iure abinitio non subsissit; That which at first was not grounded whon good right, is not made good by continuance of time. And (faith V LPIAN) quod ab initio vitiosum est, non potest tractu temporis conualescere; Course of time amends not that which was naught from the first beginning. For these two defences are necessaring in all lawes of custome; the one, that it be not repugnant to the law dinine, and naturall: the other, that the cause and reason be strong, prouing a right birth, and necessarie continuance: it being manifest that every custome, which is against the law, had his 50 beginning from euill deedes, and therefore not without the former confiderations to be allowed. And it is true, that all customes of this nature were but tollcrated for a time, by the law-makers, though they have beene fince continued, because posteritie is not bound to examine by what cause their Ancestors were thereto mo-

ued. For non fufficit fimplex toleratio. And it is in this fort ouer-ruled in the law : Per populum consuetudo contra legem induci non potest, nisi de voluntate illius qui nouam legem, & nousm consistutionem statuere potest, qui solus princeps est; The people cannot bring in a new custome, against law: saue by his will, who hath power to make a new law and ordinance, which is only the Prince.

Humane Law generally taken, to wit, humane Law written, is by some defined to be the decree or doome of practique reason; by which humane actions are ruled and directed. Papinian calls the Law a common precept, the adulfement of Wifemen, and the restraint of offences committed, either willingly or ignorantly. Isido; e calls the Law a Constitution written, agreeing with Religion, fittest for Governement and common profit : And more largely, Omneid quod ratione confifit; All that stands with reason.

Lastly, and more precisely it is thus defined. Humane Law is a righteous decree, Greg. de Palets agreeing with the Law naturall, and eternall: made by the rationall difcourfe of Thangai artists those, that exercise publique authoritie: prescribing necessarie observances to the fubicet. That every law ought to bee a righteous decree, S. Augustine teacheth, faying : Mihilex effe non videtur, que iufla non fuerit ; It feemes to be no law at all to me. which is not just : and just it cannot be, except it agree with the law naturall and eternall. For there is no law inst and legitimate (faith S. Augustine) which the Law-

20 makers have not derived from the eternall. Nihil influm atque legitimum eft, quad L.t. delib. Ath. non ab aterna lege sibi homines deriuauerint.

Secondly, it ought to be constituted by discourse of reason, whereby it is distinguished from the law naturall, to wit, the naturall, indemonstrable, or needing no demonstration from whence the law humane is taken and deduced.

Thirdly, that it ought to bee made by an authorifed Magistracie, it cannot bee doubted, be the Gouernement of what kinde focuer. For it falleth otherwise vnder the Title of those decrees called Violentia, or inique constitutiones; Violences, or wicked constitutions.

Of humane Law there are foure properties, especially answering these foure 4. Parts, conditions in the former definition. First, as it is drawne out of the law of nature: fo enery particular of the humane law may be refolued into some principle or rule Tho.q.9.5.art.2. of the naturall.

Secondly, it is to be confidered as it is referred vnto, and doth respect the common good.

Thirdly, it is to be made by publique authoritie.

Fourthly, concerning the matter of the law it prescribeth, and directeth, all humane actions. And so is the Law as large and divers, as all humane actions are diuers, which may fall under it. For according to THOMAS, Alia lex IVLIA de Adulterijs, alia CORNELIA de Sicarijs; Thelaw of IVLIAN against Adulterie is one. 40 the CORNELIAN against Ruffians, is another. Now the humane law, generally taken, is in respect of the first of these considerations, divided into the law of Nations.

The Law of Nations is taken leffe or more properly; leffe properly for every law which is not of it felfe, but from other higher principles deduced; and so it feemeth that Vipian vnderstands it : for he defineth Ius gentium, or the Law of Nations, to be that which is only common amongst Men, as Religion, and the worship of God: which is not in the very nature of this law of Nations: but from the principles of the Scriptures, and other divine Revelations. But the law of Nations properly taken, is that distate, or sentence, which is drawne from a very probable, though not from an cuident principle, yet so probable that all Nations doc affent ynto the conclusion, as that the free passage of Ambassadours be granted betweene enemies, &c. which Nationall law according to divers acceptions, and divers confiderations had of the Humane law, may be sometime taken for a Species of the Naturall, fometime of the Humane.

Jus Cinile, or the Civill Law, is not the same in all Common-wealths, but in diuers chates it is also divers and peculiar, and this law is not so immediately derived from the law of Nature, as the law of Nations is ; For it is partly deduced out of fuch principles as all Nations doe not agree in, or cafily affent vnto; because they depend on particular circumstances, which are divers, and doe not fit all estates, Intes 6, to ff. Hercof V LPIAN, Inscinile, neque in totum à naturali & gentium recedit, neque per om-de luftita ture, nis ei feruit : itag, cum aliquid addinus vel detrahimus Iuri communi, Ius proprium, id est, Civile efficients; The Civill law (faith he) doth neither wholly differ from the law of nature. and nations, nor yet in all points obay it : therefore, when we adde ought to, or take from the Law that is common, we make a Law proper, that is, the Civill Law. The law now commonly called the Civill Law, had its birth in Rome; and was first written by the Decem-viri, 202. yeares after the foundation of the Citie. It was compounded afwell out of the Athenian, and other Grecian lawes, as out of the ancient Romane customes and lawes Regall. The Regall lawes were deuised by the first Kings, and called Leges Regie, or Papyriane, because they were gathered by Papyrine, Turquin then raigning. For though so many of the former lawes as maintained Kingly authoritie were abolished, with the name vet those of Servius Tullius, for Commerce and Contracts, and all that appertained to Religion, and common vtili-(Signal, 1, out tie, were continued, and were a part of the lawes of the twelue Tables. To these of Tomponius. lawes of the twelve Tables were added (as the times gaue occasion) those made by 20 the Senate, called Senatufconfulta: those of the common people, called Plebifeita: those of the Lawyers, called responsa prudentum: and the Edicts of the Annual Magiffrate: which Edicts being first gathered and interpreted by Iulian, and presented to Adrian the Emperour, they were by him confirmed and made perpetuall lawes: and the Volume stilled Edictum perpetuum; as those and the like Collections of Justinian afterward were.

The difference anciently between Lawes and Edicts, which the French call Reglements, confifted in this, that lawes are the Constitutions made or confirmed by soperaigne authoritie (be the foueraigntie in the people, in a few, or in one) and are withall generall and permanent: but an Edict (which is but Iuffum Magistratus, vn- 20 leffe by authoritie it be made a law) hath end with the officer, who made the fame, faith VARRO. Qui plurimum Edicto tribuunt, legem annuam effe dicunt; They who ascribe the most unto an Edict, say that it is a law for one yeare: Though Isidore doth also expresse by the word Constitutions or Edicts, those Ordinances called Acts of Prerogatines: as Constitutio vel Edictumest quod Rex, vel Imperator constituit, vel edicit; An Ordinance or Edict is that which a King or Emperour doth ordaine or proclaime.

Laftly, the Humane law is divided into the Secular, and into the Ecclefiafticall, or Canon. The Secular commanding temporall good, to wit, the peace and tranquilitic of the Common-wealth: the Ecclesiallicall the spirituall good, and right Gouernement of the Ecclefiasticall Common-wealth, or Church, illud natura legem, hoc divinam 40 spectat: That respecteth the Law of nature, this the law of God. And so may Ius Civile be taken two waies: first, as distinguished from the law of Nations, as in the first division: Secondly, as it is the fame with the Secular, and divers from the Ecclefiallicall. But this division of the Schoolemen is obscure. For although the Civill be the same with the Secular, as the Civillis a law, yet the Secular is more generall, and comprehendeth both the Ciuill, and all other lawes not Ecc'efiasticall. For of Secular lawes, in vse among Christian Princes, and in Christian Commonweales, there are three kinds; the Civill which hath everywhere a voice; and is in all Christian estates (England excepted) most powerfull; the Lawes of Fingland called Common, and the Lawes of custome or Provinciall. In Spaine besides the Law Civill, they have the customes of 50 Castall, and other Provinces: In France besides the Civill, the customes of Burgundie, Bloys, Berri, Niuernois, and Lodunois, &c. Tous lieux litues & afis en Lodunois, feront gouernez felon les costumes du dit Pays; All places lying within the precincts of Lodunois, shall bee governed according to the customes of that place.

There are also in France the cultomes of Normandie, and these of two kindes: Generall, and Locall; and all purged and reformed by divers Acts of the three efforces. The Charters of confirmation of these ancient cultomes, before and fince their reformation have these wordes. Wes autem, registrum pradictum, wsus landabiles, etconsuetudines antiquas, &c. Laudamus approhamus & authoritate Regia confirmamus: The Register aforesaid, laudable vsc, and ancient customes, we praise, approve, and by our Kingly authoritie confirme. The common law of England is also compounded of the ancient customes of the same, and of certaine Maximes by those customes of the Realme approved. Vpon which customes also are grounded those Courts of Re-10 cord, of the Chancerie, Kings Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, with other small

feifed, nor otherwife destroied, but he must first be put to answere by the law of the land, was confirmed by the Statute of Magna Charta. It is by the ancient custome of England that the eldest Sonne should inherite without partition : In Germanie, France, and elsewhere otherwise, and by partition. In Ireland it is the custome for all lands (that have not been religned into the Kings hands) that the eldest of the house shall enjoy the inheritance during his ownelife; and so the second and third 20 eldeft (if there be fo many brothers) before the Heire in lineall descent; this is called the custome of Tanistrie. For example, if a Lord of land have foure Sonnes, and the eldest of those four chaucalso a sonne, the three brothers of the eldest sonne. shall after the death of their brother; enjoy their Fathers lands before the Grandchild: the custome being grounded upon the reason of necessitie. For the Irish in former times having alwaies lived in a subdivided Civill warre, not only the greatest against the greatest, but every Baron and Gentleman one against another, were inforst to leave fuccessors of age and abilitie to defend their owne Territories. Now as in Normandie, Burgundie, and other Provinces of France, there are certaine peculiar. and pettie customes, besides the great and generall custome of the land, so are there 30 in England, and in curry part thereof. But the greatest bulke of our lawes, as I take it, are the Acts of Parliament : lawes propounded and approved by the three estates of the Realme, and confirmed by the King, to the obedience of which all men are therefore bound, because they are Acts of choise, and selfe desire. Leges nulla alia VIp. ff. de Logi causa nos tenent quam quodiudicio populi recepta sunt; The lawes doe therefore binde the Leg. 32. subject, because they are received by the indgement of the subject. Tum demum human ale- Any dewerare. ges habent vim fuam; cum fuerint non modo infitute, sed etiam firmate approbatione com-munitatii; It is then that humane lawes haue their strength; when they shall not only bee de-dift. a. Cimin. uiled, but by the approbation of the people confirmed.

Isidore fasteneth these properties to every Christian law; that the same be honest; 40 that it be possible, that it be according to Nature, and according to the custome of the Countrie; also for the time and place convenient, profitable, and manifest, and without respect of private profit, that it be written for the generall good. Hee also giues foure effects of the law, which Modestinus comprehends in two: to wit, obligation, and instigation: the former binds vs by feare, to avoide vice: the later incourageth with hope, to follow vertue. For according to Ciceso, Legem oportet elle vitiorum emendatricem, commendatricemá, virtutum; It behoueth the law to bee a mender of vices, and a commender of vertues. The part obligatorie or binding vs to the obseruation of things commanded or forbidden, is an effect common to all lawes; and it is two-fold, the one constraineth vs by feare of our consciences, the other by feare 50 of external punishment. These two effects the law performeth, by the exercise of those two powers, to wit, Coactine, and Directine.

The second of these two effects remembred by Modestinus, is Instigation, or incouragement to vertue, as Aristotle makes it the end of the law, to make men vertuous. For lawes being fuch as they ought to be, doe both by prescribing and for10 bidding, vrge vs to well-doing: laying before vs the good and the cuill, by the one and the other purchased. And this power affirmative commanding good, and power negative forbidding euill, are those into which the law is divided, as touching the matter : and in which David comprehendeth the whole body and fubstance thereof: saying, Declina a malo, & fac bonum; Decline from euill, and doe

ð. XVI.

That only the Prince is exempt from humane lawes, and in what fort.

Ow whether the power of the humane Law be without exception of any person, it is doubtfully disputed among those that have written or this subject, as well Diumes as Lawyers: and namely, whether Soue-graigne Princes be compellable; yea, or no? But whereas there are two powers of the law, as aforefaid, the one Directive, the other Coactive: to the power Directive, they ought to be subject, but not to that which constraineth. For as touching violence or punishments, no man is bound to giue a preiudiciall 20 judgement against himselfe: and if equals have not any power over each other, much leffe haue inferiours ouer their superiours, from whom they receive their authoritic and strength.

And speaking of the supreme power of lawes, simply then is the Prince so much about the lawes, as the foule and body vnited, is aboue a dead and fenfeleffe carcaffe. For the King is truly called, Ius viuum & lex animata; An animate and living law. But this is true, that by giving authoritie to lawes, Princes both adde greatnesse to themfelices, and conferue it, and therefore was it faid of Bracton out of IVSTINIAN. Merito debet Rex tribuere legi, quod lex attribuit ei : nam lex facit vt ipfe fit Rex : Right fully ought the King to attribute that to the law, which the law first attributeth to the King, for it is the 20 law that doth make Kings.

But whereas Bracton ascribeth this power to the humane law, he is therein mistaken. For Kings are made by God, and lawes divine : and by humane lawes only declared to be Kings. As for the places remembred by the Diuines and Lawiers, which inferre a kinde of obligation of Princes, they teach no other thing therein, than the bond of conscience, and profit arising from the examples of vertuous Princes, who are to give an accompt of their actions to God only.

Tibi foli peccaui, faith DAVID; Against thee only have I sinned : therefore, the Prince cannot be faid to be subject to the law. Princeps non subjectur lezi; For secing according to the Schoolemen, the law humane is but quoddam organum & instrumen- 40 tum potestatis gubernatina: non videtur posse eius obligatio ad eum se extendere, ad quem ipsavis potestatis humana non pertinet : sed vis potestatis humananon se extendit ad gubernatorem, in quo illa residet. Ergo neg, lex condita per talem potestatem obligare potest ipsum conditorem. Omnis enim potentia actiua, est principium transmutandi aliud; Seeing humane law (fay they) is but a kinde of organ, or instrument, of the power that governeth, it seemes that it cannot extend it selfe to binde any one whom no humane power can controll, or lay hold off: but the governour himfelfe, in whom the governing power dothrefide, is a person that cannot by himselfe, or by his owne power becontrolled. And therefore the law which is made by such a power, cannot binde the law-maker himselfe: for every active abilitie is a cause or principle of alteration in another body, not in the body in which it selfere- 50 fides. And feeing Princes have power to deliver others from the obligation of the Gree de Valen- law : Ergo etiam potest ipsemet Princeps sine legislator sua se voluntate pro libito ab obligatione legis liberare; Therefore also may a Prince or law-maker at his owne will and pleasure deliner himselfe from the bond of the law. Therefore in the rules of the law it is thus concluded. Subditi tenentur leges observare necessitate coactionis, Princeps verò sola voluntate fua, & intuitu boni communis; The subjects are bound to fulfill the law by necessitie of compulsion, but the Prince only by his owne will, and regard of the common good

Now concerning the politique lawes, given by Moles to the Nation of the Ifraelites, whether they ought to be a Prefident, from which no civil institutions of other people should presume to digresse, I will not presume to determine, but leave it as a question for such men to decide, whose professions give them greater abilitie. Thus much I may be bold to affirme, that we ought not to feeme wifer than God himfelfe, to who hath told vs that there are no lawes fo righteous, as those which it pleased him to give to his Elect people to be governed by. True it is, that all Nations have their feuerall qualities, wherein they differ, euen from their next borderers, no leffe than in their peculiar languages: which disagreeable conditions to gouerne aptly, one and the fame law very hardly-were able. The Roman civill lawes did indeede containe in order, a great part of the then knowne world, without any notable inconvenience, after fuch time as once it was received and become familiar : vet was not the administration of it alike in all parts, but yeelded much vnto the naturall customes of the fundric people, which it gouerned. For whether it be through a long continued perswalion; or (as Astrologers more willingly grant) some in-20 fluence of the Heagens; or peraduenture some temper of the soile and climate, af-foording matter of propocation to vice (as plentie made the Sybarites luxurious: want and opportunitie to steale, makes the Arabians to bee Theenes) very hard it were to forbid by law, an offence fo common, with any people, as it wanted a name, whereby to be diftinguished from instand honest. By such rigour was the Kingdome of Congo vnhappily discreted from the Christian Religion, which it willingly at the first embraced, but after with great furie rejected, because pluralitie of Wives was denied vnto them, I know not how necessarily, but more contentiously than seasonably. In such cases, mee thinks, it were not amisse to consider, that the high God him felfe permitted fomethings to the Ifraelites, rather in re-

20 gard of their naturall disposition (for they were hard-hearted) than because they were confonant vnto the ancient rules of the first perfection. So, where even the generall nature of man doth condemne (as many things it doth) for wicked and vniust; there may the law, given by Mofes, worthily be deemed the most exact reformer of the cuill, which forceth man, as neare as may bee, to the will and pleasure of his Maker. But where nature or custome hath entertained, a vicious, yet not intollerable habite, with folong and fo publique approbation, that the vertue oppoling it, would feeme as vincouth, as it were to walke naked in England, or to weare the English fashion of apparell in Turkie: there may a wife and vpright Law-giuer, without prefumption, omit somewhat that the rigour of Moses his law required; 40 cuenas the good King Hezekia did, in a matter meerely Ecclefiasticall, and therefore the leffe capable of diffeen fation, praying for the people; The good Lord bee mer- 2. Chron. cap. 30, cifull vnto him, that prepareth his whole heart to feeke the Lord God, the God of v,18.19. bis Fathers, though he be not cleanfed according to the purification of the Sanctuarie: which praier the Lord heard and granted.

To this effect it is well observed by Master Doctor Willet, that the morall Indicialls of Moles doe partly binde, and partly are let free. They doe not hold affirmatiuely that we are tied to the same severitie of punishment now, which was inflicted then; but negatively they doe hold, that now the punishment of death fhould not be adjudged, where fentence of death is not given by Mofes: Christian 50 Magistrates ruling vnder Christ the Prince of peace, that is, of Clemencie and Mer- 1619.

cie, may abate of the feueritic of Mofes law, and mitigate the punishment of death, but they cannot adde vnto it to make the burden more heavie; for to shew more rigour than Mofes, becommeth not the Gospell.

But I will not wander in this copious argument, which hath beene the subject of many learned discourses, neither will I take vpon mee, to speake any thing defini-

The Storie of the Israelites from the receiving of the Law, to the death of Moses.

Of the numbring and disposing of the Host of Ifrael, for their marches through the Wildernesse; with a note of the renerence giness to the worship of God, in this ordering of their troupes.

Hen Mofes had received the law from God, and published it among the people, and finished the tabernacle of the Aske and Sundinarie; her mustered all the Tribes and Families of Issale; and hausing seen what numbers of men, fit to beare armes, were found in every Tribe, from 20. yeares of age vpwards; he appointed vinto them, by direction from the Lord, such princes and Leaders, as in worth and reputation were in every Tribe most eminent. The number of the whole armie was 603550 able men for the warres, besides women and children; also, besides the frangers which followed them out of Leppt. This great Armie was divided by Mofes into foure 30 groffe and mightie Battalions, each of which contained the ftrength of three whole Tribes.

The first of these containing 186400. able men, consisted of three R egiments, which may well, in respect of their numbers, be called Armies; as containing the three whole Tribes of hadds, flightbar, and Zabulen. In the Tribe of hadds were 74600 fighting men, led by Nathan, lind hadden, flather of the Standard of the Tribe of hadds, who held the Vantquard, and was the first that moued and marched, being lodged and quartered at their generall incamping on the East side of the Armie; which was held the first place, and of greater dignitic.

15 The fecond Battalion or Armie, called in the Scriptures the Hoft of Reuben, Indicioned vinto it Simeon and Gad, in number 151450. All which marched vinder the Standard of Reuben. In the Tribe of Reuben were 46500, under Elizar: in Simeon 59300, under Shelmirel, in Gad 45650, under Elizar in Giber and incamped on the South fide of the Tabernacle.

The third Armie marched under the Standard of Ephraim, to whom were iouned the Regiments of Standfe and Beniamin; who, ioyned together, made in number 108100. alble men. The semanthed in the third place, incamping on the West quarter of the Tabernacle. Ephraim had 40500, under Elishama: Manusse 32000, under Gamilel: Beniamin 3,400, under Abidam.

The fourth and laft Armie, or Squadron, of the generall Armie, containing 157600. able men marched valuet the Standard of Dan; to whom were ioyned the two Tribes of Nephrali and Albor. And the Bhad the Rereward, and moued laft, incamping on the North lide. Dan had 62700. vnder Abiezer: Alber 41500. vnder Pariel: Nephrali 37. abov, nder Abir.

Thus much (as in honour of the Indiciall Law, or rather of him that gaue it) I may well and truly fay, that the defence of it hath alwaies beene very plaufible. And furely, howlocuer they bee not accepted (neither were it expedient) as a generall and only law; yet shall wee hardly finde any other ground, whereon the conscience of a Judge may rest, with equall satisfaction, in making interpretation, or giuing sentence vpon doubts, ariling out of any Law besides it. Belides these Princes of the seugrall Tribes, there were ordained Captaines oner Thousands, ouer Hundreds, ouer Fifties, and ouer Tens; as it may appeare by that mutinic and infurrection against Moses, Numb. 16. v. 1. & 2. For there arose vp against Moles 250. Captaines of the Assembly, famous in the Congregation, and men of renowne: of which number were Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Which three principall Mutiners, with those 250. Captaines that followed them, were not any of the twelue Princes of the Tribes, or Generall Colonells before spoken of, as by their names Num. 1. is made manifest.

The bleffing which Ifrael gaue to his children, tooke place not only in the divifion of the Land of promife, and other things of more confequence, long after fol- 10 lowing, but even in forting them under their feuerall Standards in the wilderneffe it was observed. For Iudah had the precedencie and the greatest Armie, which also was wholly compounded of the fonnes of Lea, Iacobs wife. Reuben having loft his birth-right, followed in the fecond place, accompanied with his brother Simeon. who had vndergone his Fathers curse; and with Gad, the sonne of his Mothers Hand-maide. Inseph, who in temporall bleffings had the prerogative of the first borne a double portion, was accounted as two Tribes, and divided into two Regiments: the yonger (according to Iscobs prophecie) taking place before the Elder. He was affilted by Beniamin, his best beloued brother, the other sonne of Rachel. To Dan, the eldest sonne of Jacobs Concubines, was given the leading of the fourth Ar- 22 tnie, according to Jacobs prophecie. Hee had with him under his Standard none of the children of Lea, or Rachel, but only the fonnes of the Hand-maides.

In the middle of these foure Armies, was the Tabernacle, or portable Temple of the Congregation carried, fur-rounded by the Leuites. Neare vnto which, as the Heathens and Pagans could not approch, by reason of these source powerfull Armies, which guarded the same: so was it death for any of the children of Ifrael to come nearest, who were not of the Leuites, to whom the charge was committed. So facred was the moueable Temple of God, and with fuch reuerence guarded and transported, as 22000, persons were dedicated to the service and attendance thereof: of which 8580, had the peculiar charge, according to their feuerall offices and 20 functions; the particulars whereof are written in the third and fourth of Aumbers, And as the Armics of the people observed the former order in their incampings; so did the Leuites quarter themselves, as in an inner square, on every side of the Tabernacle; The Geffurites on the West, within the Armie, and Standard of Ephraim, oner whom Eliasaph commanded, in number 7500. The familie of Cohath on the South fide, guided by Elizaphan, within the Armie of Reuben, and betweene him and the Tabernacle, in number 8600. The third companie were of the familie of Mer. ri, ouer whom Zuriel commanded, in number 6200 and these were lodged on the North fide within the Armie of Dan; On the East fide, and next within those Tribes and Forces which Indah led, did Moles and Aaron lodge, and their chil- 40 dren, who were the first and immediate Commanders, both of the Ceremonies and of the People; vnder whom, as the chiefe of all the other Leuiticall families, was Eleazar the sonne of Aaron, his successour in the high Priest-hood.

This was the order of the Armie of Israel, and of their incamping and marching: the Tabernacle of God being alway fet in the middle and center thereof. Thereuerend care, which Mofes the Prophet and chosen servant of God, had in all that belonged euen to the outward and least parts of the Tabernacle, Arke and Sanctuarie, witneffed well the inward and most humble zeale borne towards God himselfe. And because the passage through fo many Defarts and Mountaines, was exceeding difficult: Moles leaving nothing vinforethought which might ferue for the advancement of his enterprize, he inflantly intreated his Father-in-law, whom in the tenth of Numbers he calleth Hobab to accompanie them in their journey towards Canaan : promifing him fuch part and profit of the enterprize, as God should bestow on them: for this man as hee was of great vnderstanding and judgement (as appeared by the counsaile he gaue to Moles for the appointing of Judges ouer the people) so was he a perfect guide in all those 10 parts, himselfe inhabiting on the frontier thereof, at Midian or Madian; and (asir feemeth) a man of great yeares and experience, for he was then the Priest or Prince of Madian, when Mofes fled first out of Agypt, and married his Daughter: which was 42. yeares before this request made. And though Mofes himselfe had lived 40. veares in these parts of Arabia, through which he was now to trauaile : yet the better to affure his paffage, and fo great a multitude of foules, which could not bee fo few as a Million: it was necessarie to vse many guides and many conducters. To this request of Moses it may seeme by the places, Exed. 18.27. and Num. 10.30. that lethro, otherwise called Hobab, yeelded not : for it is euident that he went backe from Indicated Mofes into his owne Countrie. ### ð. III.

The voiage from Horeb to Kades: the mutinies by the way: and the cause of their turning backe to the red Sea.

Fter this diffmiffion of Hobab, Ifrael beganne to march towards the De-Jarts of Paran: and after three daies wandring, they fate downe at the Sepulchers of luft, afterward called Tabeera, or Incensio: by reason that God confumed with fire those Mutiners and Murmurers, which rose vp in this remoue, which happened about the 23.day of the same Mo-neth. And from this 23, day of the second moneth, of the second years, they rested and fed themselues with Quailes (which it pleased God by a Sea-wind to cast upon them) to the 24. day of the third moneth, to wit, all the moneth of Sinan or June: Num.11. & 33. whereof furfaiting there died great numbers : from whence in the following moneth, called Thamus, answering to our July, they went on to Hazeroth: where Miriam 40 the fifter of Moles was stricken with the leaprosie, which continued upon her seven daies, after whose recouerie I/rael removed toward the border of Idumaa: and incamped at Rithma, neare Kades Barnea, from whence Moles fent the twelve discoverers into the Territorie of Canaan: both to informe themselves of the fertilitie and strength of the Countrie: as also to take knowledge of the Waies, Passages, Rivers, Fords, and Mountaines. For Arad King of the Canaanites furprised divers companics of the Ifraelites, by lying in ambush neare those waies: through which the discoursers and searchers of the Land had formerly past. Now, after the returne of the discouerers of Cades, the wrath of God was turned against Ifrael; whose ingratitude and rebellion after his fo many benefits, fo many remissions, fo many mira- 50 cles wrought, was fuch, as they eftermed their deliuerance from the Egyptian flauerie, his feeding them, and conducting them through that great and terrible Wildernesse (for so Moses callethit) with the victorie which hee gave them against the powerfull Amalekites, to be no other than the effects of his hatred, thinking that hee led them on and preferued them, but to bring them, their wives, and children to be flaughtered, and given for a prey and spoile to the Amorites or Canaanites. For it was reported vnto them, by the fearchers of the Land, That the Cities of their enemies were walled and defended with many firong Towers, and Castles: that many of the people were Giantlike ( for they confest that they saw the sonnes of Angethere) who were men of fearefull flature, and fo farre ouer-topped the Ifraelites, as they appeared to them, and to themselves, but as Grashoppers in their respect, Now, as this mutinie exceeded all the rest, wherein they both accused God, and consulted to choose them a Captaine (or as they call it now-a-daies, an Electo) to carrie them backe againe into Agypt: fo did God punish the same in a greater measure, than any of the former. For he extinguished every foule of the whole multitude (Iofua and Caleb excepted) who being confident in Gods promifes, perfwaded the people to enter Canaan, being then neare it, and at the mountaine foote of Idumaa: which is but narrow, laying before them the fertilitie thereof; and affuring them of victorie. But as men, whom the passion of feare had bereaued, both of reason and common fenfe: they threatned to flone thefe encouragers to death: accounting them as Num. 14.10; men either desperate in themselves, or betraiers of the lives, goods, and children of all their bretheren, to their enemies; but God relifted these wicked purposes, and interpoling the feare of his bright glorie betweene the vnaduifed furie of the multi-

20 tude, and the innocencie and constancie of his fernants; preserved them thereby from their violence: threatning an intire destruction of the whole Nation, by sending among them a confuming and mercileffe peftilence. For this was the tenth in- Num. 14, 7,22, furrection and rebellion, which they had made, fince God deligered them from the flauerie of the Agyptians. But Males (the mildest or meekest of all men) praied vnto Numas vas God to remember his infinite mercies : alleadging that this fo feuere a judgemen how descruedly soeuer inflicted, would increase the pride of the Heathen Nations: and give them occasion to vaunt that the God of Ifrael failing in power to performe his promifes, fuffered them to perifh in these barren and fruitlesse Desarts. Yet as God is no leffe just than mercifull, as God is flow to anger, so is his wrath a confuming

30 fire: the same being once kindled by the violent breath of mans ingratitude; and therefore, as with a hand leffe heavie than hoped for, he footrged this injustic, fo by the measure of his glorie (euermore jealous of neglect and derision) hee suffered not the wicked to palle vnpunished; referuing his compassion for the innocent: whom, because they participated not with the offences of their Fathers, hee was pleased to preserve, and in them to performe his promises, which have never beene frustrate.

Of their unwillingnesse to returne : with the punishment thereof, and of divers accidents in the returne.

Ow when Mofes had reueiled the purposes of God to the people: and made them know his heavie displeasure towards them : they beganne to bewaile themselues, though ouer-late; the times of grace and mens repentance, having also their appointment. And then when God had left them to themselves, and was no more among them, after they had so often plaid and dallied with his mercifull sufferings, They would needes amend their former disobedience by a second contempt: and make offer to enter the Land contrarie agains to the adulfe of Mofes : who affured them. that God was not now among them : and that the Arke of his couenant should not moue, but by his direction, who could not erre: and that the enemies fword which God had hitherto bended and rebated, was now left no leffe sharpe than death; and in the handes of the Amalekites, and Canaanites no leffe cruell. But as men from whom God hath with-drawne his grace, doe alwaies follow those counsells which carrie them to their owne destructions: so the Hebrewes after they had for laken the opportunitie by God and their Conductors offered : and might then have entred Indea before their enemies were prepared and joyned; did afterward, contrarie to Gods commaundement, vndertake the enterprise of themselves; and ranne headlong and without adulfe into the mountaines of Idumaa. There the Canaanites and the Amalekites being joyned and attending their aduantage, fet on them, brake them: and of their numbers flaughtered the greatest part : and following their victorie and purfaste, confumed them all the way of their flight euen vnto Hormah : the Amalekites in revenge of their former loffe, and overthrowe at Raphidim: the Canaanites to preuent their displantation and destruction threatned. Of which power- 10 full affemblie of those two Nations (affisted in all likelihood with the neighbour Kings joyned together for their common fafetie ) it pleafed God to forewarne Mo-(es, and to direct him another way, than that formerly intended. For hec commaunded him to returne by those painefull passages of the deferts, through which they had formerly trauelled, till they found the bankes of the red Sea againe : in which retraite before they came backe to paffe ouer tordan there were confumed 38. yeares; and the whole number of the fixe hundreth and odde thousand, which came out of Egypt (Moles Jolhua and Caleb excepted) were dead in the Wilderneffe, the stubborne and carelesse generations were wholy worne out, and the promifed Land beflowed on their children: which were increased to 600000, and 20 more. For belides the double fault both of refuling to enter the Land vpon the returne of the discourrers, and the presumption then to attempt it, when they were countermainded; it feemeth that they had committed that horrible Idolatry of worshipping Moloch, and the Host of heaven. For although Moles doth not mentionit, yet Imos doth, and so doth the Martyr Stephen; as also that the Ifraelites worthipped the Sunne and Moone in after-times it is proued out of fundrie

Now after the broken companies were returned to the Campe at Cades, Moles, according to the commaundement received from God, departed towards the South from whence he came, to recouer the shoares of the Red Sea. And so from 20 Casles or Rithma he removed to Remmonparez, so called of abundance of Pomegranates there found and divided among them. From thence hee went on to Libral, taking that name of the frankingense there found. From Librah hee crost the valley, and fate downe at Reffa neare the foot of the mountaine. And after he had refted there, he bended towards the West, and incamped at Ceelsta: where one of the Hebrewes, for gathering broken wood on the Sabaoth, was stoned to death. After which, Moles alwaies keeping the valley, between two great ledges of mountaines (those which bound the Desert of Sin, and those of Pharan) cross the same from Ceelata; and marched Eastward to the mountaine of Sapher, or Sepher ; this making the Twentieth manlion. From thence hee paffed on to Harada; then to Maceloth; 40 and then to Thahahand fo to Thara or Thare the foure & twentieth manfion. Where while Mofes rested, the people began that infolent and dangerous mutinie, of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram: who for their contempt of God and his Ministers were some of them swallowed vp aliue, and by the earth opening her mouth deuoured, others euen two hundred and fiftie which offered incense with Korah were consumed with fire from heauen; & 14700. of their partie, which murmured against Moses, stricken dead with a fudden peftilence : one of the greatest meruailes and judgements of God. that hath beene shewed in all the time of Moses his government, or before. For among fo great a multitude, those lay-men who would have vsurped Ecclesiaflicall authoritie, were fuddenly swallowed up aline into the earth with their fami- 50 lies and goods; euen while they fought to ouerthrowe the Order, Discipline, and power of the Church, and to make all men alike therein, rebelliously contending against the High Priest and Magistrate, to whom God had committed the gomernment both of his Church and Common-weale of his people, And the better to affure the people, and out of his great mercie to confirme them, it pleafed him in this place also to approue by miracle the former election of his fernant amon, by the twelue roddes giuen in by the Heads of the twelue Tribes; of which Mossis received one of cuery Head and Prince of his Tribe: which being all withered and drie Wands, and on euery rod the name of the Prince of the Tribe written, and Amons on that of Leta; it pleased God, that the rod of Amon received by his power a vegetable Spirit, and having laine in the Tabernacle of the Congregation before the Arke one night, had on it both Buds, Blossomes, and ripe Almonds.

10 From Tharab the whole Armic removed to Methna; and thence to Efmona; and thence to Maferath, (or Mafarir after S. Hierome) and from Maferath to Beneiacan; and fo to Gadgad; which Hierome calleth Gadgada; thence to Mahata, the thirtieth Manilion; where from certain fountaines of water gathered in one, Adrickomius maketh a River, which falleth into the Red Sea, between Madian and Afloneaber.

Now although it be very probable, that at Assignator, where Salamon furnished his Fleets for the East India, there was store of fresh water; and though Herodosus Hulls; maketh mention of a great River, in Arabiathe Stonie, which he calleth Corys, from whence (shirth he) the Inhabitants conveigh water in pipes of leather to other places, by which device the King of Arabia relieved the Armie of Cambylis: yet is A-

30 drichomius greatly deceiued as manytimes he is, in finding these fiprings at Gadgad, or Extabata, being the nine and twentieth or thirtieth Manison. For it was at Futon, that those springs are spoken off, which in Deat. the 10.-2. 7: is also called tetabata, or Iobbath, a Land of running waters, and which by all probabilitie fall into the Reiver Zonei, the next adopting. And that these springs should fall into the Red Sea at Association, the next adopting. And this I sinder an Association in Belonius, that there are divers Torrents of first hwater in those sandaparts of Arabia: which though they continue their course for a sew miles, yet they are drunke vp by the hot and thirstie sand, before they can recover the bankes of the Red Sea.

From Istabata, Moses directed his iourney towards the Red Sea, and incamped at Hobrons; and from thence to Esong aber: which Citie in Iosephus time had the name of Berevice; and in Hieromes Esia. From thence keeping the Sea, and Eloth on his right hand, he turned towards the North, as he was by God commanded: Essong aber Deal Speing the farthest place towards the South-east, that Moses travailed in that passage.

It feemeth that Esongaber or Assongaber, Essistand Assonation to at this time in the possession of the Kings of Edom. For it is said, That the Lord spake with MOSES NAMELONAL AND ASSONATED ON in the Mount Hor, ware the scale of the Lands of Edom; So as the Mount Hor was at this time in the South border of Idomes. And if Essions so as the Mount Hor places neare the Red Sea, had at this present been subject to the Idomesus, Model of the World of the Moses of tieth yeare taking end at Esiongaber. And at this Citie of Cades (for so it was thought to be) or neare it, died Miriam or Marie, Moles fifter, whose Sepulcher was to bee feene in Saint Hieromes time, as himfelfe anoweth. From hence ere they departed to the Mountaine Hor, all the people murmured most violently against Moles, by reason of the scarcitic of water. For neither the punishments by fire from Heauen; by being denoured and swallowed up by the earth; by the suddaine pestilence which often feifed themsnor any miracle formerly shewing, either the loue or wrath of God, could prenaile with this Nationany longer, than while they were full fed and fatisfied in every of their appetites: but in flead of feeking for helpe and reliefe at Gods hands, when they suffered hunger, thirst, or any other want, they murnured, repinded, and rebelled, repenting them of their changed effates, and calling vugratefully on Moses all their misaduentures; yea though they well knew that their owne Fathers had left their bodies in the Deferts, and that they were now entred into the fortieth yeare, wherein all their miferies were to take end. And being, as it were, in fight of the Land promifed, they againe as obstinately tempted God as in former times, and neither trusted his promises, nor feared his indignation. But as the will and purposes of God are without beginning; so his mercies being without end: he commanded Moles to strike a R ocke adjoyning with his rod; and the waters iffued out in a great abundance, with which both themselues and their cattaile were fatisfied. Neuertheleffe, because God perceived a kinde of diffidence both in 20 Mosesand Aaron, at this place: therefore he permitted neither of them to enter the Land promifed, whereto perchance their worldly delires might inuite them. But it pleafed him to end the trauailes of Aaron at the Mountaine Hor, being the next, and foure and thirtieth Station. At which Mountaine of Hor, Aaron was despoiled of the Garments of his Priest-hood, and the same put on Eleazar his Sonne, as God had commanded. Which done, Moses and Eleazar descended the Mountaine; but God received Aaron on the top thereof, and he was no more

Of this Mountaine called Hor, otherwise Mosera, as in Deuter. 10. vers. 6. those Horites tooke name, which the Idumaans had formerly vanquished. Some there are 30 which make Mosera, which was the seuen and twentieth Mansion; and Mosera which they write Moleroth for difference, which was the foure and thirtieth Manfion, and is also called Hor, to be two distinct places : because Moses in passing from Cadesbarne towards Estiongater, incamped at Mosera, after he departed from Hesmona, and before he came to Beniascan. And this Mofera, which is also called Hor, he came vnto after he left Cades, where Miriam, Moses fister died; the first being the feuen and twentieth, and the second being the foure and thirtieth Mansion. But for Hor, which is also called Mosera, it should have been written, Hor inxta Mosera; Hor neare Mosera: for it is but one roote of a Mountaine, divided into diverstops, as Sinai and Horebare - whereof the West part Moses calleth Mosera, and the East 40 part Horeb. By the West part Moses incamped, as he past towards the Red Sea, on his left hand 5 by the East part, as hee went backe againe North-wards towards Modb: as in the description of Moses his passage through Arabia, the Reader may

Now it was from Cades, before they came to Hor, because Hor belonged to Edom, that Mofes fent Meffengers to the Prince of Idumea, praying him that hee might passe with the people of Israel through his Territorie into the Land of Canaan, which bordered it. For it was the nearest way of all other from the Citie of Kadeft, where Moses then incamped; whereas otherwise taking his journey by the Rivers of Zared, Arnon, and Iordan, hee might have runne into many hazards 50 in the paffage of those Rivers, the farre way about, and the many powerfull Kings, which commaunded in those Regions. Now the better to perswade the Prince of Idumaa hercunto, Moles remembred him, that he was of the same race and familie with Ifrael: calling him by the name of Brother, because both the

Edonates and ifraelites were the Sonnes of one Father, to wit, Ifage; inferring thereby, that hee had more reason to fauour and respect them, than hee had to ashis the Canapites; against whom Elas his Ancester had made warre, and driuen out the Harites (who were of their ancient races descended of Cham) out of the Region of Ser, calling it by his owne name Edom, or Edumed. Hee also making a thort repetition of Gods bleffings beflowed on them, and of his purpoles and promiles; affured Edom, or the King thereof, that hee would no way offend his people, or waste his Countrie, but that hee would restraine his Armie within the bounds of the Common, and Kings high waies, paying money for 10 whatfoeuer he vfed, yea cuen for the water, which themfelues or their Cattaile thould drinke. For Moles was commanded by God not to prouoke the children of Esas. But the King of Educated knowing the firength of his owne Countrie, Deat. 2.4, the fame being neare Canan, rampard with high and sharpe mountaines: and with all fuspecting, as a naturall wife man, that 600000. ftrangers being once entred his Countrie, it would reft in their wills to giue him law, refoluedly refufed them paf-fage, and deliuered this answere to the Meffengers: That, if they attempted to en-Numao, No. ter that way, he would take them for enemies and relift them by all possible means. 21. And not knowing whether such a deniall might satisfie or exasperate, hee gathered the strength of his countrie together, and shewed himselfe prepared to defend their 20 paffage. For as it is written: Then E D o M came out against him (to wit, Moses) with rum oco. much people, and with a mightie power. Whereupon Atofes confidering, that the end of his enterprise was not the conquest of Seiror Edumas, and that the Land promifed was that of Canaan: like vnto himfelfe, who was of a naturall vnderstanding the greatest of any man, and the skilfullest man of warre that the world had, he refused to aduenture the Armie of Ifrael against a Nation, which being ouer-come, gaue but a paffage to inuade others; and which by reason of the seate of their mountainous Countrie, could not but have endangered, or (at least) greatly enfeebled the strength of Israel, and rendred them lesse able, if not altogether powerlesse, to have conquered the rest.

E therefore leaving the way of Idumea, turned himselfe towards the East, and marched towards the Deserts of Mash. Which when Arad King of the Canaanites understood, and that Moses had blanched the way of Edum.es; and knowing that it was Cansan, and not Edom, which

If ael aimed at, he thought it fafeft, rather to finde his enemies in his neighbours Countrie, than to be found by them in his owne : which he might have done with a farre greater hope of victorie, had Mafes beene enfort first to have made his way by the sword through Idameat, and thereby, though victorious, greatly haue leffened his numbers. But although it fell out otherwise than Arad hoped for, yet being resoluted to make triall, what courage the Israelites brought with them out of Agypt, before they came nearer his owne home, leading the strength of his Nation to the edge of the Defert, he set vpon some part of the Armie; which, for the multitude, occupied a great space, and for the many heards of Cattle that they 50 draue with them, could not incampe fo neare together, but that fome quarter or other was cuer-more subject to surprise. By which advantage, and in that his attempts were then perchance vnexpected, he slew some few of the Israelites, and carried with him many prisoners.

Now it is very probable, that it was this Canaanite, or his Predecessioner, which Dd 2

ioyned his forces with the Amalekites, and gaue an ouerthrow to those mutinous Uraelstes, which without direction from God by Moles would have entred Canaan from Cadesbarne. For it seemeth that the greatest number of that Armie were of the Consanites, because in the first of Deuter, 44, the Amorites are named alone without the Amalekites, and are faid to have beaten the Ifraelites at that time. And this Arad, if he were the fame that had a victoric ouer Ifrael, neare Cadesbarne, or if it were his Predecessour that then prenailed, this man finding that Moses was returned from the Red Sea, and in his way towards Canaan, and that the South part of Canaan was first to be inuaded, and in danger of being conquered, not knowing of Moses purpose to compasse Most, determined while he was yet in the Desert to trie 10 the quarrell. And whereas it followeth in the third verse of the twelfth chapter of Numbers, that the Israelites vtterly destroied the Canaanites and their Cities, they are much mistaken that thinke, that this destruction was presently performed by the Ifraelites. But it is to be understood, to have beene done in the future, to wit, in the time of lofus. For had Moles at this time entred Canaen in the pursuit of Arad. hee would not have fullen backe agains into the Deferts of Zin and Moab, and have fetcht a wearisome and needlesse compasse, by the Rivers of Zared and

Neither is their conicerure to bee valued at any thing, which affirme, that Arad did not inhabite any part of Canami Eelfe, but that his Territorical with 12 out it, and neare the Mountaine Ilar. For Ilar and Zim Cades were the South borders of Eelom, and not of Canam. And it was in the South of the Land of Canam, that Arad dwelt: which South part of Canam was the North part of Felom

Againe, Horma (for fo farre the Israelites after their victorie pursued the Canamites) is scatted in the South of Indeas. There is also a Citic of that name in Simeon. But there is no slich place to the South of Edom. And were there no other argument, but the mutine which followed presently after the repetition of this victorie, it were enough to proue, that the same was obtained in the future, and in Tosias his time, and not at the instant of Anads assault. For had the Israelites at this time 37 stacks the Cities of Anad, they would not the next day have complained for want of water and bread. For where there are great Cities, there is also water, and bread. But it was in the time of Issae, that the Israelites took their reuenge, and after they had past Israelites. In the Israelites took their reuenge, and after they had past Israelites that then gouerning them, who in the twelfth Chapter and fourteenth Verse, namet this Anad by the name of his Citie so called 3 and with him the King of Horma: to which place the Israelites pursued the Canamites. And hee nameth them amongst those Kings, which hee vanquished and put to death.

Now after this affault and furprife by Arad, Môfes finding that all entrance on that fide was defended, hee led the people Eaftward to compaffe Idamasand the 40 Deads. From the Mount Hor, Moses leaving the ordinarie way which lieth betweene the Red Sea, and Calesyria, incamped at Zalmons: and thence hee removed to Phimon, where hee rected the Brasen Seprent; making these ioninies by the edge of Edamona, but without it. For Phimon was sometime a principall Citic of the Edomites. Now where it is written in Nambers 21. Fers. 4. That stom Mount Hor they departed by the way of the Red Sea, which grineed the people, it was not thereby meant that the Israelites turned backe towards the Red Sea;

neither did they march (according to Fonsech) per viam, que latet a lateremare rabrum; By the way that stdet the Red Sea, but indeede they croft, and went athwart the common way from Galaad, Trachonitis, and the Countries of Maub, to the ked Sea, that is, to Ejongaber; Elath, and Addan: which way, as it lay North and South, fo Israel to lhunne the border of Edom, and to take the vimost East part of Maub, to Croft the common way towards the East, and then they turned againe towards the North, as before.

CHAP.5. 8.7.

From Phunon he went to Oboth; where they entred the Territorie of Modb, adioyning to the Land of Suph,a Countrie bordering on the Dead Sea; and from thence 10 to Abarim, the eight and thirtieth Mansion, that is, where the Mountaines so called take beginning, and are as yet but small Mountures of Hills, on the East border of Moab: From thence they recoucred Dibon Gad, or the River of Zared, which rifeth in the mountaines of arabia, and runneth towards the Dead Sea, not farre from Petra the Metropolis thereof, being the nine and thirtieth Station. And having palt that River, they lodged at Dibon Gad, and from thence they kept the way to Diblathaim, one of the Cities of Moab; which Hieremie the Prophete. 48. v. 22. calleth the House of Diblathaim, the same which afterward was destroied among the rest by Nabuchadneffar. From thence they came to the River of Arnon, and incamped in the mountaines of Abarim: though in the 22. of Numbers, Mofes doth not remember 20 Helmondiblathaim, but speaketh of his remoue from the Riner of Zared, immediately to the other fide of Arnon; calling Arnon the border of Moab, betweene them and the Amorites: speaking, as he found the state of the Countrie at that time. For Arnon was not anciently the border of Moab, but was lately conquered from the Moabites, by Sehon, King of the Amorites : euen from the Predecessiour of Balac Peor then raigning. From Diblathaim, Mofes fent Messengers to Sehon, King of the Amorites to defire a paffage through his Countrie: which though he knew would be denied him, yet he defired to give a reason to the neighbour Nations, of the warre he vndertooke. And though Edom had refused him as Sehon did, yet hee had no warrant from God to enforce him. Moles also in sending messengers to Seon observed 20 the same precept, which he left to his posteritie, and successours, for a law of the war. namely in Deut. 20. v. 10. in these wordes, When thou commest neare unto a Citie to fight against it, thou shalt offer it peace, which if it doe accept of and open unto thee, then let all the people found therein be tributaries onto thee, and ferue thee, but if it refule, oc. thou shalt fmite all the Males thereof with the edge of the fword. Which ordinance all Commanders of Armies have observed to this day, or ought to have done.

δ. VII.

Of the Booke of the battailes of the Lord, mentioned in this Storie, and of other Bookes mentioned in Scripture which are loft.

Ow concerning the Warre between I frael and Sehon, Mofes seemeth Numeralwas to referre a great part of this Storic to that Booke entituded Liber bellowing to referre a great part of this Storic to that Booke entituded Liber bellowing to the self-bellowing the booke of Gods battailes and therefore passet from the most of things monorable, with greater breuitie in this place. His wordes after the General translation are these. Wherefore it fall be forein in the booke of the battailes of the Lord, what things he did in the Red Sea, and the Rivers of Armon. The Fulgac copie different not in self-off or this: But the Greeke Septuagint varie. For the Greeke writes it to this effect, For thus it is faid Numer. On the Control of the Red Sea, which is in the General and Vulgar Edition, names the Region more Chapto of * Suph, a Countrie bordering the Dead Sea towards the East, as he consectured. A. 4, 1, 2.

The Text he readeth thus. I direr date foller in recensions bellow in East over, contra solventhere of Valera values and the season of the Red Sea towards the East, as the consection of the Sea

Spoken 18. 5.3.

Spoken in repeating of the battailes of IEHOVAH, against VAHEB in the Countrie of SVPH: and against the Rivers, the Rivers of Arnon. In which wordes he understands, that amongst the Warres which the Lord disposed for the good of the Ifraelites, there was in those times a famous memorie in the mouth of most men, concerning the Warre of Sehon against Vaheb, the King of the Moabites, and of his winning the Countrie neare Arnon , out of the possession of the Monbites. For this Valeb was the immediate Predecessour of Balae, who lived with Moles: though it be written that this Balac was the fonne of Zippor, and not of Vaheb. For it feemes (as it is plaine in the fuccession of the Edomites) that these Kingdomes were elective, and not succeffine: And as Innius in this translation understandeth no special Booke of the bat- 10 tailes of the Lord: so others, as Vatablus in his Annotations, doubt whether in this place any special booke be meant; and if any; whether it bee not a prediction of Warres in future ages, to be waged in these places, and to be written in the booke of Indiges, Stracidese, 46, tells vs plainly, that those battailes of the Lord were fought by I o s v A. Who was there (faith he) before him like to him? for he fought the battailes of the Lord. But seeing the Histories of the Scripture elsewhere often passe ouer matters of great weight in few wordes, referring the Reader to other bookes, written of the fame matter at large: therefore it seemeth probable, that such a booke as this there was; wherein the feuerall victories by Ifrael obtained, and also victories of other Kings, making way for the good of the Ifraelites, were particularly and largely writ- 20 ten. And that the fame should now be wanting, it is not strange, seeing so many other Volumes, filled with divine discourse, have perished in the long race of time, or have beene destroied by the ignorant and malicious Heathen Magistrate. For the bookes of Hensel, howfocuer they have been in later ages corrupted, and therefore now suspected, are remembred in an Epistle of Thaddeus, and cited by Origen ment apair, and by Tertullian.

That worke also of the Patriarch Abraham, of Formation, which others bestow on Rabbi Achiba, is no where found. The bookes remembred by Iofua c. 10. v. 12 and in the second of Samuel c. 1. v. 18. called the Booke of Jasher, or Justorum, is also loft; wherein the flay of the Sunneand Moone in the middeft of the Heauensis 30 recorded, and how they flood ftill, till Ifrael had avenged themselves of their enemics : out of which also David tooke the precept, of teaching the children of Inda, to

written, according to the 69. Pfalme v. 28. where it is faid, Let them be put out of the Microningnen, booke of life, neither let them be written with the righteous. HIERO ME thinks, that fager Lis Regime David by this booke understood those of Samuel; Rabbi Salomon, that the bookes of the Law are thereby meant, in which the acts of the iust Abraham, of Isaac, Iacob, and Mofes, are written; others, that it was the booke of Exodus; others, as Theodoreius, that it was a Commentarie vpon Iofus by an vnknowne Author.

The booke of Chozai, concerning Manaffe, remembred in the fecond of Chron. Hirron.in ennot. 33. v. 18. 6 19. Of this booke, alfoloft, Hierome conceines that the Prophet I/ay was the Author. in Paralie.

The same mischance came aswell to the Storie of Salomon, written by Ahia Silonites, who met with Ierobeam, and foretold him of his obtaining the Kingdome of If ael from the fonne of Salomon: as to the bookes of Nathan the Prophet, and to those of Jeedo the Seer, remembred in the second of Chron. 6 9. v. 29. with these haue the bookes of Shemajah and of Iddo, remembred in the fecond of Chron. c. 12. v. 15. perished: and that of Jehn the sonne of Hanani, of the acts of Jehossaphat, cited in the focund of Chron.c. 20. v.34. Also that booke of Salomons which the Hebrewes 50 write Hiferim, of 5000 verses, of which that part called Cantieum Canticorum only remaineth, 1. Kings 4. 32. and with this divers other of Salomons workes have perished, as his booke of the natures of Trees, Plants, Beasts, Fishes, &c. 1. Kings 4-33with the reft remembred by Origen, Isfephus, Hierome, Cedrenus, Ciccus Afculanus, Pieus Mirandula, and others.

Of these and other bookes many were consumed with the same fire, wherewith Nebuchadneffar burnt the Temple of Hierufalem. But let vs returne thither where

Of Moses his sparing the issue of Lot: and of the Giants in those parts: and of Sehon and Oc.

Hen Moles had past Arnon, he incamped on the other side thereof at Abarim, oppolite to the Citie of Nebo, leaving the Citie of Midian on his left hand, and attempting nothing upon the Moabites on that fide. For Moab did at this time inhabite on the South fide of Arnon, having loft all his ancient and best Territorie, which was now in the possession on of Sehon the Amerite. For Moses was commanded by God notto molelt Most, Dent. 2, v.9. 6 peither to prouoke them to battaile, God having given that Land to the children 10.11.618. of Lot; the same which was anciently possess by the Emims, who were men of great flature, and comparable to those Giants called Anakims, or the sonnes of Airce.

God also commanded Moses to spare the Ammonites, because they likewise were descended of Lot: who had expelled from thence those Giants, which the Ammonites called Zomzummims. For it feemeth that all that part, especially to the East of Iordan, even to the Defert of Arabia, as well on the West, as on the East side of the Mountaines of Gilead, were inhabited by Giants. And in the plantation of the Land promifed, the Ifraelites did not at any time paffe those Mountaines to the East of Balan, but left their Countrie to them, as in the description following is made manifest. We finde also, that as there were many Giants both before and after the floud: fo these Nations, which anciently inhabited both the border of Canasa, and the Land it felfe, had among them many families of Giant-like men. For the Ant- 10f. 15. v. 12. 50 kims dwelt in Hebron, which fometimes was called the Citie of Arbah, which Arbah 14. v.15.

30 in Iofua is called the Father of the Anakims; and the greatest man of the Anakims. There had also beene Giants in the Land of the Moabites, called Emims : and their chiefe Citic was Aroer or Ar, neare the River of Arnon. To the Giants of the Rephaims, the Ammonites gaue the name of Zamzummims; which were of the fame ancient Canaanites : and their chiefe Citie was Rabba, afterward Philadelphia. They were alfo called Zuzims, which is as much to fay, as Viri robuffi, horrendia, Giganies: Strong men, and fearefull Giants, who inhabited other Cities of Ham, or Hom, in the fame Prouince, and not farre to the North of Areer.

Now Mofes having past Arnon, and being incamped at Abarim; and having (as before) fent to Sehon, as he had done to Edom, to pray a paffage through his Coun-40 trie, was denied it. For Selion being made proude by his former conquest upon Faheb the Moabite, which Nation the Amorites effected but as frangers and viurpers. (themselves being of the sonnes of Canain, and the Moabites of Lot) refused to grant Ifrael any entrance that way; and withall prepared to encounter Moles with as much speede as he could, because Moses incamped in the Countrie of his new conquests, to wit, the Plaines of Madb; the two and fortieth and last Mansion: which Moles wasted with the multitude of his people, and cattle. Towards him therefore hafting himfelfe, they encountred each other at Inhaz: where Sehon with his children and people were broken and discomfitted; and the victorie so pursued by Moles. as few or none of the Amorites escaped. Hee also flaughtered all the Women and 50 Children of the Amorites, which he found in Effebon, and all the other Cities, Villages, or Fields; they being of the race of Canaan, as those of Basan also were: and descended of Emoreus or Amoreus : for Moses calleth the Bulanites also Amorites. Dest. 1. 18. And although Israel might now have taken a ready way and passage into Indea: being at this time, and after this victorie at the banks of Iordan: yet hee knew it to bee perilous perilous to leave fo great a part of that Nation of the Amorites on his backe, as inhabited all the Region of Bafan or Traconitis: and therefore heled on his Armie to inuade 0g: a person of exceeding strength and stature: and the only man of marke remaining of the ancient Giants of those parts, and who at that time had 60. Cities walled and defenced: lying betweene the mountaine of Hermon (which mountaine faith Moles, the Sidonians call Shirian, and the Amorites Shenir) and the River of Iordan. And it befell vnto the King of Bafan ( who attended Mofes comming at Edrei) as it did vnto Sihon: for he and his fonnes perished, and all his Cities were taken and poffest. After this Moses with-drawing himselfe backe againe to the mountaines of Abarim, left the perfequation of that warre vnto Jair the sonne of Manasie: 10 who conquering the East parts of Basim, to wit, the Kingdome of Argab, euen vnto the Nations of the Geffuri and Machati, 60. walled Cities: called the fame after his owne name Hauoth Jair : of all which conquests afterward the halfe Tribe of Mamaile poffet the North part as farre as Edrei, but the East part that belonged to Sibon the Amorite, with the mountaines of Gilead adjoyning, was given to Ruben and

ð. I X.

Of the troubles about the Madianites, and of Moses his death.

Fter these victories, and while Ifrael sojourned in the valley of Moab, the Madianites and Moabites (ouer both which Nations it seemeth that Balae King of the Moabites then commanded in chiefe) fought, according to the aduise of Balaam, both by alluring the Hebrewes to the loue of their daughters, and by perswading them to honour and serue their Idols, to divide them both in Loue and Religion among themselves: thereby the better both to defend their owne interest against them, as also to beat them out of Mad, and the Countries adiopning. The Ifraelites as they had ever beene inclined, so were they now easily perswaded to these cuill courses, and thereby drew on 20 themselves the plague of pestilence, whereof there perished 24000. persons : befides which punishment of God the most of the offenders among the Hebrewes, were by his commandement put to the fword, or other violent deaths; after this, when that Phineas the sonne of Eleazar had pierced the bodies of Zimri, a Prince of the Simeonites, together with Cosbia Daughter of one of the chiefe of the Midianites, the plague ceased, and Gods wrath was appealed. For such was the loue and kindnesse of his all-powerfulnesse, respecting the ardent zeale of Phiness in prosequating of Zimri (who being a chiefe among the Hebrewes became an Idolater) as hee forgaue the rest of Minel, and staied his hand for his sake.

In this valley it was that Mofes caused the people to be numbred the third time: 40 Num. 26, 2.51, and there remained of able men fit to beare armes, 601 730. of which as his laft enterprise, he appointed 12000. to be chosen out, to inuade the Cities of Midian, who together with the Mosbites practifed with Balaam to curfe Ifrael : and after that fought to allure them (as before remembred) from the worship of the true God, to the feruice of Beth-Pear: and to the reft of their barbarous Idolatric. Ouer which companies of 12000. Mofes gave the charge to Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar the high Priest: who slew the fine Princes of the Midianites, which were, or had lately beene, the valfalls of Schon, as appeareth by Iofuals. These five Princes of the Midisnites flaine by Eleazar were at this time but the vaffalls of Sehon the Amorite, to wit, Eui, Rekem, Zur, Hur, and Reba, the Dukes of Schon, faith Iofua. Hee flew alfo all the 50 men, male-children, and women : fauing fuch as had not yet vfed the companie of men, but those they saued and dispers them among the children of Israel to serue body knowne to the people, and his vnabilitie to trauaile: and also that he was fore- Dent.31.1.2. warned of his end by the spirit of God: from whom he received a new commandement to ascend the Mountaines of Abarim, and thereon to render up his life: Hee hastned to settle the Gouernement in Iosua: whom hee perswaded with most lively arguments to prosequute the conquest begunne, assuring him of Gods sauour and ashistance therein. And so having spent these his later daies after the Conquest of og and Sehon, King of the Amorties, in the repetition and exposition of the Law (or an iteration of the Law, according to S. Augustine) vsing both arguments, praiers, Augustatessis and threats vnto the people: which he often repeated vnto them; thereby to con-rab fair series.

10 firme them in knowledge, loue, feare, and seruice, of the all-powerfull God: Hee pentage bleffed the twelue I ribes, that of Simcon excepted, with feuerall and most comfortable bleffings: praifing the greatnesse and goodnesse of him, vnto whom in his praiers he commended them: Hee alfo commanded the Priefts to lay up the booke of the Law, by the fide of the Arke of God: The last that he indited was that Propheticall Song, beginning: Hearken yee Heauens and I will speake, and let the earth heare Dua 32.1. the word of my mouth and being called by God from the labours and forrowes of this life, vnto that rest which neuer afterward hath disquiet, hee was buried in the Land Down.34.v.6; of Most, ouer against Beth-peor: but no man knoweth of his Sepulcher to this day, which happened in the yeare of the World 2554.

Observations out of the Storie of Moses, how God disposeth both the smallest occasions, and the greatest resistances, to the effecting of his purpose.

Ow let vsa little, for instruction, looke backe to the occasions of sundrie of the great euents, which have beene mentioned in this Storie of the life of Mofes, for (excepting Gods miracles; his promife, and fore-choise of this people) hee wrought in all things clie by the me-that the feare which Pharao had of the increase of the Hebrewes, multiplied by God to exceeding great numbers, was the next naturall cause of the forrowes and losse, which befell himselfe, and the Agyptian Nation: which numbers when he sought by cruell and vngodly pollicies to cut off and leffen, as when he commanded all the male-children of the Hebrewes to be flaine, God (whose prouidence cannot bee resifted, nor his purposes preuented by all the foolish and saluage craft of mortall men) moued compassion in the heart of Pharao's owne Daughter, to preserve that child, which afterward became the most wise, and of all men the most gentle and milde. the most excellently learned in all Diuine and Humane knowledge, to be the Conductor and deliverer of his oppressed Brethren, and the overthrow of Pharae; and all the flower of his Nation; euen then, when he fought by the strength of his men of Warre, of his Horse, and Chariots, to tread them under and burie them in the dust. The griefe which Moses conceived of the iniuries, and of the violence offered to one of the Hebrewes in his owne presence, moued him to take reuenge of the Agyptian that offered it: the ingratitude of one of his owne Nation, by threatning him to difcouer the flaughter of the Agyptian, moued him to flie into Midian: the contention betweene the sheep-heards of that place, and Jethro's Daughters, made him knowne to their Father: who not only entertained him, but married him to one of 30 those Sisters : and in that solitarie life of keeping of his Father in lawes sheepe, farre from the presse of the world, contenting himselfe (though bred as a Kings Sonne) with the lot of a poore Heards-man, God found him out in that Desart, wherein he first suffered him to liue many yeares, the better to know the waies and passages through which he purposed that hee should conduct his people, toward the Land promifed : and therein appearing vnto him, he made him know his Will and divine Pleasure for his returne into Agypt. The like may be said of all things else, which Moles afterward by Gods direction performed in the Storie of Ifrael before remembred. There is not therefore the smallest accident, which may seeme vnto men as falling out by chance, and of no confequence: but that the fame is caused by God to effect somewhat else by: yea, and oftentimes to effect things of the greatest worldly importance, either prefently, or in many yeares after, when the occasions are either not confidered, or forgotten.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Nations with whom the I fraclites had dealing after their comming out of Ægypt; and of the men of re-nowne in other Nations, about the times of Moses and losva, with the fumme of the Historie of

N like manner if we looke to the qualitic of the Nations, with whom the Ifraelites, after their comming out of Egypt, had to doe, either in the Wilderneffe, or afterward : we shall finde them long before-hand, by the disposing providence of God, as it were prepared for enmitie: partly in respect that they were most of them of the issue of Canaan, or at least of Ham: and the rest (as the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and Ismaelites) were mingled with them by mutuall marriages: 40 whereas the Ifraelites still continued strangers, and separate from them : and fo partly in this respect, and planted them partly by ancient injuries or enmitties, and partly by reason of diucrstite in Religion, selates in the Easthild of Ins. were these Nations, as it were prepared to be enemies to the Israelites: and so to serue dan about Ba- for fuch purposes as God had referred them for. To make these things more mafor where they finde the Land nifeft, we must vinderstand that this part of Syris, bounded by the mountaines of Liindextue Land Movement and Move Sonne of Na- ons, the one fpringing from the fonnes of Cham, the other from Sem: but those of 50 char, and Elbas, the one ipringing from the ionnes of Charn; the other from Sem: but those of the said about a strangers therein for a long time, and came thither in effect but is called a Bu- with none familie, to wit, that of Abraham, and a few of his kindred. The other is. See here- for the greatest part were the Canaanites, the ancient Lords and Possessor of those Territories: by processe of time divided into severall families and names: whereof

Снар.6. 8.1. fome of them were of eminent stature and strength, as the Anakims, Zamzummims, or Zuzei, Emims, Horites, and others. These (as men most valiant and able commonly doe) did inhabite the vtter borders and mountaines of their Countries: the rest were the Zidonians, Iebusites, Amorites, Heuites, Hetites, and others, who tooke name after the sonnes of Canaan, and after whom the Countrie in generall was still As for the Hebrewes which descended of Shem by Abraham, they were of an other familie, and strangers in that Countrie: especially the Ifraelites, and this was fome cause that the Canaanites did not affect them, or indure them: no more then 10 the Philistims did, who descended also of Cham by Mizrain. For though Abraham himfelfe being a stranger was highly esteemed and honoured among them; especially by the Amorites inhabiting the West part of Iordan: yet now even they which descending from Abraham, or from his kindred, abode and multiplied in those partes, were alienated in affections from the Ifraclites: as holding them strangers and Exed 6.17.0.16 intruders: making more account of their alliance with the Cananites, and the rest of the iffue of Cham, with whomethey dayly contracted affinitie: than of their olde petigree from Abraham. True it is that these Nations descended of Abraham, or of his kindred, who had Deut. 1.1.0.5. lincked themselues and matched with the Cananites and others, had so farr possest 20 themselves of the borders of those Regions, as they began to bee aquall in strength to the bordering Cananites, if not superiour. For of Los came those two great families of the Moabites, and Amonites : of Efauthe Idumsans: of Madian the Madianites: of Ismael, the cldest sonne of Abraham came the Ismaelites, with whom are joyned as of the same nation, the Amalekites, whom though the more common opinion thinketh to have been a tribe of Edom, because Esau had a grand-child of that name. yet manifest reason continceth it to have bin otherwise. For the Israelites were forbidden to prouoke the Edomites, or doe them any wrong, whereas contrariwise A- Distinct, v.s. malek was curfed and endleffe warre decreed against him : but hereof more elsewhere. Chap. 8. 2.3. Of Ismaels eldest Sonne Naboth sprung the Arabians of Exide. 17. v. 16 20 Petraa, called Nabathai. Now euen as Abraham befought God to bleffe Ismael, fo it Gin. 17. pleased him both to promise and performe it. For of him those twelve Princes came, which inhabited, in effect, all that Tract of Land betweene Hanilath upon Tigris, and Sur which is the West part of the Defart of Arabia Petraa. Yet howfoeuer the strength of these later named nations, which descended from Abraham, were great: yet it is not valikely, but that some reason which moved them not to sayour the entrance of the Ifraelites into Canaan, was in respect of scare: because all Princes and States doe not willingly permit any stranger or powerfull Nation to enter their Territories. Wherefore, though all these families before named, were not so vnited, in and among themselves, but that they had their jealousies of each other, and 40 contended for Dominion: yet fearing a third more strong than themselues, whether they stood a-part or vnited, they were taught by the care of their owne preferuation, to joyne themselves together against Israel: though they did it nothing so malitiously and resolutedly as the Canaanites did. For the Edumeans only denied the Hebrewes a paffage : which the Moabites durft not denie : because their Countrie lav more open; and because themselves had lately beene beaten out of the richest part of their Dominions, by the Amorites: and as for the Ammonites their Countrie lay altogether out of the way, and the firength of Sehon and og Kings of the Amorites, was interjacent; and belides that, the border of the Ammonites was strong by reafon of the mountaines which divided it from Bafan. Againe, that which moved the Num. 621, 112

Moabites in their owne reason not much to interrupt Israel, in the conquest of Sehon

the Amorite, and of og his Confederate: was that the Modbites might hope after fuch time as the Amorites were beaten by Moles, that themselves might recover againe their owne inheritance: to wit, the Vallies and Plaines lying betweene the moun-taines of Arabia and Iordan : But as foone as Sehon was flaine, and that the King of Moab, Balac, perceived that Moses allotted that valley to the Tribes of Gad and Ruben, he beganne to practife with Balaam against Ifrael, and by the Daughters of Midian; as aforefaid, to allure them to Idolatrie : and thus at length the Moabites by special occasion were more and more stirred up to enmitte against Ifrael. And as for divers of the rest that were descended from Abrahams kindred, wee may note, how in the beginning, betweene the Authors of their Petigrees, God permitted fome enmities to be as it were presages of future quarrells, which in the posteritie might bee the casier incensed, by the memorie of old grudges : and withall by some distaine from the elder in nature to the yonger. For the I/maelites being descended from the eldeft sonne of Abraham, and the Edomites from the eldeft sonne of Isaac, Iacob , be- 10 ing but a second sonne, of a second brother, those Princes which were descended of the elder Houses being naturall men, might scorne to give place, much lesse to subiect themselues, to their inferiours, as they tooke it, and for a moreaggrauation the iffues of Elau Princes of Edumaa, might keep in record that their Parent was bought out of his birth-right by Iacobs taking his advantage, and that he was deceived of his Fathers bleffings also by him : and that Jacob after reconciliation came not vnto him Gen. 27. as he promised into Seir or Idamea.

So also in the posteritic of Ismael, it might remaine as a seede or pretense of enmitie, that their fore-father was by the infligation of Sara, cast out into the Defart, with his Mother Hagar: and had therein perished, but that it pleased God by his Angell 20 to relieue them. Ismael also had an Agyptian both to his Mother and to his Wife: and Amalec was also an Horite by his Mother : which Horites were of the ancient Canamites. The Edumeans also, or Edomites, were by their Maternall line descended of the Canaanites. For Efau tooke two Wines of that Nation : one of them was Adath, the Daughter of Elou, the Hittite, and the other Aholibamah, the grand-child of Zibeon the Heuite, Lord of Seir, before the same was conquered by Elau, and called after his name Edom or Edumaa.

Lastly, it appeareth that all those families of the Ismaelites, Amalekites, Moabites. Ammonites, Edomites, &c. were in processe of time corrupted, and drawne from the knowledge and worship of God, and became Idolaters, infected and seduced by the 30 conversation of those people among whom they dwelt, and by those Wives of the Canaanites which they had married: only a few of the Kenites and those Madianites, which inhabited on the edge of the Red Sea, whercof Iethro was Prieft, or Prince, or both, worshipped the true and euer-liuing God.

Of the Kings of the Canaanites and Madianites; mentioned in the ancient Warres of the Ifraelites.

F the Kings of the Canaanites; descended of Cham, (for Melchizedek 40 may be thought to be of a better Petigree) wee finde foure named by Moses : and one and thirtie remembred by Josua, though few of these named, otherwise than by the Cities over which they commanded: to which each of them had a small Territorie adioyning, and no other Dominion. These Canaanites in a generall consideration are to be understood for all those Nations, descended of Cham by Canaan, as the Hittites, Jebusites, Amorites, Gergesites, Heuites, &c. and so here wee understand this name in speaking of the Kings of the Canaanites: and so also we call the Countrie of their habitation, the holy Land, or the Land of promife: for God had appointed that the feuen principall Families should be rooted out; and that his owne people should inherite their Lands and 50 Cities. But if we consider of the Name and Nation in particular, then is their proper habitation bounded by Iordan, on the East, and by the Mediterran Sea on the West: in which narrow Countrie, and in the choisest places thereof, those Canaantes which held their Paternall name chiefly inhabited.

The first King of these Nations, named in the Scriptures, was Hamor or Hemor Gen. 34. of the Heuites, whom Simeon and Leui flew, together with his Sonne Sichem, in reuenge of their Sifters rauishment.

Arad was the second King which the Scriptures have remembred, who had that part of Canaan towards the South, neighbouring Edom and the Dead Sea; the same which surprised Israel, as they incamped in the Wildernesse in the edge of Edu- Nom.21.2.

The third named was Sehon King of Effebon, who before Mofes arrivall had beaten the Moshites out of the West part of Arabia Petras or Nabathes, and thrust them to ouer Arnon into the Defarts, the fame whom Mofes ouer-threw in the plaines of Monb: at which time he tooke Effebon, and all the Cities of the Amorites.

Presently after which victoric, og was also slaine by Israel, who commanded the 16.4. c.s. North part of that Valley betweene the Mountaines Traceri or Galaad and Iordan, Num. 21.35.

who was also a King of the Amorites. The fift was Adonizedek King of the Iebusites, and of Hierusalem, with whom Iofua nameth foure other Kings.

Hoham, King of Hebron. Piram, King of Jarmuth. Japia, King of Lachis : and

Deber, King of Eglon, who were all Amorites overthrowne in battell and hanged tofia.to. by Iofus. After this ouerthrow Iofus nameth Isbin, King of Hazor, and Tobab, King of Madon: whom he also slaughtered, and tooke his Cities: aud this

Tabin feemed to have some Dominion over the rest, for it is said in the Text, For HAZOR before-times was the head of all those Kingdomes,

After these Adonibezek that notorious Tyrant is named; who confest that he had cut off the thumbs of the hands, and seete, of 70. Kings, inforcing them to gather crummes vnder his Table : who after Iuda and Simeon had vsed the same exequati- Iuda, Joseph lib. on vpon himselfe, acknowledged it to be a just reuenge of God: this King was car- 5.cap.2. ried to Hierulalem where he died.

The last King named is labin the second, who as it seemeth had rebuilt Hazor. burnt by Iosua. For at such time as he imploied Sisara against Israel, whom hee opprest twentie yeares, after the death of Ehud, He inhabited Hazor. This Jabin, Barac Ind.a. (incouraged by Debora) ouerthrew; and his Captaine Sifara had by Jael, the Wife of Heber the Kenite, a naile driven into his head while hee flept in her Tent: Iabin 111d.4. himselfe perishing afterward in that warre.

The Madianites had also their Kings at times, but commonly mixt with the Most softend 5.66. bites: and they held a corner of Land in Nabathea: to the South-east of the Dead Sea. They descended from Madian, Abrahams sonne by Cethura. Raguel surnamed Gethegleus or lethres, faith lofephus, called lethro in Exodus, Kenis in the first of ludges, Exod 2.

40 the sonne of Dathan, the grand-child of Iexanis, or Ioksham, the great grand-child of Abraham by Cethura, was Priest or Prince of the Madianites by the Red Sea: whose sedien, paggas Daughter, or Neece, Moles married : and of whom I have spoken elsewhere more at large. This Iethroifhe were not the same with Hobab, must be his Father: and this Hobab had seuen Daughters. Hee guided Moses in the Wildernesse: and became one of the Ifraclites: of him descended the Kenites so called of his Father Raguels surname Jud 1. of which Kenites was Heber, which had peace with Iabin the second, euen now re-

At fuch time as Saul inuaded the Amalekites, he knowing the good affection of the Kenites to Ifrael, gaue them warning to separate themselues : and yet the Kenites had 1.Sem.15,6. 50 strong seates, and lived in the mountaines of the Defarts.

The Kings of the Canaanites, and Madianites, and the Amalekites, as many as I find named were thefe.

F the Kings of the Amalekites and Ismaelites, I finde few that are named, and though of the I/maelites there were more in number than of the rest (for they were multiplied into a greater Nation, according to 40 the promife of God made vnto Abraham) vet the Amalekites, who together with the Midianites were numbred among them, were more renowned in Mofes time than the rest of the Ismaelites. So also were they when Saul gouerned Ifrael. For Saul purfued them from Sur vnto Hauilah, to wit, ouer agreat part of sirabia Petrea, and the Defari. The reason to me seemeth to be this: That the twelve Princes which came of Ifmael, were content to leave those barren Defarts of Arabia Petraa, called Shur, Paran, and Sin, to the iffue of Abraham by Cetura, that ioyned with them (for so seeme the Amalekites to have beene, and so were the Madianites: ) themselves taking possession of a better soile in Arabia the Happie, and about the Mountaines of Galaadin Arabia Petraa. For Nabajoth the eldest of those 50 twelue Princes planted that part of Arabia Petraa, which was very fruitfull though adioyning to the Defart, in which Mofes wandred, afterward called 2 abathea: the same which neighboureth indea on the East side. They also peopled a Prouince in Arabia the Happie, whereof the people were in after-times called Napathei (B) changed into (P).

The Amalekites gaue their Kings the name of Agag, as the Agyptians the name of Pharaoh to theirs, and the ancient Syrians Adad to theirs, and the Arabian Nabatheans, Aretas, as names of Honour.

ð. IIII.

Of the instauration of civilitie in Europe about the setimes, and of PROMETHEVS and ATLAS.

Here lived at this time, and in the same age together with Moses, many men exceeding famous, aswell in bodily strength, as in all sorts of learning. And as the World was but even now enriched with the written Law of the living God, fo did Art and Civilitie (bred and fowritten Law of the main good, to do the this time to dif-couer a passage into Europe, and into those parts of Greece, neighbouring Asia and Iudea. For if Pelafgus befides his bodily strength, was chosen King of Arcadia, because he taught those people to erect them simple Cottages, to defend them from raine and florme; and learned them withall to make a kinde of Meale, and bread of Acornes, who before lived for the most part, by Hearbs and Rootes: we may thereby judge how poore, and wretched those times were and how falfly those Nations have vaunted of that their antiquities accompanied not only with civill learning, but with all other kinds of knowledge, And it was in this age of the World, as both euening Starre. Also besides this Atlas of Lybia or Mauritania, there were others, which bare the fame name : but of the Libyan, and the brother of Prometheus, it was that those Mountaines which croffe Africa, to the South of Marocco, Sus, and Hea, with the Sea adioyning tooke name, which memorie Plato in Crifias bestowes on Atlas, the Sonne of Westune.

Cicero in the fifth of his Tufculan questions, affirmeth that all things written of Prometheus and Atlas, were but by those names to expresse divine knowledge. Nec verò ATLAS sustinere calum, nec PROMETHEVS affixus Caucaso, nec stellatus CE-PHEV. S cum Vxore traderetur, nifi dinina cognitio nomen corum ad errorem fabula tra-10 duxisset: Neither should ATLAS be said to beare up heaven, nor PROMETHEVS to be fastened to Caucasus, nor CEPHEV'S with his Wife to be stellified, unlesse their dinine knowledge hadraifed upon their names thefe erroneous fables.

Orpheus sometime exprest Time by Prometheus, sometime hee tooke him for Saturne; as Rheaconiux alme Prometheu. Nd in this age of the World, and while Moses yet lived, Deutslion raigned in The falie, Crotopus then ruling the Argines. This Dencation Clom. Alex from was the Sonne of Prometheus, faith Herodotus, Apollonius, Heliodus, and lib.t. Strabo. Hesiodus gane him Pandora for Mother, the rest Clymene: Homer Strabo. lib. 5.

in the fifteenth of his Odyfees makes Deucalion the Sonne of Minos: but 40 he must needes have meant some other Deucation; for else either Viviles was mistaken, or Homer, who put the tale into his mouth. For Vlyffes after his returne from Troy fained himselfe to be the brother of Idomeneus, who was sonne to this later Deucalion, the sonne of Minos : but this Minos lived but one age before Troy was taken: (for Idomeneus served in that Warre) and this Deucalion the Sonne of Prometheus, who lived at once with Moses, was long before. In the first Deucations time happened that great inundation in Theffalie . by which in effect enery foule, in those parts, perished, but Deucation, Pyrrha his Wife, and some few others. It is affirmed that at the time of this floud in Thessale, those people exceeded in all kinde of wickednesse and villanic, and as the impictic of men is the forcible attractive of Gods vengeance; 50 fo did all that Nation for their foule finnes perish by waters: as in the time of Noah, the corruption and crueltie of all mankinde drew on them that generall destruction by the floud Vniuerfall. Only Deucalion, and Pyrrha his wife, whom God spared, were both of them esteemed to be louers of Vertue, of Iustice, and of Religion; Of whom ouid:

No man was better, nor more just than hee: Nor any Woman godlier than shee.

It is also affirmed that Prometheus fore-told his some Deucalion of this ouer-flowing : and aduifed him to provide for his fafetie : who hercupon prepared himfelfe a kinde of Veffell, which Lucian in his Dialogue of Timon calls Cibotium : and others Larnax. And because to these circumstances, they afterward adde the sending out 10 of the Doue, to discouer the Waters fall and decrease, I should verily thinke that this Storie had beene but an imitation of Noals floud deuised by the Greekes, did not August. de cinit. the times so much differ, and S. Augustine with others of the Fathers and reverent Del. 1.18. c.10. Writers approue this Storic of Deucalion. Among other his children Deucalion had these two of note, Hellen of whom Greece had first the name of Hellas, and Melantho on whom Neptune is faid to have begot Delphus, which gave name to Delphos, forenowned among the Heathen for the Oracle of Apollo therein founded.

And that which was no leffe strange and meruallous than this floud, was that great burning and conflagration which about this time also happened vnder Phaeton: not only in £thiopia, but in Iflria, a Region in Italie; and about Cume, and the 20 Mountaines of Vefuuius: of both which the Greekes, after their manner, haue inuented many strange fables.

Q. VI. of Hermes Trismegistus.

Vt of all other which this age brought forth among the Heathen, Mercarius was the most famous, and renowned: the same which was a so focalled Trifmegistus, or Termasimus: and of the Greekes Herme.

Many there were of this name: and how to distinguish, and set them in their owner times, both S. Angufine and Lastanius sinder them.

difficult. For that Mercurie which was esteemed the God of Theeues, the God of Wreftlers, of Merchants, and Sea-men, and the God of Eloquence (though all by one name confounded) was not the same with that Mercurie, of whose many workes some fragments are now extant.

Cicero, Clemens Alexandrinus, Arnobius, and certaine of the Greekes reckon fiue Mercuries. Of which two were famous in Agypt, and there worshipped; one, the Sonne of Nilus, whose name the Agyptians feared to vtter, as the lewes did their Tetragrammaton; the other, that Mercurie, which flew Argus in Greece, and flying 40 into £gypt, is faid to have delivered literature to the £gyptians, and to have given Led. Jims out them Lawes. But Diodorusaffirmeth, that Orpheus, and othersafter him, brought of Citeron Aug learning and letters out of Agypt into Greece : which Plato also confirmeth, faying; de cinit. Dai.18. That letters were not found out by that Mercurie which flew Argus, but by that ancient Mercurie, otherwise Theut; whom Philo Biblius writeth Taautus; the Agyptians Thoyth; the Alexandrians Thot; and the Greekes (as before) Hermes. And to Eagle LL.c.6.de this Tanutus, Sanconiarbo, who lived about the Warre of Troy, gives the invention of letters. But S. Augustine making two Mercuries, which were both Agyptians, calls neither of them the sonne of Nilus, nor acknowledgeth either of them to have slaine Argus. For he finds this Mercuric, the flaier of Argus, to be the grand-child of that 50 Atlas, which lived while Mofes was yet yong. And yet L. Vines vpon S. Augustine feemes to viderstand them to be the same with those, whom Cicero, Alexandrinus, and the rest have remembred. But that coniccture of theirs, that any Gracian Mereurie brought letters into Agypt, hath no ground. For it is manifest, (if there bee any truth in prophene antiquitie) that all the knowledge which the Greekes had, was transported out of Egypt or Phanicia; and not out of Greece, nor by any Grecian into Agypt. Forthey all confesse, that Cadmus brought letters first into Bastia. either out of Agypt, or out of Phanicia; it being true, that betweene Mercurus that lived at once with Moles, and Cadmus, there were these descents cast: Cratonus King of the Argines, with whome Mofes lived, and in whose time about his tenth yeare Mofes died; after Crotopus, Sthenelus who raigned eleuen yeares; after him Danaus fiftie yeares; after him Lynceus: in whose time, and after him in the time of Minos King of Crete, this Cadmus arrived in Baotia. And therefore it cannot be true.

to that any Mercurius about Moles his time, flying out of Greece for the flaughter of Argus, brought literature out of Greece into Agypt. Neither did either of those two Mercuries of Agypt, whom S. Augustine remembreth, the one the grand-father, the other the Nephew or grand-child, come out of Greece. Eupolemus and Artabanus note, that Mafes found out Letters, and taught the vie of them to the leves; of whom the Phanicians their Neighbours received them; and the Greekes of the Phanicians by Cadmus. But this inucntion was also ascribed to Moles, for the reason before remembred a that is, because the Jewes and the Phanicians had them first from him. For every Nation gave vnto those men the honour of first Inventors, from whom they receited the profit. Ficinus makes that Mercurie, vpon part of whose 20 workes he Commenteth, to have beene foure descents after Moles; which hee hath

A. the first famous Mercurie, whom others, as Diodorus, call the Counsailer and Instru-Acr of that renowned Is, wife of Osris. But Ficinus giveth no reason for his opinion herein. But that the elder Mercurie instructed 1/18, Diodorus Sienlus affirmeth, and owy Trifmegili. that fuch an inscription was found on a piller erected on the Tombe of Iss. R.-niaton, an ancient Phomician, who lived thortly after Moses, hath other fancies of this usus, lib.1.6.6. 30 Mercurie; affirming that he was the Scribe of Saturne, and called by the Phanicians, Vigosinib 8.c.

Tanutus; and by the Egyptians Thoot, or Thoyt. It may bee, that the many yeares 26. Aug de Cunti. which he is faid to have lived, to wit, three hundred yeares, gave occasion to some Dei. Writers to finde him in one time, and to others in other times. But by those which haue collected the grounds of the Egyptian Philosophie and Dininitie, he is found more ancient than Moles : because the Inventor of the Agyptian Wifedome, wherein it is faid, that Mofes was excellently learned.

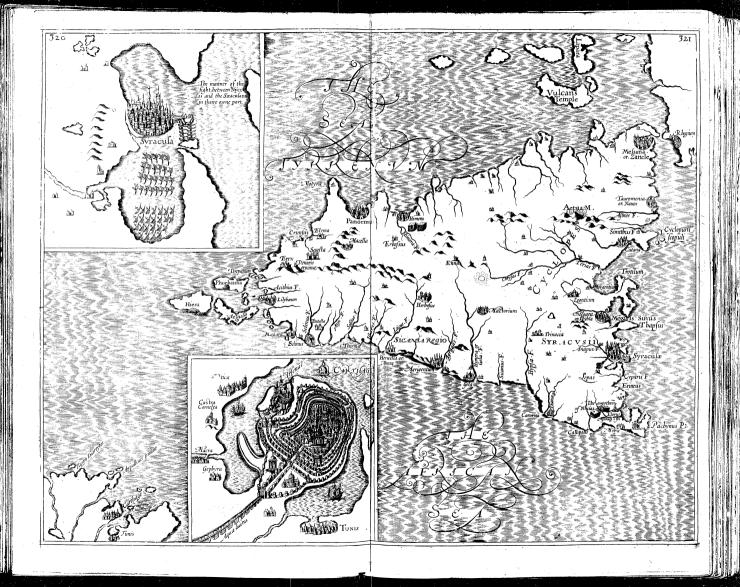

It is true, that although this Mercurie or Hermes doth in his Divinitie differ in many particulars from the Scriptures, especially in the approuing of Images, which Mo/es of all things most detested, yet who soener shall reade him with an even judg-40 ment, will rather resolue, that these workes which are now extant, were by the Greekes and Agyptian Priests corrupted, and those fooleries inserted, than that ever they were by the hand of Hermes written, or by his heart and Spirit deuised. For there is no man of understanding, and master of his owne wits, that hath affirmed in one and the same Tract, those thinges which are directly contrarie in doctrine. and in nature. For out of doubt (Moles excepted) there was never any man of those elder times that hath attributed more, and in a ftile more reuerend and divine, vnto almightie God, than he hath done. And therefore if those his two T reatifes, now among vs; the one connerted by Apuleius, the other by that learned Ficinus, had beene found in all things like themselues; I thinke it had not beene perilous to have 50 thought with Eupolemus, that this Hermes was Mofes himfelfe; and that the Egyptian Theologie hereafter written, was deuised by the first, and more ancient Mercu-Massas. rie, which others have thought to have beene lofeph, the fonne of laceb: whom, after the exposition of Pharaohs dreames, they called Saphanet phane, which is as much to fay, as absconditorum repertor & A finder out of hidden things. But these are ouer-ven-turous opinions. For what this man was, it is knowne to God. Enuic and aged time hath partly defaced, and partly worne out the certaine knowledge of him : of L.1.6.6.fol.4. whom, who focuer he were, Lactantius writeth in this fort. Hic feriplit libros. cr auidem multos, ad cognitionem diginarum verum pertinentes, in quibus maiestatem summi ac fingularis Dei afferit, if fdemg, nominibus appellat, quibus nos, Deum & Patrem; Hee hath written many Bookes belonging to, or expressing the knowledge of divine things, in which he affirmeth the maiestic of the most high and one God, calling him by the same names of God and Father, which we doe. The fame Father also feareth not to number him among the Sybils and Prophets. And so contrarie are these his acknowledgments to those Idolatrous fictions of the Egyptians and Gracians, as for my felfe I am perswaded, 10 that what soeuer is found in him contrary thereunto, was by corruption inscrted. For thus much himselfe confesseth; Deus omnum Dominus, & Pater, fons & vita, potentia & lux, & mens, & Spiritus; & omnia in iplo, & lub iplo funt. Verbum enim ex cius elle prodiens, perfectissimum existens, & generator & opifex, &c. God (faith hee) the Lord and Father of all things, the fountaine, and life, and power, and light, and minde, and Spirit; and all things are in him and under him. For his Word out of himselfe proceeding being most perfect, and generative, and operative, falling upon fruitfull nature, made it also fruitfull and producing. And he was therefore (faith Suidas) called Ter maximus, quia de Trinitate loquutus elt ; in Trinitate vnum elle Deum allerens ; Because he spake of the Trinitie, affirming that there is one God in Trinitie. Hie ruinam (faith FICINVS) pravidit 20 prife Religionis, his ortum noue fidei, his aduentum Christi, his futurum indicium resurretneref. Mercu. To this I will only adde his two last speeches reported by Calcidius the Platonist. and by Volateran out of SVYDAS. Hactenus fili pulsus à patria, vixi percerinus & exul, nunc incolumis repeto : cumq, post paulum à vobis corporeis vinculis absolutus discessero, videtote ne me quasi mortuum lugeatis : Nam ad illam optimam beatamá, Ciuitatem regredior: ad quam vniuersi ciues mortis conditione venturi sunt. Ibi nama, solus Deus est 30 Summus Princeps: qui ciues suos replet suauitate mirifica: ad quam hec, quam multi vitam existimant morsest potius dicenda quam vita; Hitherto, O Sonne, being driven from my Countrie, Ihaue lived a stranger and banished man : but now I am repairing home-ward againe in Safetie. And when I shall after a few daies (or in a short time) by being loosed from these bonds of flesh and bloud depart from you, see that you doe not bewaile me as a man dead, for I doe but returne to that best and blessed Citie, to which all her Citizens (by the condition of death) (hall repaire. Therein is the only God, the most high and chiefe Prince, who filleth or feedeth his Citizens with a fweetnesse more than meruailous : in regard whereof this being which others call a life, is rather to be accounted a death, than a life. The other and that which feemeth to be his last, is thus converted by others, agreeing in sense but 40 not in wordes with SVYDAS. O calum magni Dei Sapiens opus, teg, O von patris quam ille primam emisit, quando vniuer sum constituit mundum, adiuro per vnigenitum eius verbum, & Spiritum cuncta comprehendentem, misereminimei; I adiure thee O heaven thou wife worke of the great God, and thee O voice of the Father, which he first uttered, when he framed the whole world, by his only begotten Word, and Spirit, comprehending all thinges,

But Surdas hath his innocation in these wordes: Obtestor tecalum magni Dei sapiens opui, obtestor te vocem Patris quam loquutus est primum, cum omnem mundum firmauit, obtestor te per unigentum Sermonem omnia continentem, propitius, propitius esto; I befeech thee O heaven, wife worke of the great God, I befeech thee O voice of the Father, 50 which he bake first when he established all the World I befeech thee by the only begotten Word containing all thinges, be fauourable, be fauourable.

Of IANNES and IAMBRES, and some other that lived about those times.

Here were also in this age both Asculapius, which after his death became the God of Phylitians, being the brother of Mercurius, as Vines L. Vines in 110.0 thinkes in his Commentarie vpon Augustine, de Civitate Dei, lib. 8. and Augustine, de Linit, also those two notorious Sorgerers, James and Jambres, who in that impious art excelled all that euer haue beene heard of to this day; and yet

Moses himselfe doth not charge them with any familiaritie with Deuills, or ill Spirits: words indeed that feldome came out of his mouth; how ever by the Septuagint they are called Sophista or Veneficiand Incantatores, Sophists, poisoners, and Inchanters: by Hierome Sapientes & malesici, Wisemen, and cuill doers: and so by Vatablus, who also vieth the word Magi. I he Greeke it selfe seemes to attribute somewhat of what they did to naturall Magick: calling them pappares, workers by drugges. The Enoigett Geneuan, Sorcerers and Inchanters: IVNIVS Sapientes, Prassingiatores & Magi. Magitians and Wisemen here by him are taken in one sense: and Præstigiators are such as dazell mensejes, and make them feeme to fee what they fee not: as falfe colours, and 20 falle shapes. But as some vertues and some vices are so nicely distinguished, and so resembling each other, as they are often confounded, and the one taken for the other: (religion and superstition having one face and countenance) so did the workes orkings of Mofes, and of Pharaes Sorcerers appeare in outward fliew, and to the sofcommon capacities, to bee one and the same art and gift of knowledge. uill changeth himselse into an Angell of light : and imitateth in all he can d workings of the most High. Moles himselfe doth not charge them with any familiaritie with Deuills, or ill Spirits: words indeed that feldome came out of his mouth; how ever by the September 1 they are called Sophiste or Venefici and Incantatores, Sophists, poisoners, and Inchanters: by Hierome Sapientes & malefici, Wisemen, and euill doers: and so by Vatablus, who also vieth the word Magi. I he Greeke it selfe seemes to attribute somewhat of what they did to naturall Magick: calling them papuanic, workers by drugges. The Evolgate Geneuan, Sorcerers and Inchanters : IVNIVS Sapientes, Prastigiatores & Magi. Magitians and Wisemen here by him are taken in one sense: and Præstigiators are such as dazell mensejes, and make them feeme to fee what they fee not: as falfe colours, and

But as some vertues and some vices are so nicely distinguished, and so refembling each other, as they are often confounded, and the one taken for the other: (religion and superstition having one face and countenance) so did the worker and workings of Moss, and of Pharass Success appears in outward flew, and to the beholders of common capacities, to bee one and the same art and gift of knowledge. For the Deuill changeth himselfe into an Angell of light : and imitateth in all he can the waies and workings of the most High. And yet on the contrarie enery worke which furmounteth the Wisedome of most men, is not to be condemned as perforaned by the helpe or ministeric of ill Spirits. For the properties and powers which God hath given to naturall things, are fuch as where hee also bestoweth the know-20 ledge to vinderstand their hidden and best vertues, many things by them are brought to paffe, which feemealtogether impossible, and about nature or art: which two speculations of works of nature, and of miracle, the Cabaliffs diftinguished by these names; Opus de Berefith, & opus de mercana: the one they call Sapientiam nature; The Wisdome of nature: the other Sapientiam divinitatis; The wisedome of divinitie: the one Jacob practifed in breeding the pied Lambs in Melopotamia; the other Moles exercifed in his miracles wrought in Egypt, having received from God the knowledge of the one in the highest perfection, to wit, the knowledge of nature; of the other so farre as it pleased God to proportion him, both which he vsed to his glorie, that gaue them : assuming to himselfe nothing at all, either in the least or most. Also S. Au-40 guftine noteth that from the time that Mofes left Legypt to the death of Iofus, diuers other famous men lived in the world, who after their deaths for their eminent vertues and inuentions, were numbred among the Gods: as Dionyfius otherwife Li-ber Pater, who taught the Gracians the vice of the Vine in Attica: at which time also there were instituted Mulicall plaies to Apollo Delphicus : thereby to regaine his fanour, who brought barrennesse and searcitic vpon that part of Greece, because they relisted not the attempts of Danaus, who spoiled his Temple and set it on fire: so did Ericthonius institute the like games to Minerua: wherein the Victor was rewarded with a present of oile, in memorie of her that first prest it out of the Olive.

In this age also Xanthus rauished Europa: and begat on her Radamanthus, Sarpedon, 50 and Minos, which three are also given to Jupiter by other Historians. To these Saint Angustine addeth Hercules; the same, to whom the twelue labours are ascribed, na- Lib.De Close Del tiue of Tyrinthiaa Citie of Peloponnefas: (or as others fay, only nurfed and brought 19212. vpthere) who came into Italie, and destroied many Monsters there; being neither that Hercides, which Eufebius furnameth Delphin; famous in Phanicia; nor that Hercules, according to Philostratus, which came to Gades, whom he calleth an Agyptian. Manifestum fit, non Thebanum HERCVLEM, Sed Agyptium ad Gades poruenisse. & ibs finem statuisseterre (faith PHILOSTRATUS;) It is manifest that it was the Agyptian HERCVLES, and not the Theban, which transiled as farre as the streights of Gades, and there determined the bounds of the earth. In this time also while Moses wandered in the Deferts, Dardanus built Dardania.

But who focuer they were, or how worthy focuer they were that liued in the daies and age of Mofes, there was neuer any man, that was no more than man, by whom it pleased God to worke greater thinges, whom he fauoured more; to whom (according to the appearing of an infinite God) hee so often appeared; neuer any 10 man more familiar and conversant with Angells; neuer any more learned both in Diuine and Humane knowledge; neuer a greater Prophet in Ifrael. He was the first that received and delivered the Law of God entire; the first that left to posteritie by letters, the truth and power of one infinite God; his creating out of nothing the World vniuerfall, and all the creatures therein; that taught the detestation of idolatric, and the punishment, vengeance, and cradication, which followed it.

Syracides calleth Mofes the beloued of God and Men, whose remembrance is bleffed. He made him (faith the fame Author) like to the glorious Saints, and magnified him by the feare of his enemies, made him glorious in the fight of Kings, shewed him his glorie, caufed him to have his voice, fanel ified him with faithfulnesse and meekenesse, and chose him 20 out of all men. He is remembred among prophane Authors; as by Clearchus the Peripatetick: bv Megastenes and Numenius the Pythagorian. The long lives which the Patriarchs enjoved before the floud, remembred by Moses, Eslieus, Hieronymus Ægyptins, Hecataus, Elanicus, Acusilaus, Ephorus, and Alexander the Historian, confirme. The vniuerfall floud which God reuealed vnto Mojes, Berofus, Nicolaus Damafeenus, and others have testified. The building of the Tower of Babel, and confusion of tongues, Abydenus, Estieus, and Sybilla hauc approued. Berosus also honoureth Abraham. Hecataus wrote a Booke of him. Damafeenus before cited speaketh of Abrahams passage from Damsleus into Canaan, agreeing with the bookes of Moles. Eupolemon writeth 30 the very same of Abraham, which Moses did. For beginning with the building of Babel, and the overthrow thereof by divine power, he faith that Abraham, borne in the tenth generation, in the Citie called Camerina, or Vrien, excelled all men in wifedome : and by whom the Astrologie of the Chaldeans was invented. Is institia pietateg, sua (faith Eufebius out of the fame Author) sie Deo gratus fuit, vt dinino pracepto in Phanicem venerit ibid, habitauerit; For his instice and pietie he was so pleasing unto God, as by his Commandement he came into Phanicia, and dwelt there. Likewise Diodorus Siculus in his fecond Booke and fifth Chapter speaketh reverently of Moses: There are many other among prophane Authors, which confirme the bookes of Moses, as Eufebius hathgathered in the ninth of his Preparation to the Goffell, Chapter the third 40 and fourth, to whom I referre the Reader. Lastly, I cannot but for some thinges in it commend this notable testimonie of Strabo, who writeth of Moses in these words. Moses enimaffirmabat, docebatá, Ægyptiosnon recte sentire, qui bestiarum & pecorum insagines Deo tribuerunt: itemá, Afros & Gracos, qui Dijs hominum figuram affinxerunt: id verò folum esse Deum, quod nos & terram & mare continet, quod calum & mundum,& rerum omnium naturam appellamus : cuius profecto imaginem, nemo sana mentis, alicuius earum rerum, qua penes nos sunt, similem audeat ef fingere. Proinde (omni simulachrorum effictione repudista) dignum ei Templum ac Delubrum constituendum, ac sine aliqua figura colendum. Moses affirmed and taught, that the Ægyptians thought amisse, which attributed unto God the Images of beafts and cattaile: Also that the Africans and Greekes greatly 50 erred in giving unto their Gods the shape of men: whereas that only is God indeede, which containeth both ws, the Earth and Sea, which we call Heaven, the world, and the nature of all thinges, who feimage, doubtleffe, no wife man will dare to fashion out unto the likeneffe of those thinges which are amongst us: That therefore (all denising of Idollscast aside) a worthy

Temple and place of praier was to be creeted unto him, and he to be worshipped without any

Now concerning the Agyptian wisedome, for which the Martyr Stephen commended Moles, faving, That Moses was learned in all the wifedome of the Agyptians, AH. e.7.2.22 and was mightie in his workes and wordes; the same is collected (how truly I know not) by Diodorus, Diogenes Laertius, Iamblicus, Philo Iudaus, and Eufebius Cafarienfis, and divided into foure parts, viz. Mathematicall, Naturall, Divine, and Morall. In the Mathematicall part, which is distinguished into Geometrie, Astronomie, Arithmetick, and Musick; the ancient Agyptians excelled all others. For Geometrie, which is by interpretation, measuring of grounds, was veefull vnto them : because it confifting of infallible principles, directed them certainly in bounding out their proper Lands, and Territories, when their fields and limits, by the inundations of Nilus, were yearely ouerflowne and confounded; fo as no man could know what in right belonged vnto him.

For the second part, to wit, Astronomie, the site of the Countrie being a level and spatious Plaine, free and cleare from cloudes, yeelded them delight with eafe, in observing and contemplating the risings, fallings, and motions of the Starres.

Arithmetick also, which is the knowledge of numbers, they studied : because without it, in Geometrie and Astronomie, nothing can be demonstrated or concluded. But 30 of Mulick they made no other account, nor defired farther knowledge, than feemed to them sufficient to serue and magnifie their Gods, their Kings, and good Men.

The Naturall part of this Wisedome, which handleth the principles, causes, elements, and operations of naturall things, differs little from Peripateticall Philosophies teaching, that Materia prima is the beginning of all things; that of it all mixt bodies and living creatures have their being; that Heaven is round like a Globe; that all Starres haue a certaine fouent heate, and temperate influences, whereby all things grow and are produced; that raines proceede and bee from mutations in the aire :

that the Planets have their proper foules,&c. The Divine part of this wisedome, which is called Theologie, teacheth and belee-20 ueth that the world had a beginning, and shall perish; that men had their first originall in Egypt; partly by meanes of the temperatenesse of that Countrie, where neither Winter with cold, nor Sommer with heate are offenfine; and partly through the fertilitie, that Wilm giveth in those places; That the soule is immortally and hath transmigration from body to body; That God is one, the Father and Prince of all Gods; and that from this God, other Gods are, as the Sunne and Moone, whom they worshipped by the names of Osris and Iss, and erected to them Temples, Statues, and divers Images, because the true similitudes of the Gods is not knowne; that, many of the Gods have beene in the estate of mortall men, and after death, for their vertues, and benefits bestowed on mankinde, haue beene Deified

40 that those beasts, whose Images and formes the Kings did carrie in their Armes, when they obtained victorie, were adored for Gods: because under those Ensignes they preuailed ouer their enemies. Moreouer, the Agyptian Divines had a peculiar kinde of writing, mysticall and secret, wherein the highest points of their Religion and worship of God, which was to bee concealed from the vulgar fort, were ob-

Clemens distributeth the whole summe of this latter Agyptian learning into three clemstrom. I see feuerall forts, viz. Epiftolar, which is vied in writing common Epiftles; Sacerdotall, which is peculiar to their Priests; and Sacred; which Sacred containeth Scripture of two kindes: the one proper, which is expressed by letters Alphabeticall in ob-50 scure and figurative wordes; as for example, where it is written: The 1018 by the Hornet participateth the beautic of the Hawke; which is red thus: The Moone doth by the Sunne borrow part of the light of God: because Light is an Image of diuine beautie; the other fymbolicall, or by fignatures, which is three-fold, viz. Imitatine, Tropicall, and Ænygmaticall: Imitatine, which defigneth things by characters, like to the thinges fignified, as by a Circle the Sunne; and by the Hornes of the Moone, the Moone it felte: Tropicall or Transferent, which applies the divers formes and figures of naturall bodies or creatures, to fignific the dignities, fortunes, conditions, vertues, vices, affections, and actions of their Gods and of Men. So with the Egyptian Diuines, the Image of an Hawke fignifieth God, the figure of the Hornet lignifieth the Sunne, the picture of the Bird this fignifieth the Moone: by the forme of a Man, Prudence and Skilfulneffe: by a Lyon, Fortitude: by a Horfe, Libertie: by a Crocodile, Impudencie: by a Fifth, Hatred is to be understood: Ænygmaticall is a composition or mixture of Images or Similitudes; in which sense. themonstrous Image of a Lyons body having a Mans head, was graven on their

Temples and Altars, to fignifie, that to men all divine things are Ænygmaticall and obscure. So the Image of the Sunne set on the head of a Crocodile, (which liueth aswell in the Waters, as on Land) expresseth, that the Sunne nourisheth Meteors in the Aire, aswell from the Waters as from the Earth. So a Scepter, at the top whereof is made an Eie, and an Eare, fignifieth God, Hearing, Seeing, and Governing all things. The Soythians are thought to have beene delighted with this kinde of writing. For thereides Syrius reporteth, That when Darius fending letters, threatned thanthura, King of the Septhians, with ruine and destruction of his

Kingdome, vnlesse he would acknowledge subjection: Idanthura returned to him a

Frog, their waters: by the Bird, their aire: by the Dart, their weapons: by the Plough, their lands: were fignified to be ready to be deliuered to Darius, as their Soueraigne Lord. But xyphoires made an other construction, viz. that the King meant, That except Darius with his Men did haiten away, as a Bird through the aire, or creepe into holes as a Mouse, or runne into the waters which they had paffed as a Frog, they should not escape his armes, but either be flaine, or being made

Captines, till his grounds. The same Historie is with little difference reported by

Mouse, a Frog, a Bird, a Dart, and a Plough-share: which Orontopagas, Tribune of 20 the Souldiers, interpreted to fignific, that by the Mouse, their dwellings: by the

Fref the death of Mofes, and in the one and fortieth yeare of the Egrefion, in the first moneth called Nifan, or March, Issuarthe sonne of Anni, of the Tribe of Esphraim, being filled with the Spirit of wiscodome, to coke on him the Gouernment of Issua's God guing him combort, and encouraging him to passe the River of Isradar, and to possess, and divide among the Ifraelites the Land promised.

The beginning of Iosuas rule St. Augustine dates with the raigne of Amintas, the Lib 18 de sigit. eighteenth King in Affria; with Corax the fixteenth King in Sieyonia, when Danaus Di. c.11.

gouerned the Argines; and Eriethonius, Athens, Iosua imitating in all thinges his Predecessor, sent ouer Iordan certaine discouerers to view the feat and strength of Ierico, the next Citie vnto him on the other side of the River, which hee was to paffe ouer. Which discoverers being faued, and sent backe by Rahab, a Woman of ill fame, because shee kept a Tauerne or Virling house, made Iofus know, that the Inhabitants of Ierico, and those of the Countrie about it, hearing of the approch of Israel had lost courage. Whereupon the day after the returne of the Spies, which was the fixth day of the one and fortieth yeare after the Egreffion, Josuaremoued from Sittim in the Plaines of Most, and drew downe his 10/2 to Armie to the bankes of the River Iordan; and gave them commandement to put themselnes in order to follow the Arke of God, when the Leuites tooke it vp, and 1063.3. moued towards the River: giving them withall this forcible encouragement. That they should thereby assure themselves of his favour and presence who is Lord of all the world, when the River of Iordan should be cut off and divided, and the waters comming from aboue should stand still in a heap; whereby those below towards the Dead fea wanting supply, they might passe over into the land of Canan with drie feet.

Healso commanded Reuben, Gad, and the halfe Tribe of Manasse, toprepare Logi. 14. themselues (according to their Couenant made with Moses) to march in the head of the rest, and as we call it in this age, to leade in the Vanguard, which through all the Deferts of Arabia, from the Mount Sinai to this place, those of the Tribe of Juda had performed. For these Tribes being already prouided of their habitations, and the Countrie and Cities of the America, by the helpe of the refl, conquered for them: It Countreand cures of the Amornic, by the neighbor of the transconduction of them. It agreed with inflice & equalitie, that Renben, Gad, and the halfe of Manaffe should also affast their brethren in the obtaining of their parts, as yet in their enemies possession. On the bankes of Invan they rested themselvies from the fixth day to the ninth; and on the tenth day of the first Moneth Nifan or March, they past ouer to the o-40 ther fide, taking with them twelve stones from the drie ground in the middest of the River : which, for a memorie of that miracle by God wrought, they fet up at Gilgal, on the East fide of the Citie of Ierico, where they incamped the first night. At which place Iofuagaue commandement; that all borne in the last fortieth yeare in the De- 10fuse. ferts should bee circumcifed, which ceremonie to that day had been omitted. Of 1665.8. the neglect whereof S. Augustine giveth for cause, The peoples contempt of their Aug. q.3. in Fos. Superiours. Thomas excuseth it in this sort; That the Israelites knew not the certaine Thompset 3. time of their remoning from one place to an other: Damafeen, That it was not need-quali 70. at 1 full by circumcifion to diffinguish them from other Nations, at such time as they 4-ad-3. lived by themselves and a-part from all Nations.

50 On the fourteenth day of the same Moneth, the children of Ifrael celebrated the Paffeoner now the third time; first, at their leaving Egypt; secondly, at Mount Si- 765,10, mai; and now at Gilgal. After which being desirous to taste of the fruits of the Countrie, and hauing, as it were, surfeited on Man, they parched of the Corne of the land, being not yet fully ripe, and eate thereof.

Herodotus: The fourth and last part which is Morall, and Politique, doth containe especially 30 the Lawes, which (according to Laertius) Mercurius Trismegistus, or Ter Maximus denifed; who in his Bookes or Dialogues of Pimander and Afelepius, hath written fo man thinges of God, worthy of admiration; aswell (faith Sixtus Senensis) of the Trin , and of the comming of Christ, as of the last and scarefull day of Indgement: that (as faith the same Author, the opinion being also ancient) he is not only to be accounted a Philosopher, but a Prophet of things to come.

Lamblicus in his Bookes of Mysteries of the Legyptians, taking two very ancient Historians for his Authors, to wit, Seleucus and Menetus, affirmeth that this Mercurie was not only the Inuentor of the Agyptian Philosophie, but of all other learning, called the Wifedome of the Egyptians before remembred : and that he wrote of that 40 fubicet 36525 Bookes, or Pages. Of which there were numbred, of Fierie Spirits, one hundred Bookes; of Aereall Spirits as many, and of Spirits Celestiall a thoufand, which because they were out of the Agyptian language converted by certaine learned Philosophers into the naturall Greeke, they seemed to have beene first writston Strond, ten in that tongue. Clemens Alexandrinus writeth, that among the Bookes of Hermes, to wit, of the Wife lame of the Layptians, there were extant in his time 36. of Phyfick fixe bookes; of the orders of Priests ten; and of Astrologie foure.

And as a Moles beganne to distribute those Regions beyond tordan, to wit, the Lands of the Amorites, which Og of Bafan, and Silven held, so did Jofua performe the reft : and after a view and partition made of the Territories, he gaue to each Tribe his portion by lot. But this partition, and distribution, was not done at once, but at three fenerall times; first, by Moles to Gad, Ruben, and the halfe Tribe of Manaffe, of the Lands ouer Iordan; Secondly, by Iofua, to the Tribe of Anda, Ephraim, and the other halfe Tribe of Manaffe, about the fifth yeare of his government : proved in the 14. of Iofua, v. 10. and a third division was made to the other seven Tribes at Shile, where lolus feated the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

The victories of Iofua against the Kings of the Canaanites, are so particularly set 10 downe in his owne bookes, as I shall not neede to lengthen this part by their repetition. In whose Storie I chiefly note these particulars. First, how in the beginning of the warre, those little Kings or Reguli of the Canaanites , had not so much viderflanding, as to vnite themselves together against the Israelies; but according to the custome of those cstates, from whose Gouernours God hath taken away all wildom and fore-fight, they left those of their owne Nation, which were next the inuaders, to them felues and to their owne defences : hoping that the fire kindled fomewhat farre off, might againg have been quenched, ere it could spread it selfe so far as their owne Territories and Cities. But after fuch time as Jerico and Ai were entred, and the Kings, People, and Cities confumed, fine of those 31. Kings (all which at length 20 perified in that warre) joyned themselves together, first attempting the Gibeonies, who had rendred themselves to Iosia. Only five (the rest looking on to see the succoffer namely the King of the lebufites, in lebus, or Hierufalem, the Kings of Hebron, Jarmoth, Lachis, and Eglon, addrest themselves for resistance; whose Armie being by Iofu: furprised and broken, themselves despairing to scape by flight, and hopelesse of mercy by fubmiffion, creeping into a Caue vnder ground, were thence by Iofia drawne forth and hanged. In the profequation of which victorie hee also tooke Makkedah, and Libnah, and Lachis. To the reliefe whereof Horam King of Gezar hastened, and perished. After which Iglua possess himselfe of Eelen, Hebron, and Debir, destroying the Cities with their Princes.

Inf.10:

In the end, and when the South Countries were possest, the Cities thereof conquered, and their Kings, and People made dust the rest of the Canaanités, guided by the ouer-late counfailes of necessitie, vnited themselves, to make one groffe strength and bodie of an Armie: which Jabin, King of Hazor, practifed and gathered together, being at that time of all the Canaanite Kings the most powerfull which Armie being by lofus discourred, as the same rested neare the Lake of Merom, hee vsed such diligence, as he came on them vnawares; and obtaining an absolute victorie ouer them he profequited the fame to the vitermost effect. And, besides the slaughter of the defendants, he entred their Cities: of which he burnt Hazor only, referring the rest for Ifrael to inhabite and enioy.

Secondly, I note, that Iofua shewed himselfe a skillfull man of Warre, for that in those ancient times he yied the stratageme of an ambush in taking of disand in that he broke the Armies of the first fine Kings of the Amorites, which attempted Gibeon, by furprife. For he marched all night from his camp at Gilgal, and fet on them early the next day: when they suspected no enemie at hand: as hee did also at Meron, when he ouerthrew Jabin, and his confederates. After which, making the best profit of his victoric, he affaulted the great Citie of Hazor.

Thirdly, the miracles which God wrought during this warre, were exceeding admirable; as the flay of the River of Jordan at the Springs, fo as the Armie of Ifrael past it with a drie foot; the fall of Ierico by the found of the Hornes; the shewers of 50 Haile-stones, which fell vpon the Amorites in their slight from Gibeon, whereby more of them perifhed, than by the fword of Ifrael: againe; the arrest of the Sunnein the firmament, whereby the day was fo much the more lengthened, as the Ifraelites had time to execute all those, which fled after the ouerthrow : a wonder of wonders, and a worke onely proper to the all-powerfull God.

Fourthly, out of the passage betweene losus and the Gibeonites, the Lostrine of keeping Faith is to plainly and excellently taught, as it taketh away all englion, it admitteth no diffinction, nor leaueth open any hole or out-let at all to that cunning perfidiousnesse, and horrible deceit of this latterage, called Aquinocation. For, notwithflanding that thefe Gibeontes were a people of the Heuites, expresty and by Info. 7 name, by the commandement of God to be rooted out, and not with landing that they were liers, and deceivers, and counterfeits, and that they did over-reach, and as it were, deride Iolua, and the Princes of Ifrael, by faining to bee fent as Embaffato dours from a farre Countrie, in which traugile their clothes were worne; their bread mouldie, which they answed to have beene warme for newneffe when they first fet out; their barrells and bottles of wine broken; their shoes patcht; and their facks rent and ragged : Yet Infine having fworne vnto them by the Lord God of Info. from the

Now if cuer man had warrant to breake Faith, and to retract his promife made, Io/ua had it. For first, the commandement which hee received from God to roote out this Nation among the rest, preceded by farre the peace which hee had granted 20 them. Secondly, he might justly have put these mento the sword, and have fackt their Cities; if there bee any cuasion from a promise made, whereof the liuing God is called to witnesse. For it was not to the Gibeonites that hee gaue peace, because hee knew them to bee a people hated of God. Hee told them; that if they lose 1. were of the Heuites, it was not in his power to make a league with them. But it was to a strange people that hee gaue faith, and to a Nation which came from farre, who hearing of the wonders which the God of Israel had done in Egypt and ouer Iordan, fought for peace and protection from his people. Thirdly, the accord, 106, cq 200/14. which Ifrael made with these craftic Canaanites, was without warrant. For it is written in the same place, That the Ifraelites accepted their tale; that is ; beleeved 30 what they had faid, and counfailed not with the month of the Lord. Fourthly, these men who were knowne Idolaters; and ferued those Puppers of the Heathen, men of an Apish Religion, as all Worshippers of Images are, could not challenge the witnesse of the true God, in whome they beleeved not. I fay therefore, that if cuer man might have ferued himfelfe by any cualion or diffinction, Jo/us might inftly haue done it. For hee needed not in this case the helpe of Aguinocation, or Mentall Reservation. For what hee sware, hee sware in good Faith; but hee fware nothing, nor made any promife at all to the Gibeonites. And yet, to the end that the faithlesse subtilitie of man should borrow nothing in the future from his example, who knowing well, that the promises hee made in the name of God, 40 were made to the liuing God, and not to the dying Man; hee held them firme, and

For it is not, as faithlesse men take it, that he which sweareth to a Man; to a Societic, to a State, or to a King, and fweareth by the name of the lining Lord, and in his presence, That this promise (if it be broken) is broken to a Man, to a Societie, to a State, or to a Prince; but the promife in the name of God made, is broken to God. It is God, that wee therein neglect: wee therein professe that wee searchim not, and that we fet him at nought and defie him. If hee that without Referention of honour giueth a lie in the presence of the King, or of his Superiout, doth in point 50 of Honour give the lie to the King himfelfe, or to his Superiour; how much more doth he breake Faith with God; that giveth Faith in the presence of God, promifeth in his name, and makes him a witnesse of the Couenant made?

inuiolable, notwithstanding that they, to whom hee had sworne it, were worship-

Out of doubt, it is a fearefull thing for a Sonne to breake the Promise, Will, or Deed of the Father; for a State, or Kingdome, to breake those Contracts

No more could Zabulon enjoy Kuron, and Nahalol, but received tribute from them. Also the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among the Ephraims : and among the 1616,210. children of Manasse, on the West of Iordan, the Canaanites held Bethshean, Taanach, Indiana, Dor, Ibleam, and Meggado; yea Hierusalem it selfe did the Iebusites defend aboue soure hundred yeares, euen till Dauids time.

Now losualined one hundred and ten yeares, eighteene of which he gouerned Israel, and then changed this life for a better. The time of his rule is not expressed in the Scriptures, which caufeth divers to coniccture diverfly of the continuance. To fephus gives him five and twentie yeares, Seder Ollam Rabbi the Author of the He-20 brew Chronologie eight and twentie: And Maffeus fixe and twentie: Maimonius cited by Massus, fourteene: Ioannes Lucidus, seuenteene: Caietanus, ten : Eusebius gi-

But whereas there paffed 480. yeares from the delinerance of Ifrael out of Agypt, vnto the building of the Temple, it is necessarie that wee allow to Iosua only eighteene of them; as finding the rest supplied otherwife, which to mee feemes the most likely, and as I thinke, a well approued

The same necessitie of retaining precisely 480, yeares from the departure out of Agypt vnto the building of the Temple, continceth of errour, such as haue inser-20 ted yeares betweene Iofua and Othoniel, of whome Eufebius finds eight yeare, to Eufeb Pres F. which Arius Montagus adhereth; and for which hee giveth his reason in his foure many, and twentieth and last Chapters upon Iofua: Bunting reckons it nine yeare: Bucholzer and Reulner bur one, Codoman twentie, and Nicephorus no leffe than three and thirtie: whereas following the fure direction of these 480, yeares, there can be no void years found betweene Iosua and Othoniel, vnlesse they be taken out of those eighteen ascribed vnto Iofua by the accompt alreadic specified. The praises and acts of Iofua are briefly written in the fixe and fortieth Chapter of Ecclefiafficus, where amone many other things it is faid of him. Who was there before him like to him, for he fought the battells of the Lord?

40 That he wrote the booke called by this name, it was the opinion of Arius Montanus, because it is said in the last Chapter ver. 26. And I os v A wrote these wordes in the booke of the law of God : which feemeth rather to have beene meant by the couenant which Iofua made with Ifrael in Sichem, where they all promifed to ferue and obay the Lord : which promise Iosus caused to be written in the booke of the Law : and of this opinion were Caietan and Abulensis: Theodoret doth likewise conceine that the booke of Iosus was collected out of an ancient Volume, intituled Liber Instorum: Lieut. remembred by Iofua himselfe, and others, that it was the worke of Samuel; for whereas Montanus groundeth his opinion vpon these wordes of the 26, verse. And I o sy a wrote these wordes, &c. this place hath nothing in it to proue it, for when the to people had answered I o sv A: The Lord our Godwill we ferue, and his voice will we obay, 5, last 2, 2, 2, 2, it followeth that Iofua made a couenant with the people, and wrote the same in the booke of the Law of God.

There lived at once with Iofua, Ericthonius in Attica, who taught that Nation to yoke beafts together, thereby to till the ground with more ease and speede: And which have beene made in former times, and confirmed by publique faith. For though it were 400, yeares after 10 fun, that Saul, euen out of deuotion, flaughtered fome of those people descended of the Gikeonites : yet God who forgat not what the Predeceffours and Fore-fathers of Saul and the Ifraelites had fworne in his name, afflicted the whole Nation with a confuming famine; and could not be appeafed, till feuen of Saules fonnes were deliuered to the Gibeonites grieged, and by

And certainly, if it be permitted by the helpe of a ridiculous diffinction, or by a God-mocking equinocation, to fweare one thing by the name of the lining God, and to referue in filence a contrarie intent : the life of man, the chates of men, the faith of Subjects to Kings, of Seruants to their Mafters, of Vaffalls to their Lords, of Wines to their Hulbands, and of Children to their Parents, and of all trialls of right, will not onely be made vncertaine, but all the chaines, whereby freemen are tied in the world, be torne a funder. It is by oath (when Kings and Armics cannot paffe) that we enter into the Cities of our enemies, and into their Armies. it is by oath that warres take ende, which weapons cannot ende. And what is it or ought it to be that makes an oath thus powerfull, but this; That he that fweareth by the name of God, doth affure others that his wordes are true, as the Lord of all the World is true whom he calleth for a witnesse, and in whose presence he that taketh the oath hath promifed ? I am not ignorant of their poore enalions, which play 20 with the feueritie of Gods Commaundements in this kinde : But this indeede is the best answere. That he breakes no faith, that hath none to breake. For whosoener hath faith and the feare of God dares not doe it.

The Christians in the Holie Land when they were at the greatest, and had brought the Caliph of Egypt to pay them tribute, did not only loofe it againe, but were foone after beaten out of the Holie Land it felfe : by reason (faith William of Tyre, a reuerend Bishop which wrote that storie) that Almerick the fiftieth King after Godfrey brake faith with the Caliph Elhadech, and his Vicegerent, The Soldan Sanar; who being fodainely inuaded by Almerick drew in the Turke Syracon to their aide: whose Nephew Seladine, after he had made Agypt his owne, beate the Christians 20 out of the Hole Land; neither would the woodden Croffe (the very Croffe fay they that Christ died on) give them victoric over Seladine, when they brought it into the field as their last refuge: seeing they had for sworne themselves in his name, that was crucified thereon. And if it bee a direction from the holy Ghost, That hee that speakethlies, shall be destroied, and that the mouth which offereth them, Saieth the Soule: how much more perilous is it (if any perill be greater than to destroy the soule) to fweare a lie? It was Eugenius the Pope, that perfwaded, or rather commanded the King of Hungarie after his great victorie ouer Amurath the Turke, and when the faid King had compelled him to peace, the most advantagious that ever was made for the Christians, to breake his faith, and to prouoke the Turke to renew the warre. 40 And though the faid King was farre stronger in the field than euer; yet he lost the battaile with 20000. Christians, and his owne life. But I will stay my hand: For this first volume will not hold the repetition of Gods judgements vpon faith-breakers; bee it against Infidels, Turkes, or Christians of divers Religions. Lamentable it is, that the taking of oathes now-a-daies, is rather made a matter of custome than of

It is also very remarkcable; That it pleased God to leaue so many Cities of the Canaanites vnconquered by Ifrael, to fcourge and afflict them, by fore-feeing their Idolatrie, and as it is faid in the Scriptures, To bee Thornes in their eies to proue them, 10f.12. Idolatrie, and as it is laid in the Scriptures, To bee Thornes in their eies to prove them, 111dg.1.0 111dg. and to teach them to make Warre. For these Citties hereafter named did not only 50 remaine in the Canaanites possession all the time of Iosua; but soone after his death, the Children of Dan were beaten out of the plaine Countries, and enforst to inhabite the Mountaines, and places of hardest accesse. And those of Index.v.14. Inda were not able to bee Masters of their owne Vallies; because, as it is writ-about the same time the fiftie Daughters of Danâus (as it is said) slew the fiftie Sonnes of Egyptus, all but Lynceus who succeeded Danaus, if the tale be true. There lived also with Iolua, Phanix and Cadmus, and neare the end of Ioluas life. Iupiter is faid to have ravilled Europathe Daughter of Phanix, (afterward married to After Liv. 8. c. 12. De rius King of Creta) and begat on her Minos, Radamanthus, and Sarvedon. But S. Augussine reports this rauishment to be committed by Xanthus, and yet they are more commonly taken for the Sonnes of Inpiter. But it may be doubted whether Minos Homes, Oding was Father to Deucalion, and Deucalion to Idomeneus, who was an old man at the war of Troy, and Sarpedon was in person a yong or strong man at the same Trojan warre. And so doth Neifor reckon vp in the Councell of the Greekes, The few and Perithous 10 for men of antiquitie, and of ages past: Minos being yet moreancient than any of

CHAP. VII.

Of the Tribes of Ifrael, that were planted in the borders of Phænicia, with fundrie Stories depending wpon those places.

The Prosme to the description of the whole Land of Canaan, with an exposition of the name of

HE Storic of the Indges ought to follow that of Iofua. after whome the Common-wealth of the Iewes was gouerned by Kings, of which fo many of them as ruled the ten Tribes, shall bee remembred when wee come to the description of Samaria: But because the Land of Canaan, and the borders thereof, were the Stages and Theaters, whereon the greatest part of the Storie past, with that which followeth hath beene aeted, I thinke it very pertinent (for the better vnderstanding of both) to make a Geographical description 40 of those Regions: that all things therein performed by the places knowne, may the better bee understood, and conceived. To which purpose (besides the addition of the Neighbour Countries) I have bestowed on every Tribe his proper portion: and doe shew what Cities and Places of strength, were by the Iewes obtained and what numbers it pleafed God to leave vnconquered: by whom he might correct and scourge them, when vngrateful for his many graces, they at fundric times forgat or neglected the Lord of all power, and adored those deafe and dead Idolls of the Heathen. Divina bonitas (faith S. AVGVSTINE) ideo maxime irafeitur in hoc faculo, ne irafeatur in futuro : & mifericorditer temporalem adhibet severitatem, ne aternamiussie inserat ultionem; The divine goodnesse is especially therefore 50 angrie in this world, that it may not be angrie in the world to come, and doth mercifully vie temporall severitie, that it may not infly bring vponus eternall vengeance.

To the Cities herein described, I have added a short Storic of the beginnings, and ends of divers Kingdomes and Common-weales: and to helpe my felfe herein, I have perufed divers of the best Authors vpon this subject: among whom, because I finde fo great disagreement in many particulars, I haue rather in such cases aduentured to follow mine owne reason, than to borrow any one of their old patternes.

And because Canaan, with Palastina of the Philistims, and the Lands of Ug and Sihon Kings of Bafan, and the Arabian Amorites, were but small Provinces of Spring it shall be necessarie, first to divide and bound the generall, and so to descend to this particular, now called the holy Land.

Syria, now Soria, according to the largest description, and as it was anciently to- Piol Aliastah a ken, imbraced all those Regions from the Euxine Sea to the Red Sea; and therefore 10 were the Cappadocians, which looke into Pontus called Leuco syrians, or white Syrians. Ptol. 5. But taking it shorter, and from the coast of Calicia, which is the North border, vnto Idumeatowards the South, Tigris towards the Sunne riling, and the Mediterrin Sca Westward: itthen containeth besides Babylonia, Chaldea, Arabia the Desart, and Arabia Petres, that Region also which the Greekes call Mesopotamia, the Hebrewes Syria, of the two Rivers, to wit, Tigris and Euphrates, for fo Aram-Naharaim is expoun-

Edeffa, fometime Rages, now Rage, was the Metropolis of this Region of Syria. In Aurogalius, Syria taken largely, there were many small Prouinces, as Calesyria which the Latines 20 call Syria Caua, because it lay in that fruitfull Valley betweene the Mountaines of Lybanus and Anti-lybanus, in which the famous Cities of Antioch, Laodicea, Apamea, with many others were seated. Then Damaseena or Syria Lybanica, taking name of the Citie Damascus, and the Mountaines of Lybanus, the Regall seate of the Adades, the first Kings of Syria. Adiovning to it was the Province of Sophene, or Syria Soba, 1.K.11. Choba, or Zobal: ouer which Adadezer commanded in Salomons time. 40 piis. The name of Canaan it had from Canaan the Sonne of CHAM, & lineua appellata fut CANAAN; The language was also called CANAAN, faith Montanus and after Hebraa of the Hebrewes: who tooke name from Heber, the Sonne of Sale, according caleb f.62, to S. Augustine. But Arias Montanus not so well allowing of this derivation, makes it a common name to all those of Woahs Sonnes, which past ouer Euphrates towards the West Sea. For the word Heber, faith he, is as much as transfens or transmittens, of going or passing over. And because the children of Abrahim had for a long time no certaine abiding : therefore as he thinks, they were by the Egyptians called Hebrei, as it were paffengers, which is also the opinion of C. Sigonius, and of Eusebius Euseb. Prep. Zlong before them both. It had also the name of Indea from Inda; and then after- name 1.7.6.3. 50 wards intituled the holy Land, because therein our Saniour Christ was borne, and buried. Now this part of Syria was againe divided into foure, namely into Edom, (otherwife Seir, or Edumea) Galilee, Samaria, and Indea. Now Zibn.4.

Now besides these Prounces of Phanicia, and Palassina (both which the River of torday boundeth; fauing that Phanicia stretcheth a little more Easterly towards Damafeus) that part also to the East of Iordan, and within the Mountaines of Hermon Gilead and Arnon, otherwife Traconi, fell to the possession of halfe Manasse, Gad, and Ruben, and therefore are accounted a part of Canaan alfo: aswell because anciently poffest by the Amorites, as for that they were conquered and enjoyed by the Ifraelites, which Eaftermost parts are againe divided into Bafan or Batanea, into Gilead. Moab, Alidian, Ammon, and the Territories of the Machati, Geffuri, Argobe, Hus. . They are knowne to the later Colmographers by the name of Arabia in generall; and by the names of Traconitis, Pieria, Batanea, Oc. of which I will speake in their pro- 10

But where Moles describeth the Land of Canaan in the tenth of Genelis, he maketh no mention of the later Proninces, which fell to Manalle, Gad, and Ruben, for thefe be his wordes. Then the border of the Canaanites was from Zidon, as thou commest to Gerar untill Azzah (which is Gaza) and this was the length of the Countrie North and South: then it followeth in the Text. And as thou goeff unto Sodome and Gomorah, and Admah, and Seboum, even unto Lasha: by which wordes Moses setteth downe the breadth, to wit, from the Dead Sea to the Mediterran. But in Deuteronomie it scemeth to be farre more large. For it is therein written : All the places whereon the foale of your feet shall treade shalbe yours : your coast shalbee from the wildernesse, and 20 from Libanon, and from the River Perah, unto the uttermoft Sea. Now for the length of the Countrie North and South, this description agreeth with the former : only Libanon is put for Zidon: and the Wilderneffe for Gerar and Azzah, which make no difference: but for the breadth and extent East and West, if Perah be taken for Euphrates: then the Land promised stretcheth it selfe both ouer Arabia Petrea, and the Defert as farre as the border of Babylon: which the Ifraelites neuer poffeft: nor at any time did so much as invade or attempt. And therefore Vadianus doth conceive that by the Riner Perah, was meant Iordan, and not Euphrates: taking light from this place of Iosva: Behold I have divided onto you by lot thefe Nations, that remaine to be an inheritance according to your Tribes : from Iordan with all the Nations that I have destroit 20 ed, euch unto the great Sea Westward.

And though it bee true that David greatly enlarged the Territorie of the holy Vadian. Epitom. Land: yetas Vadianus well noteth, if Perah in the former place bee taken for Euphratrium terre par- tes, then was it but per gentes in amicitiam receptas. For David did not at any time enter so farre to the East as Affyria, or Babylonia. Neither doth the not posselfing of all these Countries give advantage to those that would make any irreligious cavill, as touching the promise of God to the Israelites unperformed: For when both their Kings, Magistrates, and People, fell from his worship and service, it pleased him not only to inclose them within that Territorie, which was for so many people exceeding narrow: but therein and elsewhere to subject them vnto those Idolatrous Na- 40 tions, whose false and foolish Gods themselves also served and obased. And fure the promife by which the Hebrewes claimed the inheritance of Canaan, and the la-Deut. 11. v.21. fling enjoying thereof, to wit, as long as the heavens were above the earth, was tied to those conditions both in the Verses preceding, and subsequent: which the Ifraelites neuer performed. And therefore they could not hope for other than all mankinde could or can expect: who know that all forts of comforts from the mercifull goodneffe of God looked for, as well in this life as after it, are no longer to be eartended. than while we perseuer in his loue, seruice, and obedience. So in the eighth Verse of the eleuenth of Deuteronomie, the keeping of Gods Commandements was a condition iouned to the prosperitie of Ifrael. For therein it is written: Therefore shall yee 50 keepe all the Commandements which I command you this day: that yee may be strong, and goe in , and possesse the Land , whether yee goe to possesse it. Also that you may prolong your daies in the Landwhich the Lord (ware unto your Fathers, ere.

The like condition was also annexed to the enjoying of the land conquered, and the possession thereof, so long as the heavens were about the earth. For if ree keepe Deal. 11. diligently, faith he, all thefe commandements, which I command you to doe, that is to love the Lord your God, ere, then will the Lord cast out all thefe Nations before you, and vec shall possesse great Nations, and mightier than you. And here, though it bee manifest, that by reason of the breach of Gods Commandements and their falling away from the worthip of his all-powerfull Majestie, to the Idolattie of the Heathen, the conditionall promifes of God were absolutely voide, as depending upon obedience unperformed : yet I cannot mislike that exposition of Melanthon : For, faith he, oftendit promissionem pracipuam non esse de hoc Politico regno; He sheweth that his chiese proto mile is not of actual Kingdome. To which agrees that answere, which S. Hierome made to a certaine Heretique in his Epiftle ad Dardanum, who accused S. Hierom that he ouerthrew the reputation of the Jewes Storie, and brought the truth thereof in question, by drawing it altogether into an Allegorie, and ad illam duntaxat viuentium terram que in calis est; (that is) Only to that Land of the living which is in Heaven. Quoniam tota Iudaorum Regio adeò angusta sit ambitu, vt vix longitudinem habeat 160. milliarium, latitudinem verò 40, es in his etiam regiones loca vrbes es oppida funt plurima, nunquam à tudieis occupata, led tantum divina pollicitatione promissa: Because the whole Countrie of the lewes is so narrow in compasse that it scarce bath 160, miles inlength, and 40, miles in breadth, and in thefe are Countries, Places, Cities, and many Townes, which the 20 lowes never poffest, but were only granted by divine promife. In like manner the same Father speaketh vpon E/ay touching the bleffings promifed vnto Hierusalem: where he hath these wordes. De quo discimus Hierusalem nequaquamin Palastina Region Canana petendam: que totius Provincie deterrima est : & saxosis montibus asperatur . & penuriam patitur litis : itavt calellibus vtatur pluuijs, & raritatem fontium ciflernarum extructione Soletur : Sed in Dei manibus ad quam dicitur festinauerunt structores tui; From whence faith he, we learne, that Hierufalem is not to be fought in that Region of Palastina, which is the worlt of the whole Prouince, and ragged with craggie Mountaines : and suffereth the penurie of thirst : fo as it preserveth raine water, and supplieth the scarcitie of Wells by building Cefternes, but this Hierufalem is in Gods handes, to which it is faid, Thy builders have hafte-

Neque hoc dico in suggillationem terra Iudea, vt Hareticus Sycophanta mentitur: aut quo auferam historia veritatem : qua fundamentum est intelligentia spiritualis, sed vt decutiam supercilium Iud.corum: qui Synagoga angustias latitudini Ecclesia praserunt. Si enim occidentem tantum sequuntur literam, & non spiritum viuisicantem : ostendant terram promillionis laste & mellemanantem; Neither (faith he) fay I this to differace the land of Iudea (as the Hereticall [yeophant doth belie me) or to take away the truth of the Historie, which is the foundation of (pirituall under standing, but to beate downe the pride of the Iewes: which enlarge the straits of the Synagogue farther then the breadth of the Church : for if they follow only the killing letter, and not the quickening spirit, let them show the Land of

By this it may also be gathered, how socuer it be vnlikely (seeing the West-bound in the place, Deut. 11.24. had his truth in the literall fense, that Euphrates or Perath; which is made the East bound, should be taken only in a spiritual sense) yet neuerthe effethat Hieroms opinion inclineth to this, as if this Perath were not to be underftood for Euphrates: and that the promise it selfe was never so large: much lesse the plantation and conquest of Israel.

And now for a more particular description of this Holy Land, because Asher, Nephtalim, and Zabulan, held the Northermost part, and were feated in Phanicia, I will beginne with these three, taking Aber for the first: of which Tribe yet before 52 I focake, I must admonish the Reader touching the names of places in this, and the other Tribes to be mentioned, that he remember that many names by reason of the diners fancies of Translators, are dinersly expressed, so that to the viskilfull they may feeme divers, when they are one and the same : the reason of this diversitie (as by those learned in the Hebrew I am taught) is, partly because the ancient Editions of the Hebrew want vowels, the old Translators imagined other vowels than now the Hebrew Editions have; and partly because the Ancient expressed or omitted diuers confonants, otherwise than the latter thinke fit.

Of Sarepta, with a briefe Historie of Tyre in the same coast.

S Arepta, or after the Hebrew, Sarphath, is the next Citie Southward from Zidon, betweene it and the Riuor called Naar, or Fons hortorum Libani (of which more hereafter) standing in the way towards Tyre, a Citie very famous for the excellent Wine growing neare it : of which Sidonius.

I have no wine of Gaza, nor Falerna wine, Nor any for thy drinking of Sarepta's vine.

This Citic had also a Biftop of the Diocesse of Tyre : after it came to the Saracens and Turkes, as the reft : and is now called Saphet, faith Poftellus.

Not farre from Sarepta was fituate that fometime famous Citie of Tyre, whose fleets of thips commanded, and gaue the law ouer all the Mediterran Sea, and the borders thereof: during which time of greatnesse and power, the Tyrians erected Vtica, Leptis, and Carthage in Affrica, of which VIRGIL. For strength and for the commoditie of the harbour, and the better to receive 10 Trade from all places, it was in this new erection founded in an Iland, 700, pages from the continent: and therefore Ezekiel placeth it in the middelt of the Sea, as Exclusion fome reade, or as others in the inner-most part of the Sea, whence hee calleth it ver/3. fituate at the entrie of the Sea, as also the same Prophet calleth it the Mart of the Efai.23.3. people for many iles: and Es ax a Mart of the Nations: and fo Proude, Wealthie, and Magnificent was this Citie, as the Prophet Esay calleth the Merchants thereof 27.8. It excelled both in learning, and in manu-facture : especially in the making and dving of Purple, and Scarlot cloth: which, faith Inlins Pollux, was first found out by Hercules Dogge, who palling along it the Sea-coaft, and eating of the Fish Con20 chilis or Purpura: the haire of his lips became of that colour. It worthipped the fame Idolls that Zidon did: fauing that Hercules became their Patron in after-times. For Alexander Macedon, when the Tyrians presented him with a crowne of gold, and other gifts, defiring to remaine his friends and allies, answered them, that hee had vowed a facrifice to Hercules, the Defender of their Citie: and the Ancester of the Mucdonians Kings : and must therefore enter it. Whereupon they sent him word, that Hercules his Temple was in the Mountaine of old Tire: where he might performe that ceremonie; but this availed not. For Alexander was not so superfittious, as ambitious, hee defired to enter the Towne, which being denied, hee as one whome no perill could feare, nor labour wearie, gathered together as many 30 ships as he could; and brought from Libanus so great a number of Cedars, and so many waightie Stones, from the old Citie of Tyre adioyning, as notwithstanding that his materialls were often walht away with the strength of the Sea, and the Tides, yet he neuer refted, till hee had made a foote passage from the Continent to the Hand : and having once approched their Walls, hee over-topt them with Turrets of wood, and other frames: from whence (having filled the body of force with the violent mouing Spirit of resolution) he became Lord thereof, putting all to the fword that relifted, after which he caused 2000, more to be hung vp in a ranke all alongst the Sea-shore: which exequation vpon cold bloud hee performed (as some Authors affirme) vpon the iffues of those slaues which had formerly slaine all their

Soone after this repulse of Salmahaslar, and about 200, yeares before the victoric of Alexander, Nabuchodonofor at fuch time as he destroiced Hierusalem with 10 the Temple, came before this Citie: who indeed gaue to Alexander the example of that despairefull worke, of ioyning it to the Continent. For Nabuchodonosor had formerly done it: though by the diligence of the Citizens, and the strength of the Sea, the same cawfey and passage was againe broken downe, and demolished.

Against Nabuchodonofor, for many yeares, the Tyrians defended themselues: for folong did thefe Babylanians continue before it, As enery head was made bald, and enery floulder made bare, faith Ezekiel, who with the Prophet Elay had manifeftly foretold the destruction of this proude place. In the end and after thirteene yeares siege or more, the Tyrians despoiled of all their hopes, and remembring ouer-late the predictions and threatnings of Gods Prophets, having prepared a convenient number 20 of thips, abandoned their Citie, transporting with themselves the ablest of all that remained; and with their wines, children, and portable riches failed thence into Cyprus, Carthage, and other Maritimate Cities of their Tributaries, or Confederates: fo as the Babylonians finding nothing therein, either to fatisfie fo many labours and perills, or any person vpon whom to avenge themselves for the losse of so many bodies in that Warre: It pleased God in recompence thereof (who strengthened this resolution, as in a worke of his owne) to make Nabuchodonosor victorious ouer the Agyptians: and gaue him that Kingdome and the spoile thereof, as it were in wages for his Armie. Whereupon Saint Hierome noteth, that God leaueth not the good deeds of the Heathen vnrewarded: who though they cannot hope by any laudable 30 worldly action, to attaine vnto that eternall happineffe referued for his Sernants and Saints: yet fuch is the boundleffe goodneffe of God, as he often repaieth them with

From this Callle the Lords of Thoron, famous in the Storie of the Warres for the recourre of the Holy Land, derive their names, and take their Nobilitie. It had in it a curious Chappell, dedicated to the bleffed Virgin, in which Humphrey of Thoron, Conflable to Baldwine the third, King of Hierufalem, lieth buried: There were fine Castles besides this within the Territorie of Affer: whereof foure are seated all-

It is true that the River of Chi-derstand in o-Toutaketh water from Chedumim: but not in that fallion which Montanus hath described it: neither doth it finde the Sea at Ptolomais Acon, according to Montanus: running by Pebut farther to the South betweene Caiphas and Sicaminum, witnesse Ziegler, Adricho-tas of Arabia, falleth into the mius, and Schrot.

Belides these Rivers there are divers famous Springs and Fountaines, as that of & divide th A. liuing waters adiovning to Tyre : and a Maferephot, or after S. The Rivers which Libanus bestoweth on the neighbour Regions are, Chrylorrhoas, Jordan, Eleutherus, Leontes, Lycus, Adonis, Fons hortorum Libani, and others.

The rest of the Mountaines of Asser, are those Hills aboue Tyre; and the Hills of Saren, both exceeding fruitfull: but those are but of a low stature, compared with Libanus: for from Nebe, or the Mountaine of Abarim, in Ruben, Moles beheld Libanus three-score miles distant.

Vnder Aphee towards the Sea they fet the Citie of Efdrelon, in the plaines of Ga-Tudith, 1.8. 6 lilee, called also the great field of Eferelon, and Maggedo: in the border whereof are the ruines of Aphee to be seene, faith Brochard, and Breidenbach. After these are the Cities of Cafaloth, of which 1. Macchab. 9.2. Anem or Hen-Gannim of the Leuites, and Seetima or Shahatima, the West border of Isachar, of which 101.19.22. From hence ranging the Sea coast, there is found the Castle of Pilgrimes: a strong Castle inuironed with the Sea, fometime the store-house and Magaline of the Christians, and built by the Earle of S.Giles or Tolonfe.

From the Castle of Pilgrimes the Sea maketh a great Bay towards the North, and the farthermost shore beginneth Mount Carmell, not farre from the River Chilon: where Elijah affembled all the Prophets, and Priests of Bral, and praied King Achab and the people affembled, to make triall whether the God of Ifrael, or the Idoll of Bul, were to be worthipped, by laying a facrifice without fire on the Altar: which done the Priefts of Bast praied, and cut their owne flesh after their manner, but the fire kindled not, while Elijah in derifion told them that their God was either in purluite of his enemies not at leifure, or perchance a-fleepe, &c. but at the praier of Elijah his fire kindled not with standing that he had caused the people to cast many Vessells of water thereon; by which miracle the people incenfed, flew all those Idolaters on the bankes of Chilon adjoyning.

At the foote of this Mountaine to the North standeth Caiphas, built, as they say, by Caiphus the high Prieft. It is also knowne by the name of Porsina and Porphyria, fometime a Suffragane Bishops scate. Returning agains from the Sea coast towards Tiberius by the bankes of Chifon, there are found the Citie of Hapharaim or Aphraim, and the Cafiles of Mefra, and Saba: of which Brochard and Breidenbach: and then 20 Naim on the River Chifon: a beautifull Citie while it stood, in the Gates whereof Christ raised from death the widdowes only sonne.

Then Seon or Shion named Iofua 19. betweene the two Hills of Hermon, in Ifachar: beyond it standeth Endar, famous by reason of the Inchauntresse that undertooke to raife up the body of Samuel at the infligation of Saul.

Beyond it stands Anaharath and Rabbith named 10 (c.19. v.19.20. Then Dabarath as it is named, Iof . 21.28. or Dobratha, as it is named, 1. Chron. 6.72. This Citie (which stretcheth it selfe ouer Chison) was a Citie of refuge belonging to the Le-

THE HALFE OF THE TRIBE OF MANASSE.

Of the bounds of this halfe Tribe: and of Scythopolis, Salem, Therfa, and others.

He next Tribe which joyneth it felfe to Ifachar towards the South, is the halfe of Manalle, on the West side of Iordan, Manalles was the first begotten of Joseph, the eleventh some of Jacob. His mother was an Egyptian, the Daughter of Putiphar, Prieft and Prince of Heliovoan Agyptian, the Laugust of Amyron, the grand-children of is: which Manufes with his brother Ephrain, the grand-children of Jacob, were by adoption numbred amongst the sonnes of Jacob, and made up the 20 number of the twelue Patriarks.

Of Manasse there were increased in Agypt, as they were numbred at Mount Sinai, 22200. able men: all which being confumed in the Defarts, there entred of their usues 52700 bearing armes. The Territorie which fell to this one halfeof Manaffe, was bounded by Jordan on the East, and Dora vpon the Mediterran Sea on the West, Ie zael on the North, and Machinata is the South border.

The first and principall Citie which stood in this Territorie was Bethsan, sometime Nyla, faith Plinie, built by Liber Pater, in honour of his Nurse there buried, of plin, lib. 5, c.18, the same name, which Solinus confirmes. Afterward when the Soythians inuaded 1fin the leffe, and pierst into the South, to the vetermost of Calefria, they built this 20 Citie a-new, and very magnificent and it had thereupon the name of Seythopolis, or the Citie of Scythians given it by the Greekes.

These barbarous Northren people, constrained the Iewes to fight against their owne Nation and kindred, by whose handes when they had obtained victorie, they themselves set on the Jewes which served them, and slew them all. Stephanus makes it the vtmost towards the South of Calesyria: and Strabo ioynes it to Galilee, It is scated betweene lordan and the Hills of Gilboe, in aulone ad montes acrabitena, faith Ziegler. But I finde it in the East part of the Valley of iefrael neare Jordan : after that Jordan streightneth it selfe againe into a River : leaving the Sea or Lake Genezareth. Notwithstanding, Montanus describes it faire to the West, and towards the Medi-

40 terran Sea neare Endor, contrarie to Stella, Laieftan, Adrichome, and all other the best Authors. This Citie was the greatest of all those of Decapolis: but the children of examalle could not expell the Inhabitants thereof; and therefore called it Sane an enimie, or Bech-lan, the house of an enimie.

Ouer the walls of this Beth/an the Philissims hung the bodie of Saul, and his sonnes, Jude 1, 10,170 flaine at Gilboe. It had, while the Christian Religion flourished in those parts, an de Bell fact. Archbishop, who had nine other Bishops of his Diocesse, numbered by Tyrius, in his 14. Booke and 12. Chapter: but the same was afterward thanslated to Nazareth. The later trausilers in those parts affirme, that there is daily taken our among the rubble and the ruines of that Citie, goodly pillers and other peeces of excellent 50 marble, which witneffe the stately buildings, and magnificence which it had in elder times, but it is now a poore and defolate Village.

From Both an keeping the way by Jordan, they finde an ancient Citie called Salem which Citie the ancient Rabbines, faith Hierome, doe not finde to bee the fame Hieron in Loift. with Hierufalem: there being in the time of Hierome and fince, a towne of that name, Lection.

neare Scythopolis before remembred, which if the place of Scripture Gen. 13.18. doe not confirme, where the Fulgar readeth transfuita, in Salem orbem Sichemorum ( for which others reade, venit incolumis ad Civitatem Sechemum, making the word Shelem not to be a proper name, but an adjective) yet the place Iolin 3.13. where it is faid, that John was Baptizing in Anon neare Saleim, may fomewhat strengthen this opinion, and yet it is not valikely that this Saleim of which S. John speaketh, is but contracted of Shahalim, of which in the Tribe of Beniamin, 1. Sam. 9.4. This word Innius maketh to be the Plurall of Shuhal: of which we reade, 1.Sam. 13.17. for as for that which is added out of Cant. 6.12. of Shulammitis, as if it had been eas much as a Woman of this Saleim, neare Lnon, it hath no probabilitie.

Not farre from thence where they place Salem, they finde Bezeeh the Citie of Adombezec, lofephus calls it Bala: here it was that Saul affembled the ftrength of Ifplace Ind. 1.3. rael, and Inda, to the number of 330000. when he meant to relieue Inbest Gilead, ahave beene in grainth Wash the Ammonite: who would give them no other conditions of peace than Inde. to fuffer their right cies to be thrust out. Neare Bezech is the Citie of Bethbera or rather Beth-bara of which Indg. 7.2 4. in the Storie of Gedeon: and then Ephra or Hophra wherein Gesleon inhabited: in the border whereof flood an Altar confecrated to Bial: which he pulled downe and defaced; and neare it that stone, on which Abimilee the Bastard flew his 70. brothers: a Heathenish crueltie, practifed by the Turke to this day; and not farre hence, betweene the Village of Afophon and Iordan, Ptolo- 20

Islands In Inches Lashurus ouerthrew Alexander King of the Ienes : and flaughtered as Islands numbreth them 3000. but according to Timagenes 50000. after which victorie, as Ptolomie past by the Villages of the Jewes; hee flew all their women : and caused the yong children to bee fod ingreat caldrons, that the rest of the Ienes might thereby thinke that the Agyptians were growne to be men-eaters, and strike them with the Towards the West and on the border of Isachar, they place the Cities of * Aner

rome names it was afterward hanged, and their Citie given to the Leuites. In the body of this Territoric of Manaffe, but somewhat nearer Iordan, than to the Mediterran Sea, were three great Cities, to wit, Therft, whose King was one of those that Jolna flew : which the Kings of Israel vsed for their Regall seate : till such time as Samaria was built. From hence the wife of Ieroboam went to Achia to enquire of her fonnes health: who knowing her, though fhee were difguifed, told her of her fonnes death. The fecond was Thebes neare Samaria, of which name there are both in Agypt, and Greece, of great fame: in the affault of the Tower of this Towne, whereinto the 40 Citizens retired, the Ballard Abimilee was wounded by a waightie stone, throwne by a Woman ouer the Wall, who despairing of his recourse, commanded his Page to flay him out-right, because it should not be said that he perished by the stroke of a Woman. But others fet this Citie in Ephraim neare Sichem or Neapolis.

The third is Acrabata, of which the Territoric adioyning is called Acrabatena Hier Mac. 1.05 (one of the Ten Toparchies or Governments in Indea) for which Hierome 1. Macc. 5. reades Arabathena : but in the Greeke it is Acrabatine : Il'dore calls it Agrabat. This Citic had one of the largest Territories of all Palastine belonging to the Governour thereof. Jasephus remembreth it often, as in his fecond Booke of the Jewes Warres, 6. 11.25.28. and elfe where.

The difference betweene a Tetrarchie and a Toparchie, was, that the first was taken for a Prouince, and the other for a Citie with some leffer Territorie adiovning, and a Tetrarchis the same with Profes in Latine, and Profident in English, being commonly the fourth part of a Kingdome; and thereof fo called. Plinie nameth scuenteene Tetrarchies in Syria: the Holy Land had foure, and so hath the Kingdome of Ireland to this day, Lemster, Vister, Connath, and Mounster.

To the South-west of Aerabata they place the Cities of Balaam or Billiam, and Gethremmon of the Leuites : but Junius out of Iof. 21.25 and 1. Chron. 6.70. gathers that these two are but one and that libleham 101, 16, 11, is an other name of the same

Then is tefrael a Regall Citie, fet at the foot of the Mountaines of Gilbee towards the South-west: herein Iezabel by a false accusation caused Naboth to be stoned, to the end thee might possessed his Vineyard adjoyning to the Citie, which Naboth reto fused to fell, because it was his inheritance from his Father.

Ioram also was cast unburied into the same field : for which his Mother Iezabel King 2: 640. 2.

Toward the Sea from Infrael is the Citie which they call Gaber: in whose ascent as Abaziah King of Iuda fled from Iehu, when hee had flaine Ioram, hee was wounded with the shot of an arrow, of which wound hee died at Mageddo adioyning. The 2. K 13. 9. 27. Scripture calls this Citie of Gaber, Gur.

Then Adadremmen, neare vnto which the good King Iofics was flaine by Neche, King of Agypt, in a Warre vnaduifedly vndertaken. For Weeho marched towards Afyria against the King thereof: by the commandement of God: whome tolias 20 thought to relift in his paffage. It was afterward called Maximianopolis.

A neighbour Citie to Adadremmon was Maggeddo, often remembred in the Scri- tudy of ptures: whose King was flaine among the rest by Josua: yet they defended their Ci- 10/114,12, 17. tic for a long time against Manasse. The River vehich passeth by the Towne, may perhaps bee the same vyhich Ptolomie calleth Chorseus: and not that of vyhich wee haue fooken in Zabulon. For because this name is not found in the Scriptures, many of those that have described the Holie Land delineate no such River. Moore only fets it downe in his Geographie of the twelue Tribes: but the River which passeth by Maggeddo hee understandeth to bee but a branch, falling thereinto. Laiestan and Schrot make a great confluence of waters in this place: agreable to this Scripture in 30 the fifth of Indges: Then fought the Kings of Cansanin Tansac by the waters of Magged-do. But these Authors, and with them Stella, give it no other name then the Torrent fo called.

But seeing that ancient Cosmographers stretch out the bounds of Phanieia, euen to Sebafteor Samaria; and Straba farre beyond it on the Sea-coaft: And tofephus calls strab. 1.16. Cafaria Palastina a Citie of Phanicia, yea Laurentius Corninus extendeth Phanicia as 10/cp 1.15.2.13. farre as G.124: feeing also Ptolomie fets downe Chorfeus for the partition of Phanicia State. and Iudea: this River running East and West paralell with Samaria: it is very probable that this Torrent called Maggeddo, after the name of the Civie, which it watereth, is the same which Ptolomie in his fourth Table of Asia calleth Chorsess. The 40 later trauailers of the holy Land call Maggeddo Subimbre at this day.

Of Cafaria Palastine, and some other Townes.

From Miggeddo toward the Weft, and neare the Mediterran Sea, was that glo-rious Citic of Cafaria Palaffina: first, the Tower of Straton: the same which Plinie calls Apollonia: though Ptolomic fets Apollonia elsewhere, and toward Egypt, betweene this Citie and loppe, to which Velpalian gaue the name of Flaura Colonia. It so was by Herod rebuilt, who therein laboured to exceede all the workes in that part of the world. For besides the edifices, which hee reared within the Walls, of cut and polithe marbles, the Theater and Amphitheater; from whence he might looke o--uer the Seas farre away, with the high and stately Towers and Gates: hee forced a Harborow of great capacitie, being in former times but an open Bay and the wind blowing blowing from the Sea the Merchants haunting that Port, had no other hope, but in the strength of their cables and Anchors. This worke hee performed with such charge and labour, as the like of that kinde hath not been found in any Kingdome, nor in any age; which because the Materialls were fetcht from farre, and the waight of the stones was such as it exceedeth beliefe. I have added to sephus owne vvordes 1660.1.15. c.13. of this worke: which are thefe. Hanc locorum incommoditatem correcturus, circulum portius circumduxit, quantum putares magna classirecipienda sufficere: & in viginti vlnarum profundum, pragrandia faxa demifit : quorum pleraq, pedum quinquagintalongitudinis, latitudinis verò octodecim, altitudine nouem-pedali : fuerunt quadam etiam maiora, minoraalia; To mend this inconvenience of place (faith Ioser Hvs) he compast in a Bay 10 wherein a great fleete might well ride: and let downe great flones twentie fadome deepe: whereof some were fiftie foote long, eighteene foote broade, and nine foote thicke : some bigger, and some leffer. To this he added an arme or cawsie of two hundred foote long, to breake the waves: the reft he firength ned with a flone wall, with divers thately Towers thereon builded: of which the most magnificent hee called Drulin, after the name of Drufus, the fonne in law of Cofar: in whose honour hee intituled the Citie it selfe, C.esaria of Palastine: all which he performed in twelve yeares time.

L.14.6.12. bell. an Archbifhopricke, commanding twentie others vnder it, faith Tyrius. St. Hierome nameth Theophilus, Eufebius, Acacins, Enzorus, and Gelafius to haue 20 beene Bishops thereof. In this Citie was Cornelius the Centurion baptized by S. Peter: and herein dwelt Philip the Apoflle : S. Paul was herein two yeares prisoner, under the Prelident Falix, vnto the time and gouernment of Porcius Fellus: by whom making his appeale, he was fent to Cafar. Here when Herod Agrippalwas paffing on to celebrate the Quinquennalia, taking delight to bee called a God by his flatterers, hee was stricken with an Angell vnto death, faith Iofephus.

It was the first of the Easterne Cities that received a Bishop: afterward crecked into

To the North of Cafaria standeth Dora, or Naphoth Dor, as some reade Iof. 1.2. fo called (faith Adrichomius) because it ioyneth to the Sea, whose King was flaine by Iofua. But Innius for in Naphoth Dor, reades in tractibus Dor: and fo the Vulgar, in regionibus Dor : although 1, Reg. 4.11. for the like speech in the Hebrew it readeth 30 omnis Nephath Dor: The Septuagint in the place of Josus call it Nepheth-Dor, and in the other of the Kings Nepha-Dor: but the true name by other places (as Iof. 12.23. Inde. 1. 27.) may feeme to bee Der. It was a firing and powerfull Citie: and the fourth in account of those twelue Principalities or Sitarchies, which Salomon erected. Junius vpon Maccab. 15.11. placeth it betweene the Hill Carmel and the mouth of the River Cherfeus: for fo fome name the River Chorfeus, of which we have spo-Into this Citie, for the Brength thereof, Tryphon fled from Antiochus the fonne of Horse: the same perfidious villaine that received 200 talents for the ran-40 fome of Jonathan Macchabaus (whom he had taken by treacherie) and then flew him: and after him flew his owne Mafter, vfurping for a while the Kingdome of Syria. It had also a Bishop's seate of the Diocesse of Cafaria.

From Cafaria towards the South, they place the Cities of Capharnaum, Gabe, and Gulton, de Bell. Galgal: for belides that Capharnaum famous in the Euangelists they find in these parts Just Ato. c. 6. neare the West Sea, an other of the same name. Of Gabe Hierome in locis Hebraicis. The famous Galgal or Gilgal, was in Beniamin : but this Gilgal, they fay, it was whose King was flaine by Jolua.

Then Antipatris fo called of Herode, in honour of his Father : but in the time of Mass. 17. val. the Macchabees it was called Caphar salama: in the fields whereof Indas Macchabaus 50 ouerthrew a part of the Armie of Nicanor, Lieutenant to Demetrius: an armie drawn into Indea by attraiterous Iem, called Alcimus: who contended for the Priest hood, first under Bacchides, and then under Nicanor. To this was S. Paul carried prisoner from Hierusalem, conducted by 470. Souldiers, to defend him from the furie of the Jewes. In after-times the Armie of Godfrey of Bulion attempted it in vaine : yet was it taken by Baldwine. It was honoured in those daies with a Bishops seate, but it is now a poore Village called Affar, faith Brochard. Neare vnto this Citie the Prophet Ionas was three daies preserved in the body of a Whale.

Into the Land, from Antipatris and Cafaria, flandeth Warbata, whereof the Territorie taketh name : which Ceftius the Romane wasted with fire and sword, because the temes which dwelt at Cafaria fled thence, and carried with them the Bookes of Moles. Neare vnto it is the Mountaine of Abdia, the Steward of King Achab: wherein he hidde an hundreth Prophets, and fed them, after which hee himfelfe is faid to 10 haue obtained from God the Spirit of prophecie alfo.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Kingdome of Phanicia.

The bounds and thiefe Cities, and Founders, and Name, of this Kingdome : and of the invention of Letters afcribed

Снар. 8. С.1.

ECAVSE these five Tribes, of Affer, Nephtalim, Zabulon, Iffachar, and the halfe of Manaffe, poifeft the better part of that ancient Kingdome of Phanicia, to wit. of so much as lay to the South part of Anti-libanus: I have therefore gathered a Briefe of those Kinges which have governed therein : at least so many of them as time (which denoureth all things) hath left to posteritie: and that the rest have perished, it is not strange: feeing so many volumes of excellent learning in fo long a race and revolution, & in fo many changes of Estates and Conquests of Heathen Princes, have beene torne, cast away, or otherwise consumed.

The limits of this Kingdome, as touching the South parts, are very vicertaine: 40 but all Cosmographers doe in effect agree, that it takes beginning from the North, where that part of Syria, which is called Cafio is, ends: most of them bounding it by Orthofia, to the North of Tripolis. Ptolomie makes it a little larger, as reaching from Tto.4. Tho fee the River Eleutherns, that falls into the Sea at the Iland of Aradus, Igmewhat to the North of orthosia, and stretching from thence alongst the coast of the Mediterran sca, as farre as the River of Chorfeus, which feemes to bee that which the Iewes call the Plindles, care. Torrent or River of Maggeddo. Plinie extends it farther and comprehends Joppe within it: Corninus and Budaus, Ioppe and Gaza. Phanicia apud priscos appellata (faith BVD AEVS) que nunc Palastina Syria dicitur : It was called Phanicia of old (faith hee) which now is called Palastina of Syria.

50 Strabo comprehends in this Countrie of Phanicia; all the Sea fide of Indaa, and strab.l.16. Palaftina, even vnto Pelufum, the first Port of Egypt. On the contrarie Diodorus Bude. de afil 4. Sieulus, foldeth it vp in Calefyria, which hee boundeth not. But for my selfe I take a middle course, and like best of Ptolomies description, who was seldome deceived in his owneart. It had in it these famous Maritimate Cities (besides all those of the llands) to wit, Aradus, Orthofia, Tripolis, Botrys, Byblas, Borytus, Sidon, Tyre, Ptolomuss (or Acon) Dora, and Cafaria Palaflina: and by reafon of the many ports and goodly Sea-townes, it anciently commanded the Trades of the Eafterne world: and they were abfolute Kings of the Mediterran Sea.

The ancient Regall Seate of those Princes was Zidon, built by Zidon the first fonne of Cansan and the people then subject to that familie were called Zidonians: the same state continuing each wrote Josha stime. For till then it is probable that there was but one king of all that region; afterward called Phanicia: which Procepts also confirment in his second Booke of Vandall Warres. But in processe of time the Citie of Type adiopyning became the more magnificent; yet according to the Pro- to phet it was but a Daughter of Zidon, and by them first built and peopled.

But after the death of Mofes, and while lofus yet gouerned Ifred, Agenor an Agyptism of Thebas, or a Phomician bred in Agypt, came thence with his fonnes Canims, Ph. sins, Cyrus, and Chiss, (fay Cederane and Caritas) and built and posses the Cities of Tyre and Zidon to wit, the new Tyrus, and brought into Phomics (fo called after the name of his fecond Sonne) the Vet of the Iters: which also Cadenas in his purfaire after his fifter Europa taught the Gregins. For Tannus King of Crete, when he surprised Tyre, had flollen her thence of which the Poest educified the fable on Inpires transformation into a Bull, by whome that fleath was also supposed to be made. Pampenus Salmus makes Behas the first King of Phomicus: and findes Cadmus 20 his successive: whom he calleth his grand-child: and it Gerneth that Belus was the Father of Agenor, and not Neptune: because the successions of Dido held that name alwaies in reucerone, making it a pair of their owne as Afarnbad, Hamibad: which memorie Prigid also concleth in the Ceres:

The Queene anone commands the waightie bowle (Waightie with pretious stones and malfiegoid)
To flow with wine. This Belvs used of old,
And all of Belvs Line.

Whether this Belus were Father or Grand-father to Agenar, the matter is not great. But it feemeth to me by comparing of times, that Belus was Ancestor to the Phanitians, and preceded Agenar. For were Belus, or night Belus, the Conco Thepanical Concording to Euclidean State of Epaphus, or were he the Sonne of Telegonus, according to Euclidean systems agreed that Cereops then ruled in Attica: and in the end of Co-corps time, I also 3. Anguline, Mose left LeEgypt: Agenar successful thing at once 40 with 161s. Now that Agenar returned about the fame time into the Territorie of Euclion, I cannot doubt: neither doe! I denie, but that he gaue that Region the name of Phanitia, in honour of his Sonne. But in fleede of the building of Tyire, and Zidon, it is probable that he repaired and fortified both: and therefore was called a Founder, as Semiramis and Nabuchadonofor were of Buthlon.

For beeit true that Agenor was of the fame Nation, and brought vp in Agenor where he learnt the vice of letters (Agenor lourishing in all kind of learning in Moses time) or were he by Nation and Agenor set is it very likely that either he came to sauch his owne Territorie: or otherwise to defend the coast of Canasa, from the Istancia: who were by Moses led ont of Agenor to the great losse and distinction of the Nation: and by Jossaconducted ower tordam, to conquer and possess from the Agenor and the Nation: and by Jossaconducted ower tordam, to conquer and possess from the Moses which they received by the hand of God, in the R ed sea, and by the ten plaques cast on them before that, and by the slaughter of so many of the Male children at the same time, could not hinder the Hebrever from Inuading Canaan by Land: which also they knew had fo many powerfull Nations to defend it: the Defarts inter-jacent, and the firing Bedantes, (Nabutes, Emortes, and Ammonives their borderers: yet exgypt having fuch Vessells, or Ships, or Gallies, as were then in vsc: did not in all probabilities negled: to Garrison the Sea coast, or assist Agenor with such forces, as they had to force, and which they might performe with the greater facilitie, in that the Philissims which held the shores of Canaan, next adioyning wnto them, were their Friends and Confederates.

Now as it appeareth by the courfe of the florie, those Cities of Phanicia, which 10 Agenor was faid to haue built (that is, to haue fortified and defended againft no fua, and againft the Tribes after him, as Idah, spo, ro, ry rys, by Isfue allele the floring Gir. c. 19, v. 29, tic, Acthe afterward Ptolomuis, Aczib and Dor) were all that Phanicia had in those

That the Kings of Pharticia were mightic, especially by Sea, it appeareth, first by their defence against Israel: secondly by this; that Dauid and Salomon could not mafter them: but were glad of their alliance: thirdly, that one of their cliase, though they were then but Neguli, defended it selfe 13, yeares against a King of Kings, Nabubolomos and that Alexander the great (who being made victorious by the prouidence of God, seemed variefistable) speint more time in the recoverie of Tyre, than an in the conquest of all the Cities in Asia.

Other opinions there are, as that of Berofus out of Infephus, who conceives that Tyre was founded by Tyres the sonne of Infest. And for the Region it selfs, though Calliffhens derive it ab abuse dest Tyrura, and the Greekes from the word Phonos, of slaughter, because the Phonicians slew all that came on their coasts, yet for my selfs I take it that Phonix the sonne of Agenor gaue it that name. But that either Agenor, it is relicused in Phonicians of Catherns is Sonne in Greece, were the Innentors of Letters; it is relicused.

lous; and therefore the dispute vnnecessarie,

The £thopians affirme that Allas, Orion, Orpheus, Linus, Herenles, Prometheus, Cadmus, and others, had from them the firft light of all thole Arts, Sciences, and 30 civill Policies, which they afterward profet, and taught or thers: and that Pythogova, himfelfe was influeded by the Libyans: to wit, from the South and Superior £g:ptass: from whom thole which inhabited nearer the out-let of Allas, as they lay, borrowed their Divinities and Philosophie: and from them the Greekes, then babarous, received Giulitie. Againe, the Phanicians challenge this invention of Letters and of Learning: acknowledging nothing from the £g:ptians: at all; neither doe they allow that Aeenor and his sonnes were Afficians: whence Lucan.

And that Cadmus was the some of Agener, and was a Phomician, and not an Egyptian, it appearesh by that answere made by Zeno: when he in a kinde of reproch was called a stranger and a Phomician:

If a Phonician borne I am, what then? CADMYS was fo to whom Greece owes The Bookes of learned men.

Out of doubt the Phanicians were very ancient : and from the Records and Chronicles of Tyre, Iolephus the Historian confirmes a great part of his Antiquities. The Thracians againe subscribe to none of these reports: but affirme constantly. that the great Zamolxis flourished among them : when Atlas lived in Mauritania: Nilus and Vulcan in Ægypt: and Ochus in Phanicia. Yea, some of the French doe not blush to maintaine, that the ancient Gaules taught the Greekes the vse of Letters, and other Sciences. And doe not we know that our Bardes and Druids are as ancient as those Gaules, and that they fent their sonnes hither to bee by them instructed in all kinde of learning?

Lastly, whereas others bestow this invention on Moses, the same hath no probabilitie at all, for hee lived at fuch time as learning and arts flourished most, both in Ægypt, and Affria, and he himfelfe was brought vp in all the learning of the A. gyptians, from his infancie.

But true it is that letters were invented by those excellent Spirits of the first age. and before the generall floud : either by Seth, or Enos, or by whom elfe God knowes: from whom all wisedome and understanding hath proceeded. And as the same infinite God is present with all his Creatures, so hath he given the same invention to diuers Nations: whereof the one hath not had commerce with the other: as well in this as in many other knowledges: for even in Mexico, when it was first discovered, there was found written Bookes after the manner of those Hieroglyphicks, anciently 20 vsed by the Agyptians, and other Nations: and so had those Americans a kinde of Heraldrie: and their Princes differing in Armes and Scutchions, like vnto those vsed by the Kings and Nobilitie of other Nations. Iura naturalia communia, & generalia, erc. Naturall Lawes are common and generall.

Of the Kings of Tyre.

Vt what soeuer remaineth of the florie and Kings of Phanicia (the 20 bookes of Zeno, Sachoniatho, Mnaseas, and others of that Nation. being no where found) the fame is to be gathered out of the Scriptures, Iofephus, and Theophilus Antiochenus.

Agenor lived at once with Iofua, to whome fucceeded Phanix, of whom that part of Canaan, and so farre towards the North as Aradus, tooke the name of Phanicia: what Kings succeeded Phanix it doth not appeare: but at such time as the Gracians belieged Troy, Phasis gouerned Phanicia.

In Hieremies time and while Iehoiakim ruled in Iuda, the Tyrians had a King a-part: for Hieremie speaketh of the Kings of Zidon, of Tyre, of Edom, cre. as of seucrall

In Xerxes time, and when he prepared that incredible Armie wherewith he inuaded Greece, Tetramnestus ruled that part of Phanicia, about Tyre, and Zidon: who commanded as some Writers affirme, Xerxes fleete, or rather, as I suppose, those 300. Gallies, which himselfe brought to his aide: for at this time it seemeth, that the Phoenicians were Tributaries to the Persian : for being broken into Reguli, and pettie Kings in Hieremies time, they were subjected by Nabuchodonofor; of whose conquests in the Chapter before remembred, Hieremie prophecied.

Tennes, though not immediately, succeeded Tetramneslus: remembred by D. Siculus in his 14. Booke.

Strate, his fucceffor, and King of Zidon, Alexander Macedon threw out, because of 50 his dependancie vpon Darius, and that his Predecessors had served the East Empire against the Gracians. But divers Kings, of whomethere is no memorie, came betweene Tennes and Strato. For there were confumed 130. yeares and somewhat more betweene Xerxes and Alexander Macedon. And this man was by Alexander esteemed the more vnworthic of restitution, because (saith Curtius) hee rather sub- L. A. mitted himfelfe by the infligation of his Subjects (who forefaw their ytter ruine by relistance) than that hee had any disposition thereunto, or bare any good affection towards the Macedonians.

Of this Strate. Athenaus out of Theopompus reporteth, that hee was a man of ill Athen, 122, 12 liuing : and most voluptuous; also that hee appointed certaine games and prizes for Women dancers, and fingers: whom he to this end chiefly inuited, and affembled: that having beheld the most beautifull and lively among them, hee might recover them for his owne vie and delights. Of the strange accident about the death of one

10 Strate King of these coasts, S. Hierome and others make mention: who having heard Hieron, L. cons: that the Persians were neare him with an Armie too waightie for his strength, and louin. finding that hee was to hope for little grace, because of his falling away from that Empire, and his adhering to the £giptians; hee determining to kill himfelfe, but fainting in the exequation, his wife being present wrested the sword out of his hand and flew him: which done shee also therewith pierced her owne bodie, and died.

After Alexander was possest of Zidon, and the other Strato driven thence, Hee gaue the Kingdome to Hephaftion, to dispose of: who having received great entertainement of one of the Citizens, in whose house he lodged, offered to recompence him therewith; and willingly offered to establish him therein; but this Citizen no 20 leffe vertuous than rich, defired Hephaftion that this Honour might bee inferred on fome one of the bloud and race of their ancient Kings; and prefented vnto him Balonymus, whom Curtius calls Abdolominus, I v s T I N E Abdolomius, and Plutarch Alynomus: who at the very houre that he was called to this regall Estate, was with his owne handes working in his Garden, fetting hearbs, and rootes, for his reliefe and fustenance: though otherwise a wife man and exceeding iust.

These were the ancient Kings of Zidon: whose estate being afterward changed into Popular or Aristocraticall: and by times and turnes subjected to the Emperours of the East: there remaineth no farther memorie of them, than that which is formerly delivered in the Tribe of Affer.

30 The Kings of Tyre, who they were before Samuels time, it doth not appeare: 10fephus the Historian, as is faid, had many things wherewith hee garnished his Antiquities from the Tyrian Chronicles : and out of Josephus, and Theophilus Antiochenus, there may be gathered a descent of some twentie Kings of the Tyrians, but these Authors, though they both pretend to write out of Menander Ephelius, doe in no fort agree in the times of their raignes, nor in other particulars.

Abibalus is the first King of the Tyrians, that Iofephus and Theophilus remember: whom Theophilus calls Abemalus: the same perchance that the sonne of Sirach mentioneth in his fourtie and fixth Chapter, speaking of the Princes of the Tyrians.

To this Abibalus, Suron succeeded, if he be not one and the same with Abibalus. 49 David (faith Enfebius out of Eupolemus constrained this Suron to pay him Tribute, of Prep. Enangle. whom also David complaineth Pfal. 83.

Hiram fucceeded Suron, whom Infephus calls Irom, and Theophilus fometime Hieromenus, sometime Hieromus, but Tatian and Zonaras Chiram. He entred into a league with Danid, and fenthim Cedars with Masons, and Carpenters, to performe his buildings in Hieru(alem: after he had beaten thence the Jebusties. The same was hee that fo greatly affifted Salemen: whom he not only furnished with Cedars, and other Materialls towards the railing of the Temple, and with great fummes of money, but alfo he joyned with him in his enterprize of the East India, and of Ophir: and furnished Salomon with Mariners and Pilots: the Tyrians being of all Nations the most excellent Nauigators : and lent him 120. talents of gold. Of this Hiram there is not only mention in divers places of Scripture, but in to fephus in his Antiquities the 7 and 8. 2.50m.5.00 chap. 2. & 3. in Theophilus his 3<sup>d</sup> booke, in Tatianus his Oration against the Greekes: and 2. Sama. 5. in Zonar as Tome the fifft. This Prince feemed to be very mightie and magnificent, t. choon . he despised the 20. townes which Salomon offered him: he defended himselfe against 2. Promalion raigned after Mettimus his Father 40. yeares, and lived 56: In the 7. veire of whose raigne, Elifa failed into Affrica, and built Carthago, 142, yeares and 8. Moneths, after the Temple of Salomon: which by our accompt was 289. yeares after Troy taken, and 143. before Rome : and therefore that fiction by Virgil of Aneus and Dido must be farre out of square. For Pygmalion couctous of Sicheus his riches, who had married his fifter Elifa, flew him traiteroufly as he accompanied him 20 in hunting : or if we beleeue Justine and Virgil, at the Altar : whereupon Elifa fearing to be despoiled of her husbands treasure, fled by Sea into Affrica as aforesaid: whom when Promission prepared to purfue, he was by his Mothers teares, and by threates from the Oracle arrefted. Burea accompanied his lifter, and affifted her, in the erection of Carthage : and from him sprang that noble Familie of the Barce in Affrica, of which race descended many famous Captaines, and the great Hannibal. Seruius interprets this name of Dido by Virago, because of her man-like acts, others from Iedidis, a furname of Salomon.

Eluleus fucceeded Pygmilion, and raigned 36. yeares: the fame that ouerthrew the fleete of Salmanssfar, in the Port of Tyre: notwithstanding which hee continued his 40 fiege before it on the Land fide fine yeares, but in vaine.

After Eluleus, Ethobales gouerned the Tyrians, who vaunted himfelfe to be as wife as Daniel: and that he knew all secrets (faith Ezekiel) of whom the Prophet writeth at large in his 28. Chapter : out of whom it is gathered, that this Prince died, or was flaine in that long fiege of Nabuchodonofor : who ferrounded and attempted Tyre 13

venres together, ere he preuniled.

B.t.d followed Ethobales, and raigned 10. yeares a tributarie, perchance, to Nabuchodenofor: for after his death it was gouerned by divers Indges, fucceeding each other: First, by Ecnibalus, then by Chelbis, Abarus the Priest, Mittonus, and Gerastus, who held it among them fome 7. yeares, and odde Moneths: after whom Balatorus com- 50 manded therein as a King for one yeare: after him Merbalus fent from Babylon 4. yeares: after him Irom fent thence also, 20. yeares. of Bozivs his conceit that the Edumeans inhabiting along the Red Sea. were the Progenitors of the Tyrians, and that the Tyrians from them received and brought into Phanicia the knowledge of the true

ð. III.

F the great mutations of this Kingdome and State of the Tyrians, mixed with a discourse of discrs other Nations, there is one Bozius that hath written a Tract at large, intituled derumis Gentium. And although the great, and many alterations found in this and other Ci-ties, yea in all thinges vnder Heauen, haue proceeded from his ordinance who only is vnchangeable, and the same for euer; yet whereas the said Bozius, inforcing herehence, that the prosperitie and ruine of the Tyrians were fruits of their imbracing or forsaking the true Religion, to proue this his affertion, supposeth the Tyrians to have beene Edumaans, descended from E/au, Jacobs brother: first, it can hardly be beleeued that Tyre, when it flourished most in her ancient gloric, was in any fort truly denout and religious. But to this end (besides the proofe which the 20 Scriptures give of Hirams good affection when Salomon built the Temple) he brings Box, dervise, many coniecturall arguments: whereof the strongest is their pettigree and descent: Gem. 1.5.6.7. it being likely in his opinion that the posteritie of Esau received from him by Tradition the Religion of Abraham and Isaac. That the Tyrians were Edumeans, he endenours to shew, partly by weake reasons, painefully strained from some affinitie of names, which are arguments of more delight than waight : partly by authoritic. For Strabo, Herodotus, Plinie, and others witnesse, that the Tyrians came from the Red Sea, in which there were three Ilands, called Tyrus, Aradus, and Sidon: which very names (as he thinketh) were afterwards given to the Cities of Phanicia. Confidering therefore that all the coast of the Red Sea, was (in his opinion) under the Edu-

30 means: as Elah and Estiongaber, or under the Amalekites, who descended of Amalec the Nephew of Efan, whole chiefe Citie was Madian, fo called of Madian the fonne of Abraham by Cethura, whose posteritie did people it: the consequence appeares good (as he takes it) that the Tyrians originally were Edomites: differing little or nothing in Religion from the children of Ifrael. Hereunto hee addes that Cadmus and his Companions brought not into Greece the worthip of Affartis, the Idoll of the Sidomians. That the Parents of Thales and Pherecydes being Phenicians, themselves differed much in their Philosophie from the Idolatrous customes of the Greekes. That in Teman, a Towne of the Edumsans, was an Vniuersitie, wherein as may appeare by Eliphas the Temanite, who disputed with lob, Religion was sincerely taught.

Such is the discourse of Bozius, who labouring to proue one Paradoxe by an other, deserves in both very little credit. For neither doth it follow, that if the Tyrians were Edumeans, they were then of the true Religion, or well affected to God and his People: neither is it true that they were Edumeans at all. In what Religion Elau brought vp his children it is no where found written, but that himfelfe was a prophane man, and disauowed by God, the Scriptures in plaine termes expresse. That his posteritie were Idolaters, is directly proued in the fine and twentieth Chapter of the second booke of Chronicles. That the Edomites were perpetuall enemics to the House of Israel, sauconly when Davidand some of his race, Kings of Inda held them in subjection, who knowes not? or who is ignorant of Dauids unfriendly behaviour 50 amongst them, when first they were subdued? Surely it was not any argument of Kindred or Alliance, betweene Tyrus and Mount Seir, that Hiram held fuch good correspondence with Danid : cuen then when load slew all the Males of Edom : neither was it for their denotion to God, and good affection to Ifrael, that the Edomites were so illintreated. It seemeth that the pietie and ancient wisedome of Eliphaz the

Themanite was then forgotten, and the Edumaans punished, for being such as David in his owne daies found them. Although indeede the Citie of Teman whence Eliphaz came to reason with lob, is not that in Edumaa, but an other of the same name. lying East from the Sea of Galilee, and adioyning to Hus, the Countrie of 10b: and to Such the Citie of Bildad the Suhite, as both fuch Chorographers who best knew those parts, doe plainly shew, and the holy Text makes manifest. For lob is faid to have exceeded in riches; and Salomon in wifedome, all the people of the Eaft; not the inhabitants of Mount Seir, which lay due South from Palastina. True it is that Eliphase the fonne of Elau had a fonne called Teman: but that Fathers were wont in those daies to take name of their sonnes, I no where finde. And Ismael also had a 10 fonne called Thema: of whom it is not valike that Theman in the East had the name: for as much as in the feuenth Chapter of the booke of Judges the Ostalianites , Amalekites, and all they of the East are called Ismaelnes. And he that well considers how great and flrong a Nation Amales was, which durftgine battaile to the Hoft of Ifrael, wherein were 60000s. able men, will hardly beleeue that fuch a people were defcended from one of Esau his grand-children. For how powerfull and numberlesse must the forces of all Edom have beene : if one Tribe of them, yea one Familie of a Tribe had beene so great? furely Mount Seir and all the Regions adioyning could not have held them. But wee no where finde that Edom had to doe with Amalec: or affifted the Amalekites: when Saul went to roote them out. For Amalee is no 20 where in Scripture named as a Tribe of Edom but a Nation of it selfe, if distinct from the Ismaelites. The like may be faid of Midian, that the Founder thereof being Sonne to Abraham by Cethura, doubtleffe was no Edomite. And thus much in generall for all the Scignierie of the Red Sca-coaft, which Bozius imagines the Edumeans to have held: if the Edomites in after-times held some places as Elan and Estongaber on the Red Sea shore, yet in Moses time, which was long after the building of Tyre, they held them not. For Moles himselfe saith that Israel did compasse all the borders of Edom: within which limits had Midian stood, Moles must needs have knowne it: because he had sojourned long in that Countrie: and there had left his Wife and Children, when he went into Egypt.

But coniceturall Arguments, how probable focuer, are needleffe in formanife ft a cafe. For in the 83, 19 Jal. Edom, Amade, and 71 yes, are named as altitinet Nations: yea the Tyrian and Sidomatus being one people, as all good Authors flow, and Bezius himfelfe confessed, when the second and their Landsgiuen to the children of After 10 (2.9) because they were careful of the transgiuen to the children of After 10 (2.9) because they were cuer Idolaters, and of the cursed seed of Canaca, not Colens to Ifrad, nor professor of the same Religion. For though Itham said, Blessed God that hath sent King David a wise Same, we cannot inferre that he was of Dauds Religion. The Turke hath said as much of Christian Princes, his confederates. Certained it is that the Sidomians then worthipped Assaub; and drew Sae 40 Januari also to the same Idolatrie.

Whereas Hiram aided Salomon in building the Temple, heed id it for his owne endes, receiving therefore of Salomon great provision of Corne, and Oile, and the offer of twentie Townes or Villages in Galilee. And if wee rightly consider thinges, it will appear that Hiram, in all points, dealt Merchant-like with Salomon, Hee allowed him Timber, with which Libams was, and yet is ouer-pefered; being otherwise apt to yeld filkes: as the Andarine filkes which come from thence, and other good commodities. For Corne and Oile, which hee wanted, hee gaue that which he could well spare to salomon. Also gold for Land: wherein Salomon was the wifer: who haning got the gold firft, gaue to Hann the world Villages that hee yo had: with which the Trian west ill pleased. But it was a necessarie policie which inforced Triu to hold league with Israel. For Danidhad subdued Monh, Annoon, Edom, the Aramites, and a great part of Arabia, cuen to Euphrate: through which Countries the Triums were wont to carrie and recarrie their Wares on Cammells, to their fleetes on the Red Sea: and backe againe to Tyrus: fo that Sulomon being Lord of all the Countries, through which they were to paffe, could haue cut off their Trade.

But the Ifractites were no Sea-men, and therefore glad to share with the Tyrians in their aductures. Yet Salomon as Lord of the Sea-townes, which his Father had taken from the Philifitms, might haue greatly distressed the Tyrians, and perhaps haue brought them euen into subjection. Which Hiram knowing was glad (and no menually) that Salomon rather meant as a man of peace to imploy his Fathers treasure, in magnificent workes, than in pursuing the conquest of all Syria. Therefore hee wilto lingly aided him, and fent him cunning workemen, to increase his delight in goodly buildings, imageries, and instruments of pleasure.

As these passages between Salomon and Hiram, are no strong Arguments of pictic in the Tyriam: So those other proofs which Bezint stamesnegatively yoop natical rexamples, are very weake. For what the Religion of Cadmin was, I thinke, no man knowes. It seemes to me that hauing more cunning than the Greekes, and being very ambitions, he would fainch and purchased duine honours: which his Daughters, Nephewes, and others of his house obtained, but his owne many mission tunes beguiled him of such hopes, if he had any. Thales and Phereoples are but single examples. Eurry faluage Nation hath some whose wisedome excellent him.

20 Vulgar, euen of ciuill people. Neither did the morall wifedome of these men expersion any true knowledge of the true God. Only they made no good mention of the Gods of Greece: whome being newly come thirther, they knew not. It is no good argument to say, that Cadoms and Thales being Tyrians, are not knowne to have taught Idolatrie, therefore the Tyrians were not Idolaters. But this is of force, That Carthage, Yitas, Leptis, Cadix, and all Colonies of the Tyrians (of which, I thinke, the Ilands before mentioned in the Red Sea to have beene, for they traded in all Seas) were Idolaters, euen from their first beginnings: therefore, the Tyrians; who planted them, and to whom they had reference, were solikewise.

This their Idolatrie from **slamons** timeo - wards is acknowledged by **nosins*, 30 who would have vs think them to have beene formerly a firange kinde of denour **Edomites**. 40 great battailes did the Romanes winne, in which they vowed not either a Temple to fome new God, or fome new Honour to once'd their old Gods? year, what one Nation flaue only that of the Ienes, was flubdued by them, whose Gods they did not afterward entertaine in their Citie? Only the true God; which was the Godof the Ienes, they reiected, upbraiding the Ienes with him, as if he were vnworthie of the Romanes Majetlie: shall we hereupon inforce the leud and foolish conclusion, which Heathen writers vied against the Confilius in the Primitive Charles That such Idolatrie had caloed the Citie of Rome to flourills, and that the decay of those abhominations did also bring with it the decay of the Empire? It might well be thought so, if prosperitie were a signe or effect of true R eligion. Of the Tribe of EPHRAIM, and of the Kings of the ten Tribes, whose head was EPHRAIM.

AVING now past ouer Phanicia, we come to the next Territorie adiovning: which is that of Ephraim: fomtime taken per excellentiam for the whole Kingdome of the ten Tribes. Ephraim was the fecond fonne of tofeph, whose iffues when they left Egypt were in number 45000. all which dying in the Lefarts (10/ua excepted) there entred the Holy Land of their children, growne to bee able men 3 2 500. who fate 30 downe on the West side of Iordan, betweene Manaffe, and Beniamin : who bounded Ephraim by the North and South; as Iordan, and the Otedi-terran Sea, did by the East and West.

The first and chiefe Citic which Ephraim had was Samaria : the Metropolis of the Kingdome of Ifrael: built by Amris or Homri King thereof: and feated on the top of the Mountaine Somron, which ouer-lookethall the bottome, and as farre as the Sea-coaft. It was afterward called Sebafte, or Augusta, inhonour of August. Cafar. This Citie is often remembred in the Scriptures : and magnificent it was in the first building; for as Brochard observeth, the ruines which yet remaine, and which Bro- 40 chard found greater than those of Hierufalem, tell those that behold them, what it was when it flood vpright : for to this day there are found great flore of goodly marble pillers, with other hewen and carned stone in great abundance, among the Neare Samaria towards the South, is the Hill of Bethell, and a towne of that name: on the top of which Mountaine Ieroboam creefted one of his golden Calues, to bee 50 worshipped: with which he seduced the Ifraelites.

Of the Kings of the ten Tribes from I EROBOAM to

F the first Kings of Ifrael, I omit in this place to speake: and reserve it to the Catalogue of the Kings of Juda: of whom hereafter.

Touching the acts of the Kings of the ten Tribes, but briefly, beginning after the division from Iuda and Beniamin, now it followeth to speake. The first of these Kings was Ieroboam, the sonne of Nebat, an Ephrathite of Zereda, who being a man of ftrength and courage was by Salomon made ouer-feer of the buildings of the Millo or Munition in Hierufalem, for as much as belonged to the charge of the Tribes of Ephraim and Manasse: and so many of them as wrought in those workes. During which time as hee went from Hierusalem, hee incountred the Prophet Ahijah: who made him know that he was by God destinied to 40 be King of Ifrael: and to command ten of the twelue Tribes. After this fearing that those thinges might come to Salomons knowledge, hee fled into Egypt to Shifhak, whom Eusebius calleth Osechores, whose Daughter he married : the Predecessour of which Shilhak (if not the same) did likewise entertaine Adad the Idumaan, when hee was carried yong into Letot from the furie of David, and his Captaine loab : which Adad, the King of Agypt married to his Wines fifter Taphnes : viing both him and Ieroboam as instruments to shake the Kingdome of Indaa: that himselfe might the eafilier fpoile it, as he did : for in the fifth yeare of Rehoboam, Shifhack fackt the Citic LREGIST of Hierusalem, and carried thence all the treasure of David and Salomon, and all the spolles which David tooke from Adadezer of Soba, with the presents of Tohu, King of

This Ieroboam after the death of Salomon became Lord of the ten Tribes: and though he were permitted by God to gouerne the Ifraelites, and from a meane man exalted to that flate; yet preferring the pollicies of the world before the service and honour of God (as fearing that if the Tribes vnder his rule should repaire to Hierusan len to doe their viuall Sacrifices, they might be drawne from him by degrees) hee crested two golden Calues, one in Dan, and an other in Bethel, for the people to Ambule von worthin (an imitation of the Explain Apis, faith S. Ambule, or take properties of Arons the Chapter Calle in Invel further hee made election of his Priests out of the basest and valearthe Epifle to ned people. This King made his chiefe feate and Pallace at Sichem: He despised the warning of the Iudaan Prophet, whome Iofephus calleth Adon; and Glycas Ioel: His hand there-after withered, and was againe restored: but continuing in his Idolatrie, and hardened upon occasion that the Prophet returning was slaine by a Lyon, Abijal makes him know, that God purposed to roote out his posteritie.

Hereupon Asa entertained Benhadad of Damaseus against him, who inuaded Nephtalim, and destroied many places therein: the meane while Afa carried away the Materialls, with which Baafba intended to fortific Rama; but being an Idolater hee was threatned by Iehu the Prophet, that it should befall his 20 * Note: 1.6-16 race, as it did to Jeroboam: which afterward came to passe: He ruled source and twen-tie yeares and died. To B14/ba fucceded Ela his fonne, who at a feast at his Palace of Therfa, was in his cups flaine by Zambris after he had raigned two yeares; and in him the prophecic of Jehu was fulfilled.

Zambris succeeded Ela, and assumed the name of a King seuen daies; But Ambris in reuenge of the Kings Murther, fet vpon Zambris, or Zimri: and inclosed him

Ambris or Homri succeeded Ela, and transferred the Regall seate from Thersa to Samaria: which he bought of Shemer, built, and fortified it. This Ambris was also 30 an Idolater, no leffe impious than the rest: and therefore subjected to Tabremmon, King of Syria: the Father of Benadad according to Eufebius, Nicephorus, and Zonaras: but how this should stand, I doe not well conceine : seeing Benadad the Sonne of Tabreman was inuited by Ask King of Inda, to assaid King of Israel, the Father of Elawho forewent Ambris. This Ambris raigned twelue yeares, fixe in Therfig, and fixe in Samaria, and left two children, Achab and Athalia.

Ochozasas succeeded his father Achab. The Moabites fell from his obedience: hee Beelle bub was bruifed himselfe by a fall : and sent for counsaile to Beel-zebub the God of Acharon, the same with Eliab the Prophet meeteth the meffenger on the way: and misliking that Ochozias Belias and Planta in Saint Pla fought helpe from that dead Idoll, asked the messenger, If there were not a God in the spon life. 20 the three kings moued with compassion returned and left Moab, wasting and spoyling that Region. Others, as it seemes with better reason, understand the Text to speake of the sonne of the king of Edom, whom they suppose in this irruption to haue beene taken prisoner, by the Moabites, and that the king of Moab shewed him ore the walls, threatning vnleffe the fiege were dissolued, that he would offer him in facrifice to his Gods. Whereupon the king of Edom befought those of Juda and Israel to breake off the siege for the safetie of his sonne: which when the other kings refused to yeeld vnto, and that Moab according to his former threatning had burnt the king of Edoms fonne vpon the rampire, that all the assailants might discerne it, the king of Edom being by this fad spectacle inraged, for sooke the partie of the other 20 kings; for want of whose affishance the siege was broken vp.

After this the king of Aram fent to Ioram, to heale Naaman the Captaine of his Armie of the leprousie. The answere of Joram was; Am I God to kill, and to gine life, that hee doth fend to heale a man from his leprousie? adding, that the Aramite fought but matter of quarrell against him. Elisha hearing thereof, willed the king to fend Waaman to him : promifing that hee should know that there was a Prophet in Israel, and so Waaman was healed by washing himselfe seven times in Iordan. E. lisha refused the gifts of Naman. But his seruant Gehazi accepted a part therof: from whence the fellers of spirituall gifts are called Gehazites, as the buyers are Simonians a.Kjeg. 1.5

Afterward Benhadad king of Aram or Damaseus, having heard that this Prophet did discouer to the king of Ifrael what socuer the Aramite consulted in his secretest councell, fent a troupe of horse to take Elisha: all whom Elisha stroke blinde, and brought them captines into Samaria, Joram them asking leane of the Prophet to flay them, Eifha forbade him to harme them : but caused them to be fed and sent backe to their owne Prince in fafetie.

The king of Aram notwithstanding these benefits did againe attempt Samaria; and brought the Citizens to extreame famine. Isram imputeth the cause thereof to the Prophet Elisha. Elisha by prayer caused a noise of Charriots and armor to found in the ayre, whereby the Aramites affrighted, fled away, and left the fiege, an act

Lebu who raigned after Leberams, deltroyed not onely the race of his foregoers, but also their Religion; for which hee received a promife from God, That his feede should occupie the Throne wno the fourth generation. Yet hee vpheld the idolative of Lerobeams, for which hee was plagued with grieuous warre, wherein he was beatten by Hazaed the Aramite, who spoided all the Countries to the East of Iordan: in which warre he was flaine faith Cedrems: whereof the Scriptures are silent. After lowthaz loss his fonne gouerned Ifrael: who when hee repaired to Elifas the Prophet as he lay in his death-bed, the Prophet promided him three victories of the Armanies: and first commanded him to lay his hand on his bowe, and Elifas couered the kings hands with his, and bad him open the window westward (which was toward Damus [ens.] and then shoot an arrow thence out. He againe willed him to beate the ground with his arrowes, who finote it thrice, and ceased: The Prophet then told him, that hee should have finiteen since or like times: and then hee 20 should have had so many victories ower the Aramites in three battells, and recovered the Cities and Territorie from Benhadad the sonne of Arael, which his father Daeloss had lost. He also overthrew Amazis king of Inda, who prounked him to make the war: whereupon hee entred Hierufalem, and facked it with the Temple. This Joss raigned sixteenen yeeres and died; in whose time also the Prophet Elissa exchanged this list for a better.

Irrabosan the third from 10hm, followed 10ss his father, an Idolater as his predeceffor: but her recoursed all the reft of the lands belonging to 1/frad, from Hamath which is never Libanus, to the dead Sea, and raigned one and fortie yeeres.

Zacharias the fift and last of the house of tehu, staine by Shallam his vasfiall, who raigned in his stead, gouerned fix moneths. Shallam held the kingdome but one moneth, being flaughtered by Menslewn of the Gadies.

Menahem who tooke reuenge of Shallum, yfed great crueltie to those that did not acknowledge him: ripping the bellies of those that were with child. This Menahem being intuaded by Phul, bought his peace with tenne thousand talents of siluer, which he exacted by a Tribute of siftie sheels from euery man of wealth in Ifrael. Menahem gouerned twentie yeeres.

Pekahiah or Phaseis, or after Zonarus Phasefia, fuceceded, and after hee had ruled two yetrees, hee was flaine by Phaseor Fekah the Commaunder of his armie, who 40 raigned in his place. In this Pekah time Phasefar or Tiglat-Phylaffar inuaded the kingdome of Ifrael, and wanne lion, Abel-Bethmasea, kmoach, Kedelh, Haffor, and Giral, etad, with all the Cities of Gaillee, carrying them captines into Affria. Haffor, and Giral, lead, with go fluidea againth Pekah and Rezin, the lath of the Adades. For Achas being walfed by Pekah of Ifrael and by Rezin of Damafeus, did a third time borrow the Church riches, and therewith ingaged the Affrian, who first fuppressed the Monarchie of Syria and Damafeus: and then of Ifrael: and this inuiting of the great Affrian, was the viterruine of both States, of Ifrael and of Indea. Pekah raigned the Monarchie of Syria and Damafeus:

Then Hofbea or Ofes, who flew Peksh, became the vaffall of Salmanaflar: but ho-50 ping to flake off the Affrian yoake, he fought aide from So, or Sua, or Sebieuk king of Egypt: which be affected to the Affrian, hee cast him into prison, be fieged Samaria, and mastred it: carried the ten idolatrous Tribes into Xinine in Affria, and into Rages in Media, and into other Esterne Regions, and there dispersed them:

and re-planted Samaria with diuers Nations, and chiefly with the Cniba (inhabiting about Cathaa Riuer in Perfa, or rather in Arabia Deferta) and with the people Ca-Pills, tanibounding youn Syria, and with those of Sepharinaiy (a people of Sepharin Me-Pills, fiptamia youn Euphrates, of whose conquest Senacherio vaunteth) also with those of Asa: which were of the ancient Anina who inhabited the Land of the Phillims in Abrahams time, dwelling facie we not Gaza: whom the Caphirims rooted out: and at this time they were of Arabia the Defart, called Hina: willing to returne to their ancient factes. To these he added those of Chamabou Turaa, the ancient enemies of the Ifractice, and sometime the Valfalls of the Adads of Damafau: which so often affoliated them. The first famous Citie in this Tribe on the Sea coast was Joppe, or Japho, as in the 12. of losua : one of the most ancientest of the World, and the most famous of others on that coast, because it was the Port of Hierufalem. From hence Ionas imbarked himselfe when hee fled from the service of God, towards Tharsis in Cilicia. In the time of the Macchabees this Citie received many changes: and while Iudas Macchabaus governed the Ierres, the Syrians that were Garrisond in Ioppe, having their fleet in the Port, inuited 200 principall Citizens abourd them, and cast them all into the Sea; which Indas revenged by 30 firing their fleet, and putting the companies which fought to escape to the fword.

It was twice taken by the Romanes, and by Cestius the Lieutenant vtterly burnt and ruined. But in the yeare of Christ 1250. Lodonick the French King gaue it new Wallsand Towers: It is now the Turkes, and called Laffa. There are certaine Rocks in that Port, whereunto it is reported that Andromeda was fastned with chaines: and from thence delinered from the Sea-Monster by Persens. This fable (for so I take L3.1.15, de bel. it) is confirmed by Josephus, Solinus, and Plinie. Marcus Scaurus during his office of Ind. Solin. C. 47. Ædilefhip, the wed the bones of this Monster to the people of Rome. S. Hicrome vpon Jon.ts speakes of it indifferently.

The next vnto Joppe was Jamnig, where Indas Macchabeus burnt the rest of the Sy- 49 rian fleet : the fire and flame whereof was feene at Hierufalem 240. furlongs off. It had sometime a Bilhops feate, faith will of Tyre; But there is no signe of it at this time that fuch a-place there was. After Jamnia is the Citie of Geth or Gath, Somtime Anthedon, Saith Volaterran. And fo Montanus feemes to understand it. For he sets it next to Egypt, of all the Philiflim Cities, and in the place of Anthedon. But Folaterran gives neither reason nor authoritie for his opinion; for Ptolomic fets Anthedon farre to the South of Joppe: And Geth was the first and not the last (beginning from the North) of all the great Cities of the Philiflims: and about fixteene miles from Ioppo; where S. Hierome in his time found a great Village of the fame name. It was fometime the Habitation and 50 Seminarie of the Anakims: strong and Giant-like-men, whom Iosua could not expell, nor the Danites after him: nor any of the Ifraelites, till Danids time: who flew Goliath, as his Captaines did diuers others not much inferiour in strength and stature vnto Goliath. # THE TRIBE OF FVDA.

F Juda the fourth Sonne of Jacob by Lea, there were multiplied in A-Magret 74600 all which (Calebexcepted) perished in the Deforts. And of their sonnes there entred the Land of Canaan 76500. bearing armes: Agrecable to the greatnesse of this number was the greatest Territorie giuen, called afterward Iudea: within the bounds whereof were the portions allotted to Dap and Simeon included. And many Cities named in these Tribes, did first, as they say, belong vnto the children of Iuda: who had a kind of Soueraigntie ouer them: as Succeth, Cariathiarim, Lachis, Bethlemes, Tiglag, Beer-Theba, and others. The multitude of people within this small Province (if it bee meated by that ground given to this Tribe only) were vncredible if the witnesse of the Scriptures had not warranted the report. For when Dauid numbred the pcople they were found fine hundred thousand fighting men-

Neare it is Hebron sometime called the Citie of Arbah, for which the Yulgar hath Cariatharbe : the reason of this name they give as if it fignified the Citic of foure: because the foure Patriarchs, Adam, Abraham, Isaac; and Iacob, were therein buried, but of Adam it is but supposed : and it is plaine by the places Iosia 14.14. and 15.12. and 20. 11. that Arbab here doth not fignific foure, but that it was the name of the Father of the Giants called Anakim, whose some as it seemes Anak was : and Achiman, Shelhai, and Talmai (whom Caleb expelled Iof. 15.) were the fonnes of this Anak, Num. 12.23. The name of Anak fignifieth Torquem, a chaine worne for orna- 10 ment : and it seemes that this Anak inriched by the spoiles which himselfe and his Father got, wore a chaine of gold, and fo got this name: and leaving the custome to his posteritie left also the name: so that in Latine the name of Anakim may not amiffe be expounded by Torquati.

The Citic Hebron was one of the ancientest Cities of Canaan : built seuen yeares before Tloan or Tanis in Egypt: and it was the head and chiefe Citie of the Anakims, whom Caleb expelled : to whom it was in part given : to wit, the Villages adioyning, and the rest to the Leuites. It had a Bishop in the Christian times, and a magnificent Temple built by Helen the Mother of Constantine. Not farre hence they finde Eleutheropolis or the free Citic, remembred often by 20 S. Hierome. Then Eglon whose King Dabir affociated with the other four Kings of the Amorites, to wit, of Hierusalem, Hebron, Iarmuth, and Lachis, belieging the Gibesmites, were by Iofua vtterly ouerthrowne. The rest of the Cities in this part (most of them of no great estimation) wee may passe by vntill we come to the magnificent Castle of Herodium, which Herod erected 10 on a Hill, mounting thereunto with 200. This Citie was 2. Chron. 20.2. first taken by Chedorlaomer , and the Amorites thence expelled. It was one of the Genta 7. most remarkable Cities of Indea: and one of the Presidencies thereof.

The rest of the Cities are many in the In-land, and among them lest al; not that 1. Rez. 21. 30 which was the Citic of Naboth, of which alreadie: but an other of the same name. the Citie of Achinoan; the wife of David; the mother of that Ammon, whom Abfar 2. But this feemeth to bee an errour grounded vpon the nearenesse of the wordes, Ifrael and Jefrael: and because the 2. Sam. 17.25. Amasaes father is called a Isfraelite; who first of the Chron. 2.17. is called an Ismaelite : indeede the Hebrew Orthographie sheweth that Amasaes Father is not said to be of the Citie Iestael, but an Ifraelite in Religion, though otherwise an Ismaelite.

In this Tribe there were many high Hills or Mountaines, as those of Engaddivppon the Dead Sea : and the Mountaines of Iuda, which beginne to rife by Emaus, and end neare Taphna, and these part Juda from Dan and Simeon. Of others which fland single there is that of Hebron: at the foote whereof was that Oake of Mambre where the three Angells appeared to Abraham, which S. Hierome calleth a Firtree; Hieronin loc. and faith that it flood till the time of Constantine the yonger. There is also that Hebrer question Mountaine called Collis Achille, on the South fide of Ziph: on the top whereof the Hebr. great Herod, inclosing the old Castle, erected by tonathas Macchabens, and called Massada, garnished it with seuen and twentie high and strong Towers: and therein left Armour and furniture for an hundreth thousand men : being as it seemeth a place vnacceffable, and of incomparable ftrength.

In the Valley afterward called the Dead Sea, or the Lake Afhaltitis, this Countrie 50 had foure Cities, Adama, Sodom, Seboim, and Gomorra, destroied with fire from Heauen for their vnnaturall finnes.

THE TRIBE OF REVBEN and his Borderers.

The seates and bounds of Midian, Moab, and Ammon, part whereof the Reubentes wanne from Sehon King ans: by Ismael the eldest some of Abraham, the Ismaelites: and by Keturah his last wife the Midianites. And againe by Lot, Abrahams brothers sonne, those two valiant Nations of the Mosbites, and Ammonites: all which being but strangers in the Land of Canaan (formerly policit by the Canaanites, and by the Families of them descended) these iffues and alliances of Abraham, all but Iacob, whose children were bred in Agypt, inhabited the frontier places adjoyning.

Elau and his sonnes held Idumaa: which bounded Canaan on the South. Ismael 30 tooke from the South-east part of the Dead Sea: stretching his possession ouer all Arabia Petras, and a part of Arabia the Defart, as farre as the River of Tigris, from

Sur to Hanilah. Most tooke the rest of the coast of the Dead Sea, leaving a part to Midian: and paffing ouer Arnon, inhabited the plaines betweene Iordan and the Hills of Abarim or Arnon, as farre North as Effebon, or Chesbon. Ammon fate downe on the North-east fide of Arnon, and possest the Tract from Rabba afterward Philadelphia, both within the Mountaines of Gilhead, and without them as farre forth as Arroer, though in Molestime hee had nothing left him in all Numar, 2.4. that Valley: for the Amorites had thrust him ouer the River of Labor, as they had 40 done Moab ouer Arnon. As these Nations compassed fundrie parts of Canaan, so the border betweene the River of Iaboc and Damafous was held by the Amorites themfelues, with other mixt Nations: all which Territorie on the East side of Iordan, and on the East side of the Dead Sea, was granted by Moses to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and halfe Manaffe: whereof that part which Moab had, was first posses by the Eminus a Nation of Giants weakned and broken by Chedorlahomer, after expulsed by the Machites, as before remembred. That which the Ammonites held was the Territoric and ancient possession of the Zamzummims or Zurai, who were also beaten at the fame time by Chedorlahomer, Amraphel, and the rest; and by them an easie way on conquest was prepared for the Ammonites.

Now where it is written that Arnon was the border of Mont, the fame is to bee anderstood according to the time when Moses wrote. For then had Sehon or his Ancaffer beaten the Moabites out of the plaine Countries, betweene Abarim and Iorelan, and driven them thence from Hesbon over Arnon, and this happened not long CHAP. 10. S.4. 1.2. of the Historie of the World.

before Moles arrivall vpon that border, when Vaheb governed the Mosbites. For he that ruled Most when Mofes past Arnon, was not the sonne of Valeb, but his name was Balac the sonne of Zipper. And it may be that those Kings were elective, as the Edum eans anciently were.

Now all that part of Moab betweene Arnon and Tordan, as faire North as Effebon was inhabited by Reuben. And when Ifrael arrived there out of Agypt, it was in the possession of Sehon, of the race of Canaan by Amoreus : and therefore did Iephtah the Judge of Ifrael justly defend the regaining of those Countries against the claime of the Ammonites: because (as he alleaged) onoses found them in the 10 possession of the Amorites, and not in the handes of Moab or Ammon: who (furth tudo, 15) tephtah) had three hundred yeares time to recouer them, and did not; whence hee

And leaft any should maruaile why the Ammonites in Iephtah his time should make claime to these Countries : whereas Moses in the place Rumb, 21. vers, 26. rather accounts them to have beene the ancient possession of the Mabites then of the Ammonites: it is to be noted that Dent. 3. 11. when it is faid that the yron bed of og was to be seene at Rabbath, the chiefe Citie of the Ammonites, it is also signified, that much of the Land of og, which the Ifraelites possessed, was by him or his Ancestors got from the Ammonites, as much of Sehons was from the Moabites,

20 And as the Cananite Nations were feated fo confusedly together that it was hard to distinguish them : so also were the sonnes of Moab and Ammon, Midian, Amalek, 10,13. ver, 15 and Ifmael. Yet the reason seemeth plaine enough why Ammon commanded in Imate noise chiefe, in Iephtahs time; for sometime the one Nation, sometime the other of all halie of the those borderers acquired the Soueraigntie: and againe that one part of the Land Land of Hamwhich Gad held, namely within the Mountaines of Galand, or Gilliead, and as farre this place of to-South as Arroer belonged to the Ammonites. And therefore taking advantage fine is faid to of the time, they then fought to recoure it againe. Year flich time as Mofes outer-before the time, they then fought to recoure it againe. Year flich time as Mofes outer-threw Schon at Iahrs., the Ammonites had loft to the Ammonites, all that part of their dies, was taken possession which lay about Arroer, and betweene it and Jaboe: Selion and Og two first from the 30 Kings of the Ammorites having displanted both Moab and Ammon of all within Scion: but the the Mountaines. For it is written in the one and twentieth of Numb. v. 24. that If- place Den. 2.11 rael conquered the Land of Schon from Arnon vnto labor, caen wnto the children of proueth that Ammon, to as at this time the River of Iabos was the South bound of Ammon, with sales in the Mountaines, when as anciently they had also possessions values the Lands one. at length the Gadites posses, as in the thirteenth chapter of Iosua vers. 25. it appeares.

THe chiefe Cities belonging to Reuben were thefe, Kedemoth, for which the Vulgar, without any shew of warrant, readeth lethson. The Vulgaror Hierome fol- 10/11.37. lowed the Septuagint those two verses 36. and 37. of 21. tof. being wanting in the old Hebrew Copies, and the Septuagint red Kedfon for Kedmoth, which Kedfon by writing flipt into Jethson.

The plaine Country hereabout by Moses called The Plaines of Moab, where he expounded the Booke of Deuteronomy to the people, a little before his death, is in the beginning of the same booke precisely bounded by Moses. On the South it had the great Defart of Paran : where they had long wandred. Of divers places bordering Reuben belonging to Midian, Moab or Edom.

30 There were besides these divers places of note over Arnon, which adjoyned to Reuben: amongst which they place Gallim, the Citie of Phalti; to whom Saul 1. Saus 24 w. et gaue his Daughter Michol from Dauid: but Iunius thinkes this Towne to be in Beniamin : gathering so much out of Esay 10. vers. 29. where it is named among the Cities of Beniamin. With better reason perhaps out of Num, 21, v. 19, wee may fay that Mathana and Nahaliel were in these confines of Reuben : through which places the Ifraelites past after they had left the Well called Beer: Then Deblathaim which the Prophet Hieremie threatneth with the rest of the Cities of Hieremass Moab.

Midian also is found in these parts, the chiefe Citie of the Madianites in Moab: 40 but not that Midian or Madian by the Red Sea; wherein Iethro inhabited. For of the Madianites there were two Nations, of which these of Most became Idolaters, and received an exceeding overthrow by a Regiment of twelve thouland Ilraelites, fent by Moles out of the plaines of Moab : at fuch time as Ilrael beganne to accompanie their Daughters; their five Kings with Balaam the South-faier were then flaine; and their Regall Citie with the rest destroied. The other Madianites ouer whom Jethro was Prince, or Prieft, forgate not the God of Abraham their Anceftor, but relieued and affifted the Ifraelites in their painefull traugiles, through the Defarts: and were in all that paffage their guides. For Nabathea is no where vnderstood for all Arabia Petrea, (at least where it is not misvnderstood) but it is that Province which neighboureth Judea. For Pharan inhabited by Ismael, whose people Ptolomie calleth Pharanites, in fleede of Ismaelites, and all those Territories of the Cusites, Madianites, Amalekites, Ilmselites, Edomites, or Idumeans, the Lands of Moab, Ammon, Hus, Sin, and of Og King of Balan, were parts of Arabia Petraa: though it be also true, that some part of 10 1. This Citie Petra, Seaurus belieged with the Romane Armie; and finding the place in flow impregnable, he was content by the perswasion of Antipater, to take a composition of money, and to quit it. Yet Amasias King of Iuda (after he had slaughtered 10000. of the Arabians in the Valley called Salinarum ) wanne also this Citie. S. Hierome finds Ruth the Moabite to be natural of this Citic. In the time when the GulTu.20,bell, Christians held the Kingdome of Hierusalem, it had a Latine Bishop, having before beene under the Greeke Church. It is feated not farre from Hor where Aaron died. and on the other fide towards the North is the River of Zared or Zered, by which 20 Moles incamped in the 38. Station. Adrichome describeth the waters of Memrim, or rather Nemrim, in his Map of Reuben, not farre hence, and betweene Zared and Arnon : and so he doth the Valley of Saue : but the waters of Nimra or Beth-Nimra (for which it feemes Adrichomius writ Nemrim ) refresh the plaines of Moab : and the confluence of those waters of Nimra are in the Tribe of Gad. Saue also cannot bee found in this place, that is, to the South of Arnon, and under Midian. For after Abraham returned from the pursuite of the Affyrian and Persian Princes, the King of Sodome met him in the Valley of Saue, or Shaueh, which is the Kings Dale, where Absalom set up his Monument, as it seemes, not farre from Hierusalem. And at the Same time t Melchizedec King of Salem also incountred him. But Abraham comming 30 from the North, and Melchizedec inhabiting, either neare Bethfan otherwise Scythopolis in the halfe Tribe of Manaffe, or in Hierusalem (both places lying to the West of Iordan) could not incounter each other in Arabia: and therefore Saue which was alfo called the Kings Dale, could not be in these parts.

> t. IIII. of the Dead Sea.

Ow because the Sea of Sodome or the Dead Sea, called also the Lake of Alphal- 40 titis, and the falt Sea (in diftinction from the Sea of Tiberias which was fresh History Hara- water) also the Sea of the Wildernesse, or rather the Sea * of the plaines, is often reboth every-where, and to membred in the Scriptures, and in this storic also, therefore I thinke it not impertiwhere, and nont, to speake somewhat thereof. For it is like vnto the Caspian Sea, which hath no out-let or difburthening. The length of this Lake Iofephiis makes 180. furlongs Distor 3-17-though Dester. Of the Kings of Moab, much of whose Countrie within Arnon REVBEN possess.

OF the Kings of Mosh, whose Countrie (within Arnon) Reuben possess (though not taken from Moab but from Schon the Amorite) few are knowne. Junius in the 21. of Numbers verse 14 nameth Vaheb, which seemeth to bee the Ancestor or Predecessor of Balac, the sonne of Zippor : which Balac sent for Balaam to curse Israel. For fearing to contend with Moles by armes by the examples of Sehon and Og, hee hoped by the helpe of Balaams curlings or inchauntments, to take from them all ftrength and courage, and to cast on them some pestilent diseases. And though Ba- Num. 21.22.226 laam at the first moved by the Spirit of God, bleft Ifrael contrarie to the hope and de- 24. 10/24. fire of Moab: yet being defirous in some fort to fatisfic him and to doe him service. he aduised Moab to send Madianitish Women among the Israelites : hoping by them, as by fit instruments of mischiefe, to draw them to the Idolatrie of the Heathen; but 40 in the end he received the reward of his falling from God, and of his enill counfaile; and was flaine among the rest of the Princes of Midian.

After these times the Kings of the Moabites are not named : fauing that we finde in the first of Chro. the fourth, that lokim, and the men of Chozeba, and Ioalh, and Sareph, all being of the iffue of Iuda, sometime had the Dominion in Moab: but as it is written in the same Verse, These also are ancient thinges : to wit, as some expound it, Page the particulars of these mens Gouernments are no where extant or remaining; or as others, hee prius fuere, these Families of Inda were once thus famous; but now their posteritie chuse rather to abide in Babylon, and bee Clay-workers to the King there.

Then we finde Eglon King of Moab, who with the helpe of Ammon, and Amalee, tade : mastered Israel and commanded them eighteene yeares; which Eglon, Ebud slew in his owne house, and afterward 10000. of his Nation. What name the King of 1 Sam. 12, Month had vnto whom David fled fearing Saul, it doth not appeare; or whether it were the same against whom Saul made Warre, it is not manifest, for neither are named. But in respect that this Mosbite was an enemie to Saul, heereceived David. and relieved him : knowing that Saul lought his life.

After this, David himfelte entred the Region of Moab, but not likely in the fame 2.S.m 8. Kings time : for he flaughtered two parts of the people; and made the third part t.Chron.18. Pfal.60,v.10. tributarie : whereupon it was faid of DAVID. Most is my wash-pot, ouer Edom well I east my sloe: meaning that he would reduce them to such an abiection, and appoint

The next King after Davids time, of the Moabites, whose name liveth was Melba: who falling from Inda, (perhaps in remembrance of the feueritie of Danid) fastened himselfe to the Kings of Israel, and paied tribute to Abab 100000. Lambes, and 19 200000. Rammes, with the woll: who revolting againe from Ifraelafter the death of Alab, was inuaded by tehoram: with whom joyned the Kings of Inda and Idumea: and being by these three Kings prest and broken, he fled to Kir-hareseth, as is elfewhere shewed. There is also mention made of the Moabites without the Kings name: when that Nation, affifted by the Ammonites and Idumeans, inuaded Iehoshaphat: and by reason of some private quarrells among themselves, the Moabites and Ammonites fet upon the Idum.esns, and flaughtered them; and then one against an other; fo as scholbapbat had a notorious victoric over them all, without either bloud or wound. Alfoin the time of Hieremie the Prophet, there was a King of Moab which is not named, which was after Melha of Mesh many defcents: for Melha lived 20 Micron.27. with Jehoram, and this Mashite in Zedekins time, fourteene Kings of Juda comming betweene, who waited three hundred and odde yeares.

He Territorie adioyning to Reuben, is that of Gad: whereof all that part which joyned to the Mountaines, was fometime in the possession 30 of the Ammonites, as farre to the South as Areer. Of the children of Gad the feuenth fonne of Jacob by Zelpha, the hand-maid of Lea, there parted out of Agypt, and died in the Defarts 45550. and of their fonnes there entred the Land promifed 45000, bearing armes : from the halfe Tribe of Manalie the River of Jaboe divided them : from Reuben the Cities of Hesbon, Elbele, and Apbec. The chiefe Citie of Gad was Aroer: which they make to be the fame with Ar, or Rabbath Most, the great or commanding Most. But the learned Juniu, attending diligently to those wordes of Moses, Deut. 2.36. Ab Harabero, que est in ripa fluminis Arnon, & Civitate ipfa qua oft in flumine ; Where the Citie in the River is diffinguished 40 from the Citie upon the banke of the River, (as also in like manner Iof. c. 12.v. 2. and c. 12.2.0.) thinketh that Hurober which doubtleffe belonged to the Gadites (as 2\text{Um.} 32.34. it is faid that they built it) was indeede feated neare Har of the Moabites, but dinerfe from it. For that Har was never poffelt by Mofes, it is plaine Deut. 2.9. where God forbidding Moles to touch it, faith he bath given Har for an inheritance to the fonnes of Lot. Now that this Citie, which in divers places is faid to be within and in the middle of the River of Arnon (and so distinguished from Haroher, which is said in the same places to be on the banke of Arnon) is Har of the Moabites, the same Iunius proueth out of Num, 21.15. where Arnon is faid to bee divided into divers ftreames, where or among which Har is feated : And the fame is confirmed by the 50 place of Iof. 13.25. where Haroher is faid to be feated before Rabbah: which Rabbah, as it feemes, can not be the Rabbah of the Ammonites (for they feate not Haroher near it, nor in fight of it) and therefore by Rabbah here wee must viderstand Rabbah of Moab, which they make to be Ar or Har: and so we must needes distinguish it from Haroher. And as for * Har (which also gaue the name to the coatladioyning) it * Dout, 2, 9, feemes it continued in the possession of the Monbites after they had once expelled Out of which the Giant-like people called Emins, first weakned by Chedorlaomer and his Associates: wordes News but Haroher by the interchange of times fuffered many ancient changes, as being 21.28, 21010 wonne from the Moabites by Schon, and from him by the Ifraelites, and from them, not that the cias it feemes in the storie of lephtha, by the Ammonites : and from the Ammonites a- tie of Har, but gaine by the Ifraelites vider the conduct of tephtha. In S. Hieromes time the greatest the coast adpart of this Citic perithed by an earth-quake, as also Zoar in which Lot faued him-wasted by sefelfe, in the destruction of Sodom, Seated not farre hence : which they fay was there- box. 10 fore called Vitula confernans, because as a wanton tumbling Heifar, shee was thrice led 11.35. ouerthrowne with earth-quake: for which caufe also Hierome seemes to thinke that Hier. in opitaph. this Zoar was called Salifa or Bal-falifa, as if Bal had beene a remainder of the old Paul & inquaft. name Balah or Belah (of which Gen. 14.2.) and Salifha which hath a fignification of beauty his anthe ternarie number, had alluded to the three earth-quakes.

Brothard takes Haroher to be Petra, but erronioully, as before it is noted, feeing wher he makes that Petra was in the South border of Most, adioyning to Edom, whereas Haroher is Shalfter a plan in the North-east border. Betweene Haroher and Iordan they seate Dibon, which is Countrie in attributed to the Gadites, because they are faid to have built it, Num, 32.34. though the fame with Iofua 13.0.17. it is faid that Mofes gaue it to the Reubenites. Of this Citic among Ballas fbs., 2, the rest of Most, both Esay and Hieremie prophecied, that it should perish: and the he expounds Lakes about it runne with the bloud of the Inhabitants. It was a great Village neare Bal or Baba: to

Keeping the bankes of Arnon, one of the next Cities of fame to Arner was Beth- Edits. Hieras nimrab, of which Elay prophecieth, That the waters thereof should be dried up : and all Elais, 21. the vale of Moab withered. Not farre from Bethnimrah in this Tribe Adrichomius placeth logbeha, and Nobach or Nobe: of both which we reade in the storic of Gedeon: 1sd.8.11. and that Togbeha was in Gad built by the Gadites, it appeares Num. 22. 25, and therefore Wobach also must needes be in these parts : but whether in Gad or Manalle it is not certaine: only that it was anciently called Kenath, Moles witnesserb. No BACH 20 alfo (faith he) went and tooke Kenath with her Townes, and called it Nobach of his owne Numarass name, where because the verses precedent speake of the Manassies, and because it is not likely that Moles would have severed this seate of the Gadites from the rest, of which he spake before v.34.35.36. therefore it may seeme that this * Nobach was * Normando in that part of Manaffe, which was in the East of Iordan though Adrichemius place Iriscalled No. it in Gad. For whereas he supposeth it to be the same with Nob, which Saul destroi- phach and plait in Gad. For whereas he supposetn stode the same with aver, which same united bed, of this we shall speake a in the Tribe of Beniamin. And as for that Karker where deroft the king Zebach and Salmunah rested themselves in their slight from Gedeon, to which place dome of School Gedeon marched through this Nobach and Iogbeha, though some place it in Gad, and towards Basan and therefore make it the same with Kir-chares, of which Esay 15. and 2. Reg. 3. 25. yet there can it is notaloge-40 beeno certaintie that it was in Gad: and if it bee the fame with Kir-chares, it is cer- ther vapiobataine that it was a principall Citie held still by the Moabites, and not in the Tribe in Gad.

In the body of this Tribe of Gad they place Hataroth: of which name the Scrip- ludg. 8.10. ture witneffeth that two Cities were builded by the Gadites; the former simply cal-Num.32.3435. led Hataroth, the later Hatroth-Shoplan: for which later the Yulgar makes two Cities Roth and Shophan : the name Hataroth is as much as Corone.

In the Valley of the Kingdome of Sehon, together with Bethninnah, of which we haue spoken. Iofua c. 13.2.2.7. nameth Beth-haram, and Succoth: the former Num. 32 b 1062 Last 18

Buttouching Iulias (according to Io/ephus fometimes Bataramptha) the same Infepinus placeth it in the Region of Peran, beyond Iordan, which Regio Perea, as the Greeke word lignifieth, is no more than Regio viterior, the Countrie berond the River; and therefore they which labour to fet downe the bounds of this Person take more paines than needes. Fourteene Villages this Iulias had belonging vnto it, according to Iosephus. He makes it to have beene built by Herod Antipas, and named Inlias in honour of the adoption of Liuia, Augustus his Wife, into the Iulian Fami-Info Ast, 18.3, lie: by which adoption thee was called Iulia. An other Iulias, he faith, was built by & Bell Ind. 2.8. Philip the brother of Herod, in the lower Gaulanitis, which hee faith is the fame as 10

Vipon the Sea of Galilee neare to Iulias in Perea (that is, in the Region ouer Iordan) they finde Vetezobra, as it is called in Iolephus, for Beth-ezob, which is as much as domus hillori. Of a noble Woman of this Citie, which for fafeguard in the time of War with the Romanes, came with many others into Hierufalem, and was there belieged. 10/ephus in the place noted, reports a lamentable Historie; how for hunger shee eate her owne child, with other Tragicall accidents hereupon enfuing.

Of Succoth (which we faid tof. 13. is placed with Beth-haran, in the Valley of the Kingdome of Sehon) it is plaine by the storie of Gedeon that it is neare vnto lordan: Ind.8.5. where it is faid, that as hee was pail tordan with his three hundreth, wearie in the 20 pursuit of Zebah and Salmunah, hee requested reliefe of the men of Succeth: who denying him, and that with contempt, in Gedeons returns were by him tortured, as it feemes under a threshing Carre or Tribulum, betweene which and their sless he put Thornes to teare their fielh as they were prest and trod vnder the Tribulum, and after which fort also David vsed some of the Ammonites, though not with Thornes, but with vron teeth of the Tribulum. As for the name of Succoth, which fignifieth fuch Tabernacles as were made in haft, either for Men or Cattle, Moles Gen. 23.17. witneffeth that the original of the name was from fuch harbours, which Incob in his returne from Mesopotamia built in that place : As also the place beyond the Red Sea, Exed.12.37. where the children of Ifrael, as they came from Ramefes in Leypt, had their first Sta- 20 tion, was vpon like reason called Succoth: because there they set vp their first Tabernacles or Tents; which they yield after for fortie seares in the Wilderneffe. In re-

Other foure Cities of Gadare named Iof. 21.38. Ramoth in Gilehad, Machanaijm, Chesbon, and Jahzer, all of them by the Gadites given to the Leuites, of which Jahzer, as Chesbon or Hesbon was a chiefe Citic of Sehon, whence Num. 32.1. his Countrie is called the Land of Inhzer. It was taken by Moles, having first fent spiesto view it. num.22.32. called the Land of Ishzer. It was taken by Mojes, having first sent spees o view it. s.chron.27.31. In the first of the Chronicles it is made part of Gilehad. In later times (as it may bee gathered by the prophecie of Efay, touching Moab) it was possessed by the Moabites: Hierem, 48, 92, to which place of E/ay also Hieremie in a like prophecie alludes. It was at length re- 40 gained (but as it seemes from the Ammonites) by Judas Macchabeus: as it is 1. Mac. 5. 8. where Junius out of Josephus reades Jahzer, though the Greeke hath Gazer. For Gazer or Gezer (as he gathereth out of Iofua 16.3. & 8. and Iud. 1.29.) was farre from these Countries of Sehon, seated in the West border of Ephraim, not possessed by the Ifraclites, untill Salomons time, for whom the King of Agypt wan it from the Canaanite, and gaue it him as a Dowrie with his Daughter.

Of Chesbon it may be meruailed that in the place of Iofua, and 1. Chron. 6.81. it should be faid to have been given to the Leuites by the Gadites, seeing Iosua 13.0.17 it is reckoned for a principall Citie of the Reubenites: Adrichomius and fuch as little trouble themselves with such scruples, finding Casbon 1. Macc. 5.36. among the Ci- 50 ties of Gilehad, taken by Indus Macchabaus, makes two Cities of one : as if this Casbon had beene the Chesbon of Gad: and that of Reuben diffinct from it: but the better reconciliation is, that it being a bordering Citie, betweene Gad and Reuben, was common to both, and that the Gadites gave their part to the Leuites: for fo also it seemeth that in like reason Dibon is said in one place built by the Gadites, and in an other giuen to Reuben, as before is noted. Of Machanaym, which word fignifieth a double Armie, we reade Genesis 32.2. that it was therefore so called, because the Angells of God in that place met Iacob in manner of an other Hoalt or companie, to joyne with his for his defence: as also Luke 2.13. we reade of a multitude of the Hoalt of heauen, which appeared to the sheep-heards, at the time of our Sauiours birth; and so unto the Godly King Ofwald of Northumberland, when he was soone after to joyne battaile with the Pagan Penda of middle-England, Bedareports that the like comfort appeared : whence the field where the battaile was fought in the North parts 10 of England, is called Heaven-field. In this Citic of Machanaym David abode during the rebellion of Absalom: and the same for the strength thereof Abner chose for the seate of Isboseth, during the warre betweene Dania and the house of Sand.

Of the fourth Towne which was Ramoth in Gilehad, we reade often in the Scri-

matha-Mitshe, of which Issua 12.26. was this Ramoth in Gilehad. Concerning the place where Laban and Iacob sware one to the other, as it was called Gilehad, which is as much as a witnessing heape, because of the heape of stones which Laban and his fonnes left for a monument; fo also that it was called Mitspate, which fignificth ouer-looking (because there they called God to ouer-see and be witnessee their co-20 uenant) it is plaine by the place Gen. 31. 49. that in these parts there was not only a Towne, but likewise a Region called Mitspa, it appeares tos. 11.3. where wee reade of the Chimaites under Hermon, in the Countrie of Mitspa the Towns of Mitspa, as . Of other it seemes both by this place and in the eight verse following, being not in the Hill townes of this Countrie, but in the valley. But seeing that tephta the Judge of Israel, who after he name, see in the Tribe of came home from Tob (whither his bretheren had driven him) dwelt in this Towne Bailamin.

of Mitspa, who doubtlesse was of the Tribe of Manasse, and thence at first expelled Ind. 11, 36. by his bretheren, it may seeme that they doe not well which place this Towne of Mitharather in Gad, then in Manasse. By Indas Macchabeus this Towne of Mitha (whether in Gad or in Manasse) was vtterly spoiled and burnt, and all the males of it 1.biase, 5.35. 20 flaine: for it was then possess of the Ammonites.

Betweene Succoth (of which we have spoken) and the River labor was that Peniel or Pennel, which name fignificen Locum faciei Dei; A place where the face of God was Gend, 31, 30. feene : fo called for memorie of the Angells appearing to Iacob, and wreftling with him there: the churlishnesse of which Citic, in refusing to relieue Gedeon, was the Indo. 3, 17. cause that in his returne he ouer-threw their Tower, and slew the chiefe Aldermen thereof. To these places of the Gadites, they adde Rogelim, the Citie of that great and faithfull subject Barzillai, as it seemes, not surrefrom Mahanaima, where he su-2.5am. 19.33. flained King Dauid, during Absaloms rebellion. To these they adde the Townes of Gaddi, Arnon, and Alimis, of which Gaddi being in Hebrew no more then Gaddita, is .

40 ignorantly made a name of a place. Arnon also no where appeares to bee the name ofa Towne, but fill ofa River. Aimis Adrichomius frames of ir Anduoic, I. Mace. 5. 26. fo that the name should rather be Alema, but Junius out of Tofephus reades Malls, for this in Alimis: and vnderstanding Malleto be put for Mullo, and to be as much for this in Alimis: as Munitio (as wee have flewed touching the Atillo of the Sichemites) hee takes this 10 at 1.14.
Malle to be Mitfin Mashitarum, of which 1. Sam. 2.2.3. As for that Mageth which 1. The teres D drichamius findes in this Tribe of Gad, it is that Mahacath, which Mofes noteth to bee & R in the Heas farre as the furthest of Manasses, out of the bounds of this Tribe. So also Dathema, like so that one of which 1. Mace. 5.10. (which Junius takes to be a Rithma, of which Num. 33.18.a is of millaken place of firength in the Territorie of the Ammonites) and in like manner Minnith, and fortime with 50 Abel vinearum, though by somethey be attributed to the Gadites or to their borders, our missing

Of the Ammonites, part of whose Territories the Gadites wanne from OG the King of Balan.

His Tribe of Gad, possess that Countrie of the Ammonites, who together with the Moabites, held that part of Arabia Petreacalled Nabathea, as well within as without the mountaines of Gilead: though at this time when the Gadites wan it, it was in the possession of Sehon and Og Ammorites: and therefore Moses did not expell the Ammonites, but the Amorites, who had thrust the iffues of Lot ouer the mountaines Trachones or Gilead, as before. After the death of Othoniel the first Judge of Ifrael, the Ammonites joyned with the Moabites against the Hebrewes, and so continued long. Iephia Judge 144.10, of Ifrael had a great conquest ouer one of the Kings of Ammon, but his name is omitted. In the time of Samuel they were at peace with them againe.

Afterward we finde that cruell King of the Ammonites, called Nahas: who be- i.Sam.ti. fleging Jabes Gilead, gaue them no other conditions but the pulling out of their right cies. The reason why he tendred so hard a composition, was (besides this desire to bring shame vpon Ifrael) because those Gileadites vsing to carrie a Target on their left armes, which could not but fladow their left eies, should by looting their right; be vtterly disabled to defend themselues : but Saul came to their rescue, and deliuered them from that danger. This Nahas, as it may feeme, became the confederate of David, having friended him in Saules time, though Infephus thinkes that this Na- 10fep.18. In this Citie of Rabba, was the yron bed of og found, nine cubites of length, and foure of breadth. The Citie was taken in Danids time, and the inhabitants flaine with great feueritie, and by diners torments. At the first assault thereof Vrias was that to death, having beene by direction from David appointed to bee imploied in the leading of an affault, where he could not escape: wherein also many of the best of the Armie perished: and wherein Danid so displeased God, as his assaires had ill fucceffe afterward, even to his dying day. From hence had David the waightie and rich crowne of gold, which the Kings of Ammon ware: or which as some expound 40 it, was yeed to be fet on the head of their Idoll, waighing a talent, which is 60 pound Will, Tys. The Mountaines which are described within this Tribe, and that of Manasse, with a part of Reuben, are those which Ptolomie calleth the hills of Hippus, a Citic of Calefria: and Strabo *Trachones: the same which continue from near Damaseus vnto the Defarts of Moab: and receive divers names as commonly mountaines do, which is locur affect of neighbour and bound divers Countries: For from the South part, as farre North-Jatebrojus: whence it ap- wards as Afteroth the chiefe Citic of Og, they are called Galaad or Gilead, from thence Northward they are know to by the name of Hermon, for so Moses calleth them: 50 in these parts The Sidenians name them Shirion, but the Amorites Shenir, others Seir : of which was properly name all those Hills also were called which part Indea and Idimea: and lastly they the bill courty. are called Libanus , for fo the Propher Hieremie makes them all one, calling the high mountaines of Galaad, the head of Libanus. was buried : whence others reading with the Vulgar, Ind. 12.7. Sepultus est in Cinitate sua Gilehad, (for in una Ciuitatum Gilehad) imagine Gilehad to be the name of a Citie, and to be the same with Sebei. In like manner following the Vulgar, 1. Macc. 5.26. where it readeth Casphor for Cheshon; the same Adrichomius imagineth it to be ampla & firma Gilehaditarum Ciustas, so of one Citie Hesbon or Chesbon, which they call Effebon, the chiefe Citie of Sehon, in the Tribe of Reuben, hee imagineth two more: this Calphor in Manasses, and a Citie in Gad which he calleth Cashon, of which we have admonished the Reader heretofore. Of Gamala ( so called , because the Hill on which it stood, was in fashion like the back of a Cammell) which to sephus 10 placeth not farre from Gadara, in the lower Gaulanitis ouer against Tarichea, which is on the West side of the Sea or Lake of Tiberias, see this Iosephia in his fourth booke capito 10 of the Iewish warre: where he describes the place by nature to be almost inuincible: and in the storic of the siege, shewes how Velpasian with much danger of his owner person, entring it, was at first repulsed, with other very memorable accidents : and how at length after the comming of Titus, when it was taken, many leaping downe the rocks with their wives and children, to the number of five thousand, thus perished: besides foure thousand slaine by the Romanes : so that none escaped, faue only two women that hid themfelues.

About foure miles West from Gadara, and as much East from Tiberias (which is on the other fide of the Lake) Tofephus placeth Hippus, or Hippene, whence Ptolomie in vita fue. gives the name to the hills that compaffe the plaines in which it standeth : so that it may seeme to have beene of no small note. It is seated farre from the hill Countrie: on the East of the Lake, as also Plinie noteth lib. 5.cap. 15. It was restored by Pompey : after by Augustus added to Herods Tetrarchie: It was wasted by the Lewes, in the 1.60, Bell. Tid. beginning of their rebellion: when by many maffacres of their Nation, they were 12.6.19. inraged against their borderers.

The next Citie of note, but of more ancient fame, is Edrehi or Edrai, wherein og Of an other E-King of Bafan chiefly abode, when Mofes and Ifrael inuaded him: and neare vnto drihi in Nephr. this his Regall Citie, it was that he loft the battaile and his life. It flood in S. Hieromes Deal 2.1.619 time: and had the name of Adar or Adara. Not farre from these Townes near 10r-11em 1613,314 dan, in this valley stood Gerassa or Gergessa, inhabited by the Gergesites, descended of the fift some of Canaan. Of these Gergesites we reade Mat. 8.28. that Christ comming Matt. 8.3 from the other fide of the Lake of Tiberias, landed in their coasts : where casting the Diuels out of the possessed, he permitted them to enter into the heard of Hogs: in which storie for Gergesites or Gergesins, S. Luke and S. Marke have Gadarens : not as if March; these were all one (for Gergessa or Gerassa is a distinct Towne in these parts from Ga- Luc.86 dera) but the bounds being confounded, and the Cities neighbours, either might well be named in this storie. This Citie received many changes and calamities; of which solephus hath often mention. For belides other aduentures, it was taken by 40 L. Annius Lieutenant to Vefpafian and 1000.0f the ablest young men put to the fword. and the Citie burnt. In the yeare 1120. it was rebuilt by Baldwine King of Damafeus : and in the same yeare recouered by Baldwine de Burgo King of Hierusalem : and by him vtterly razed. Neare vnto Gerafa is the Village of Magedan, or after the Syriake Magedu, or after the Greeke Magdala, where the Pharifees and Sadduces defired Mathie. of our Sauiour a figne from heauen; the fame place or some adioyning to it, which S. Marke calleth Dalmanutha. By the circumftances of which storic it appeares that Mare. 8, S. Martin Call the Control of Decapola, Brochard Forthing and the Control of Decapola, Brochard Forthing: this coal that between the Lake of Therina and findes it to be Phiale, the Fountaine of Tordan Forthing makes both these places to be one; and findes it to be Phiale, the Fountaine of Tordan Forthing in Applic. according to Islephus: but this Phiale is too farre from the Sea of Galilee, and from c.7.4.4 1.3. 50 Bethlaida, to be either Magdala or Dalmanutha. For as it appears by the storie, not farr hence towards the North was the Defart of Bethfaida, where Christ filled 5000. Mati.is. people with the fine Barley loanes and two Fishes.

On the North of this Bethfatda they place Iulias, not that which was built by He- Luc. 11, 100, 6, red, but the other by Philip, which boundeth the Region Trachonitis towards the

But the principall Citie of all these in ancient time was Asteroth: somtime peopled with the Giants Raphaim; and therefore the Countrie adjoyning called the Land of Giants, of whose race was Og. King of Basan. In Genelis this Citie is called Afteroth of Carnaim, whence 1. Mac. 7.26. it is called fimply Carnaim, as Iof. 13.21. it is called 10 Altereth without the addition of Carnaim. The word Carnaim fignificant a paire of Hornes, which agree well with the name of their Idoll Afforeth, which was the I-See chap. 7 mage of a sheepe, as it is elsewhere noted, that Astaroth in Deut. Signifieth sheep. Others from the ambiguitie of the Hebrew take Karnaim, to have beene the name of the people which inhabited this Citie; and expound it heroes *radiantes. For of old Home when it the Raphai which inhabited this Citie (Gen. 14.5.) were Giant-like men, as appeares is politised that noth; by comparing the words Deut. 3.11. Og ex refiduo gigantum, with the words lof. 12. is that the verb 12. Of ex reliquiis Raphagorum : but if the Karnaim (or Karnaiim) were these Raphan of this Nowac the word would not have beene in the duall number : neither would Mojes in the place of Genefis haue faid the Raphas in Afteroth of the Karnaim, but either the Raphas 20 in Afteroth of the Raphai, or some other way fittest for perspicultie: for this haming effe : whereup of both thus in the fame clause, distinguisheth one from the other!

Not farre from Asteroth Adrichomius out of Brochard and Breidenbaching placeth Cedar, in the way out of Syria into Galilee, foure miles from Corazin. Now concerning the Texts which he citeth, it is fo that the Greeke hath Geland in ters to paint fleed of the word Cedar, which the Vulgar doth vie in that place of Judith, and joyneth Carmel and Galilee. The Cantieles and the 120. Pfalme doc rather prove that 30 Cedar was not here about than any way helpe Adrichomius. For that they freake of Scenita Cedareni, it is apparent, and as evident by the place in the Canticles that they were decolores, much more than any vinder the Climates of the land of Canaan whence Junius out of Lampridius and Plinie placeth them in Arabia Petraa, faire from these parts. Touching the Sepulcher of Ich it is certaine that the Arabians and Saracens Run, Irran, Ole. (holding those places) faine many thinges to abuse the Christians, and to get moaft. in Gon. Bell. ney. Further, it may well be affirmed that many (if not all) the historicall circumin com. lib.i. de transces of Job are so obscure, that we should rather by finding his Countrie seeke (up.Ep. ad Rom. to get fome knowledge of him, than by any prefumptions founded upon him, in-Aug.de cimi. The Land of Huts or Hus wherein Iob dwelt is from the Greeke Ove, which the vied Auditinior Septuagint vie for the word Huts, translated by the Pulgar fometime Hus, as Job. I. v. I fomtime Aulitis as Hierome 25,20. This Land is placed by Junius between Palellina There and on and Calefyria, belides Chamatha (or Hamath) under Palmyrene in the Countriécalthers it is called by Ptolomie Trachonitis or Bathanea, the bounds of which Countries are confounled Aufanitis, & ded with Bafan in this halfe Tribe of Manasses. And that this Land of Hus was thus they readeit in feated it may in part bee gathered out of the place of Ieremie the 25, 20, where hee the separagint reckons the Hulhites among the promiseuous borderers of the Ifraelites, whom hee therefore calleth promifeuous or miscellaneam turbam, because their bounds were not only loyned but confounded, and their Seigniories mingled one with the other, but of this place the wordes of Hieremie, Lamentations 4.21. speaking of the same prophelie, of which he speaketh in the fine and twentieth Chapter, must needes be expounded: as Iunius reades them distinguishing the Land of Hiss from Edom: O fina Edomi, o qua habitas in terra Hutzi; O Daughter of Edom, O thou which dwelleft in the Land of Hus. Now because the Vulgar doth not so distinguish, but readeth Filia Edom que habitus interra Hus: Daughter of Edom which dwelleft in the Land of Hus: Hence, as it seemes, some of the learned haue thought that lob was an Edomite, as we have said, and King of Edom, which if they understand by it Idumes or Edom, so called in Moto les time, they are greatly mistaken, making this Land of Hus to be in Edumea. For it Douts, 5, is very probable that E/au when he first parted from Iacob did not seate himselse in Edom, or Seir, which lieth on the South border of Iudes, but inhabited Seir farre to the East of Iordan, and held a part of those Mountaines otherwise called Galaad, and Hermon, which by corruption the Sidonians call Shirion, and the Amorites Shenir for Seir, and from this his habitation did Efau incounter Iscob when he returned out of Mesopotamia, who passed by the very border of Esau his abiding. It is true that at fuch time as Moles wandred in the Desarts, that the posteritie of Elan inhabited Seir to the South of Iudes: for it is like that the Ammorites who had beaten both Ammonand Moab, did also drive the Edomites out of those parts, who thence-forward 20 scated themselues to the South of Iudea, bordering the Defart Paran, and stretched

Now for this Hus which gaue the name to a part of the Land of Trackenilis, whother it were Hus the sonne of Aram, as Junius thinkes in his note vpon Gen. 10.23. Or rather Hus the sonne of Nachor, Abrahams brother, the question is doubtfull. For my part I rather incline to thinke, that it was Hus the sonne of Nachor : partly because these Families of Aram seeme long before to have beene lost and partly because in 10b 6.22.2. Elibu the fourth of 10bs friends, which seemes to be of 10bs owne Countrie, is called a Buzite, of Buz, the brother of Hue, the sonne of Nachor: as also Whence the Hieremie 25. in the same continuation (though some other Nations named between) Settuspin call 30 where Hus is spoken of, there Buz is also named. Neither doth it hinder our conic-Eture that in the place of 10b 32. Elihu the Buzite is faid to be of the Familie of Ram: (which Iunius expounds to be as much as of the Familie of Aram) for that by this Aram we are not to understand Aram the sonne of Sem, Junius himselfe maketh it plaine, both in his annotation vpon the beginning of his booke, where he faith that one of Jobs friends (which must needes be this Elibu) was of the posteritie of Nachor (as also in this place he confesseth so much expressy) and in as much as he readethnot è familià Aram, or Ram, but è familia Syra; like as elsewhere Laban who fprung of Nachor is called a Syrian.

As for the other three of lobs friends (of whom by this note of Elibu his being of 40 the Syrian Familie, or of the familie of Nachor) it is implied that they were of other See Sidus See kindreds; as also by the Septuagints addition, that this Elihu was of the Land of Hus, neufic, or Austris, it is implied that they thought only Elibu to have beene of lobs owne

Francifcus Brochard the Monke, in his description of the holy Land in the journey from Acon Eastward, findeth Suetha, and Theman on the East of the Sea of Galilee : both very neare to the Land of Hus: whereof the one may feeme to have denominated Bildad the Shuchit; the other Eliphaz the Themanite: two of the three friends of lob, of the which lob 2.11. But lunius thinks that the Shuchits were inhabitants of Arabia the Defart, descended of Shuach the sonne of Abraham and Ketura: of whom 50 Gen. 52.2. perhaps, faith he, the fame whom Plinie calls Saecai. So also he thinketh the Themanites of whom Eliphaz was, to have beene of Arabia the Defart : and Eliphaz himselfe to have beene of the posteritic of Theman the sonne of Eliphaz, which was the sonne of Esau. And so also Nahamah whence Tophar the third of Jobs friends (which in this place of 10b c.2.v. 1 1. are mentioned) is by the fame learned expositor

The Historie of the Syrians the chiefe borderers of the Afraelites that dwelt on the East of Fordan.

Amasevs of all other in this border, and of that part of the world, was the most famous, excelling in beautie, antiquitie, and riches, and was therefore called the Citie of ioy or gladnes, and the House of pleasure; and is not onely remembred in many places of Scripture. but by the best Historians and Cosmographers. The Hebrewes faith Iosephus thinke it to have bene built by isseph. 1.10. Hus the sonne of Aram: of which opinion S. Hierome vpon Efai feemeth to be; though in his Hebrew questions hee affirmeth that it was founded by Damafeus, the sonne of Eliezer Abrahams Steward, athing very Genting vnliklie, seeing the citie was formerly knowne by that name, as appeares by Abrahams calling this his Steward Eliezer of Damasco. Danid was the first that subjected it to the Kingdome of Inda, after the ouerthrow of Adadezer their King, but in Salomons time, Rezon recourred it againe, though he had no title at all or right to that principalitie: but David having overthrowne Hadadezer king of Sophena, (otherwise Syria Soba or Zobah) Razon or Rezon with the remainder of that broken armie, in-20 uaded Damascena, and possest Damascens it selfe, and became an enemie to Salomon all 1. Recitives.

The next King of Damaseus was Adad the Edomite, who flying into Agypt from 1-Reg. st. Dauid, and Ioab, when they flew all the males in Edom, was there entertained, and married Taphnes the King of AEgypts wives lifter : of whom Taphnes in Egypt was fo called. This Adad returning againe became an enemie to Salomon, all his life, and (as some writers affirme) inuaded Damascus, and thrust Rezon thence-out. In the line of Adad that Kingdome continued nine descents (as hereafter may be shewed in the catalogue of those Kings of Syria) to whom the Assyrians & then the Gregians fucceeded. This citie was exceeding strong, compassed with waters from the riners 40 of Abanah, and Parphar: wherofone of them prophane writers call Chryforrhous the golden river. Junius takes it for Adonis. The countrey adioyning is very fruitfull of excellent wines and wheats, and all manner of excellent fruits. It had in it a very ftrong Castle built as it seemes by the Florentines, after it became Christian: the lillies Harold. 6, Bell. being found cut in many marbles in that Cit'adell. Against this Citie the Prophets Amos, Efai, Hiereny and Zacharias, prophecied that it should be taken, burnt, demo- 1.3.8.10.8.17. lished, and made a heape offtones. After that it was veterly ruined by the Babylonians, faith Hierome vpon Efai: which thing 50 was performed by Salmanafar according to Iunius, in his note vpon that place, fine vecres after the prophecie. In time it was restored by the Macedonians, and the Piniemies; but long after when Syria fell into the hands of the Romanes, it was taken tofebanis, thought either to be named of Thinmab by transposition of letters (which Thinmah Gen. 36.40. is named among the sonnes of E/au that gaue denomination to the places where they were feated) or elfe to be the same Nahamah, which 10/. 15. 41. is reckoned for a Citic of Inda in the border, as he thinkes, of Edom. And yet I denie not but that neare to the Land of Hus, in Basan, as it seemes, in the Tribe of Manasses, there is a Region which at least in latter times was called Suitis, or of some DEBELL Sact. I like name. For this is cuident by the Historic of Willielmus Tyrius, which reports of 22.615.021. a Fort in this Region of Suits or Suites (as he calls it diversly) of exceeding great strength and vse for the retaining of the whole Countrie: which in the time of Baldwine the second King of Hierufalem was with great digging through rocks recoursed 10 by the Christians: having not long before been lost to the great disaduantage of the Countrie, while it was in the handes of the Saracens. The fituation of this Fort is by Tyrius described to be fixteene miles from the Citie Tiberias, on the East of Iordan: by Adrichomius foure miles North-ward from the place where Iordan enters the Lake Tiberias at Corazin.

Other Cities of this part of Manafles named in the Scripture are these: Golan, Be. besithera, Mitsha of Gilead, and Kenath, which after the comming of the Israelites was called Nobach. Of Nobach or Kenath, and Mitsha of Gilehad, we have spoken by occasion among the Cities of Gad: The two other were given to the Leuites, and Golan made one of the Cities of refuge : from which Golan wee haue both Gaulanitis Supe- 20 rior & inferior, oft in Infephus. Behefhthera is accounted the chiefe Citie of Balan by fome, but the writers corrupting the name into Bozra, it is confounded with Betler or Bozza of Reuben, and with Bozza of Edom. Argob is oft named for a Region in this Tract, and hence Hierome hath Arga, a name of a Citie placed by some about the waters of Merom (as they are called by Iofua) which make the Lake Samachonitis, as sosephus calls it. This Lake being as it were in the midft betweene Casaria Philippi and Tiberias, through which as through the Lake of Tiberias, Iordan runneth, boundeth part of this halfe Tribe on the West. When the snow of Libanus melteth it is very large, faith Brochard: otherwise more contract, leaning the marish ground on both fides, for Lyons and other wild beafts, which harbour in the shrubs that plen- 30

Adioyning to this Lake in this Countrie of Manasses, Iosephus names two places of strength fortified by himselfe in the beginning of the Ierres rebellion: Seleucia the one, and Sogane the other. In the North fide of this halfe Tribe of Manaffe, and in the North-east, the Scripture nameth divers bordering places toward Damafeus, as Tfedad, Chauran, and Chatfar-Henan, lying in a line drawne from the West; of which three Cities we reade Ezek. 47. 15. with which also agrees the place Numb. 24. 8. where for Chauran, betweene T sedad, and Chatsar-Henan, Ziphron is named. From this Chauran is the name of Auranitis regio, in Iosephus and Tyrius, whose bounds

(as also the bounds of Gessur and Mahachashor Macati, which were likewise borderers to Manaffes toward the North-east) are vnknowne: only that Geffur was of might, it appeares in that David married Mahaca the Daughter of Tholmay King of

In the yeere 1400. Tamberlaine Emperour of the Parthians, inuaded that region. and befieged the citie with an armie of 1200000. (if the number be not miltaken) He entred it and put all to the fword, filling the ditch withhis prisoners, those that retired into the Castle which seemed a place impregnable, hee ouertopped with another Castle adioyning : he forbare the demolithing of the citie in respect of the beautie of the Church, garnished with 40. gates or sumptuous porches. It had within it 9000 lanternes of gold & filuer: but while he inuaded £gypt they againe furprized Damaseus. Lastly in his returne after three monethes siege he forst it: the Mahometans prostrating themselves with their priests, desired mercie: But Tamber- 29 laine commaunding them to enter the Church, he burnt them, and it, to the number of 30000 and did so demolish it, as those that came afterwardes to see their houses, knew them not by the foundations. And as a Trophey of his victory heraised three towers with great Arte, builded with the heads of those whom hee had flaughtered. After this it was restored and reposses by the Soldane of Agypt, with agarrison of Mammalukes: And in the yeere 1517. Now the better to vnderstand the storie of those Syrian Princes, whom soone after the Kings of Damaseus made their vassals, the reader may informe himselfe, That on the Northeast parts of the holy land there were three chiefe principalities whereof the Kings or Commaunders greatly vexed or disturbed the State or Commonwealth of Ifrael, namely Damafeus or Aram, Sophena or Syria Zoba, and Chamath, or Chamath-Zoba, of which these were the Princes in Dauids and Salomons times: Razon or Rezon of Damascus, Adadezer of Syria Zoba, and Tohu of Chamath. But it seemeth that Damascus was one of the cities subject to Adadezer when Danid inuaded him, though when 50 Saul made warre against Zoba, Damaseus was not named. And as Iosephus affirmeth the leader of those succours, which were leuied and sent to Hadad-Hezer from Damasicus, had the name of Adad: who was in that battaile slaine with 22000. Aramites of Damascus: whereof, as of the ouerthrow of Adadezer, Rezen, the Commander of his armie, taking aduantage, made himfelfe King of Damafeus: Adadezer and Adad of Damafeus being both flaine. About the fame time Tohu King of Chamath or Iturag. 1. Erg. 11. hearing thathis neighbour and enemie Adadezer was vtterly overthrowne, fendeth for peace to David, and prefenteth him with rich gifts, but in dolo faith S. Hierome; it was craftily done of him. Now to the North of the holy Land, and to the West of Damafeus . the Tyrians and Zidonians inhabited : but they for the most part were in league and peace with the Indeans and Ifraelites. But to returne to the kings of Spria, I meane of Syria as it is taken in the Scriptures, containing Damafeena, Soba or Zoba, and Chamath or Iturea, to which I may adde Gefbur, because it is so accounted in the 10 2. of Sam. 15. as iowning in the territorie to Damafeus (for Syria at large is farre greater, of which Palelima it felfe is but a Prouince, as I have noted in the beginning of this Tract) It is not agreed among the Historians of former times nor of our latter writers, who was the first of those Adads of Syria Zoba, and Damascus.

Some account Rezon, other Adad of Idumaa: of whom it is written in the first of Kings, that David having invaded that region, and left Joab therein to defiroy all the male children thereof: Adad of the kings feed, fled into Egypt: and was there married to Taphnes the Queenes lifter as before, who hearing of Daniels death, and of the death of his Captaine loab (whom indeed all the bordering Nations feared) hee returned againe, and as Bunting thinketh, this Adad did expell Rezon out of Da-

20 ma/cus: and was the first of the Syrian Kings. To mee it seemeth otherwise. For as 2. Sam. 8.2. I take it, Adadezer the fonne of Rehob, whom Saulinuaded was the founder of that and 12. principalitie: and the first of Adads, who forfaking his fathers name, as hee grewe powerfull, tooke vpon him the style of Adad, the great God of the Affyrians, faith Macrobius, which lignified oneneffe or Vnitie. I also finde a citie called Adada in the fame part of Spria: of which whether these Princes tooke the name or saucit. I am ignorant. For Adad-ezer, Ben-adad, Eli-adad were the fame in name, with the differences of Ezer, Ben, and Eli, adjoyned. And that Adadezer was of greatest power. it appeareth first because it is against him, that David vndertooke the warre: secondly because he leuied 22000. Aramites out of the territoric of Damaseus: as out of his

30 proper Dominions: for had the Damaseens had a King apart, it is probable that the Scriptures would have given vs his name, thirdly because Syria Zoba, of the most of which Adadezer was king, was an exceeding large territorie, and contained of Arabia the Defart as farre as to Euphrates, according to Plinie: and the greatest part of Arabia Petras according to Niger. Who foeuer was the first, whether Adadezer, or Adad of I- 1.Res. t. dumea, Rezon was the second: Who was an enemie to I frael all the dayes of SALOMON. Befids the cuil that Adad did, the cuil that Hadad did, seemeth to be referred to Hadad of Idumaa, lately returned out of Egypt to wit, 23. yeres after he was carried thither.

The third king of Damascus, and of Zobah both, was Hezion, to Hezion succeded Tabremmon, or Tairemmon, to him Benhadad, as is proued in the first of Kings. 1. King 15.15.

40 For Afaking of Juda the fonne of Abiam, the fonne of Roboam, the fonne of Salomon, being vexed and inuaded by Baafha, the fuccessour of Nadab, the some of Jeroboam, fent to Benhadad, the sonne of Tabrimmon the sonne of Hezion, king of Aram, that dwelt at Damascus, to inuade Ifrael (while Brashs sought to fortific Rama against A/a: thereby to blocke him vp, that he should not enter into any of the territories of ifrael) who according to the defire of Afa, having received his prefents, willingly inuaded the countrey of Nepthalim, and tooke divers cities, and spoiles thence: Afa in the meane while carrying away all the Materials, which Baafba had brought to 1.Rec. 15.0, 18. fortifie Rama withall, and converted them to his owne vie.

This Benhadads father Tabremmon was in league with Afa: and fo was his father 50 Hezian; for Asa requireth the continuance of that friendship from Benhadad, his fonne: though it feemeth that the gold and filuer fent him out of the Temple, was the most forcible argument. And that this Tabremmon inuaded Ifrael, before the enterprize of his sonne Benhadad, it is coniectured. For Benhadad when he was prisoner with Achab, spake as followeth. The Cities which my father tooke from thy father, I will 1, Reg. 20, 0, 34;

reflore: and thou shalt make streetes or keepers of the borders, for thee in Damascus: as my father did in Samaria. And herein there ariseth a great doubt (if the argument it selfe were of much importance) because Tabremmon was father indeed to Benhadad which inuaded Basilha, at the request of Afa; But this Benhadad that twice entred vpon Achab : and was the second time taken prisoner, was rather the sonne of Benbadad, the first of that name, the confederate of Asa and Abiam, as before, than the forme of Tabremmon. For between the invalion of Benhadad the first, in Baashas time, and the feige of Samaria, and the ouerthrow of Benhadad by Achab, there past 49. yeeres, as may be gathered out of the raignes of the Kings of Israel. So that if we allow 30. yeeres of age to Benhadad, when he inuaded Baalha, and after that 40. 10 veeres, ere he was taken by Achab, which make eightic lacking one, it is vnlikely that Benhadad at luch an age would make warre. Besides all this, the first Benhadad came with no fuch pompe, but the fecond Benhadad vaunteth, that he was followed with 32. Kings : and therefore I refolue that Benhadad the fonne of Tabremmon inuaded Busha and Cinri, and Benhadad the fecond inuaded Achab, at whose hands this Berhadad received two notorious overthrowes: the first at Samaria, by a sallie of 700. If raclites : the second at Aphee, where with the like number in effect, the Ifraelites flaughtered 100000. of the Aramites: besides 2 7000, which were crusht by the fall of the wall of Aplee. And this Benhadad, Achab againe setteth at libertie: to whom he rendreth those townes, that his father had taken from the predecessour of A- 23 chilo, but being returned, he refuseth to render Ramoth Gilead, a frontier towne, and of great importance. Now three yeeres after (for follong the league lasted) Ramoth not being delivered, Achab invadeth Gilead, and affeigeth the citic, being affifted by 1.Ref. 22. Josaphat. The Aramiles came to succourand fight; in which Achab is wounded and dieth that night. After this, Benhadad fendeth the commaunder of his forces called Maaman, to Ioram the sonne of Achab to be healed of the leaprosie, and though Elizeus had healed him : yet he picketh quarrell against Ioram : and when Ioram by Elizeus his intelligence, had escaped his plot, he sent men, and Chariots to take the Prophet, as is aforefaid. After Benhadad beliegeth Samaria againe, and being terri-2 Reg 6. fied thence from heaven, he departed home, and fickneth, and fendeth Azael with 30 2 Rec.7. great gifts to Elizeus, to know his estate, if he might line. Azael returning, smothe-3 2 3 4. reth him. Zonaras and Cedrenus call this Benhadad Adar, and the fonne of Adar: A-Amos, Air, 49. mos and Hieremie mention the towers of Benhadad. Infephus writeth that Benhadad and his fucceffour Azael were worthipped for Gods by the Syrians to his time, for the sumptuous Temples which they built in Damaseus. The Syrians also boasted much of their antiquitie, ignorant faith he, that scarce yet 1100. yeeres are compleate fince their warres with the Ifraelites. Hazardor Azard the first king of the race of the Adads of Damaseus was anointed by Elifhasor Elizeus, when he was fent by Benhadad to the Prophet, to know whether Beethadad should recour his present sicknesse: He waged warre with Ioram; who 40 received divers wounds at the incounter at Ramoth in Gilead: from whence returning to be cured at Iefrael, he and the King of Inda, Abaziah, or Ochozias, are flaine by Ichn, as before is faid. After the death of Ioram; Azael continued the warre against lebs, and wasted Gilead, and all those portions of Gad, Reuben, and Manasse, ouer tordan. Hee then inuaded Inda, and tooke Gath, but by gifts from Ioas hee was aucrted from attempting Hierufalem: for he presented him all the hallowed things which I E HOSAP HAT, I EHORAM, and AHAZIAH his fathers, Kings of Inda had dedicated; and which he himselfe had dedicated; and all the gold which was found in the treasuries of the Lord : and in the Kings house. This was the second time that the Temple was spoyled to please the Adads of Damaseus. For Asa did present Benhadad 50 with those treasures, when he inuited him to warre vpon Baasha King of Israel. And notwithstanding this composition betweene Ions and Aznel, yet apart of his armie spoiled the other provinces of Iudea, and slaughtered many principall * King. 3. v. 7. persons. Of the latter Kings, and decay and overthrow of their power.

Fter Hazael, Benhadad the fecond, or rather the third of that name, the fonne of Hazael, reigned in Damafeus: who fought against Ifrael, with ill successe: for 10.48 king of Ifrael, the sonne of the vnhappie 10-2.5%. achaz, ashe was foretold by Elifhathe Prophet, beat Benhadad in three 10fephante.g. feuerall battels : and he lost all those cities to Ifrael, which his father

After this Benhadad the fonne of Hazael, there succeeded three others of the 1000/h.dut.lit. fame name, of whom the Stories are loft, onely Nicholaus Damascenus, cited by Iole- c.e phus, makes mention of them : and in one of these Kings times it was that Ierobosm the second, the sonne of Ions recovered Damaseus it selfe, to Iudah saith the Geneua, 2, King 14.18; but better in Iunius, vique recuperabat Damaseum, & Chamatham Ieluda prò Ifraele; that is, And how herecovered for Ifrael, Damascus and Chamatha of Iudaa; for these ci-20 ties sometimes conquered by David, did of right belong to the tribe of Iuda.

And it is likely that this conquest vpon the Adads was performed: the first of these three Adads then living, of whom there is no Storie. For when as Jehous the king of the tenne Tribes had thrice ouercome the Syrians in the time of Renhadad the fonne of Hazael and had recovered the cities which Hazael had wonne from Ifrael and fo left his Kingdome to his fonne 1eroboam the fecond, it feemeth that this 1eroboam without delay, and having nothing elfe left for him to enterprize, inflantly followed his fathers good fortune, and inuaded Damafeus.

Razin, or Rezin, after Iofephus Rafes, after Zonaras Raafon, the 10. Adad, maketh league with Pekah, or Phacas King of Ifrael, against sichaz King of Iuda; both carie

30 away a great number of prisoners. After this they both beliege Achaz in Hierusalem : but in vaine. Then Adadalone invadeth Elath, and beating out the Jewes, 1,King 166. maketh it a Colonie of Syrians. Wherefore Achaz brought Tetglaphalaffar against Ra-Es. 7. zin, who tooke him and beheaded him, and wonne Damafeus: with whom ended losephant, lib. the line of the Adads and the Kingdome of Damafeus: the Allyrians becomming ma- 9.5.12. fters both of that and Ifrael. Hazael, whom Elifha forctold, with teares, of his advancement; the fame who ouerthrew Joram King of Ifrael, at Ramoth Gilead. And that there was a fecond Hazael which preceded Benhadad the third, it is not improbable, because that Hazael which tooke Geth, and compounded the warre with low, made the expedition 20. yeeres, and perchance more, after the first Hazael which stifled his master Benhadad, and had flaine Ioram the fonne of Achab King of Ifrael. For Ioas began to reigne in the 7 yeers of Ishu King of Israel; and after he had reigned 23 yeers, the Temple was not yet repaired, after which (and how long weeknow not) it is faid that Ha-

50 zael tooke Geth, and turned his face towards Ierusalem. It is also some proofe that Hazael which tooke Geth, was not the fame with Hazael that murdered Benhadad, because her could not at that time but be of good yeeres, being as it seemeth the fecond person in the Kingdome, and Commaunder of Benhadads men of warre. 9 Refin, or Rezin the last, who inyned with Pekah King of Ifrael, against Inda, at which time Achaz King of Inda waged for his defence Teglatphalaffar.

Now betweene Benhadad the third, and Rezin the last, Nicholaus Damascenus findes three other Kings of the Adads, which make twelve in all.

For the rest of the Princes of Syria, which were but reguli, as those of Emath, and Geffur, we finde that Tohu was King of Emath or Chamath in Davids time, to whom he fent his fonne Ioram with prefents, after Davids victorie against Adadezer. Also Senacherib speaketh of a King of Emath, but names him not,

Of other leffer Kingdomes of the Syrians, which being brought under the Affrians, neuer recoursed them selues again.

F Geffur wee finde two Kings named; to wit, Talmei, and his father Ammihur. To Talmai, whole daughter Dauid married, it was that Ab-Salon fled, who was his maternall grandfather. Of the Kings of Sophena or Syria, Soba or Calefyria, there are two named, Rehob or Rochob 10 the father of Adadezer, and Adadezer himselfe, and it is plaine that after his death the feat of the Kings of Soba was transferred to Damafeus, a Citie better fitting their greatnesse. After Rezin became Lord of both Principalities. And the race of these Kings of Syria (which became so potent, and joyned Soba, Damafeus, Emath, and the defart of Arabia with other Provinces into one, under Rezin the second of the Adads) as it began with Dauid, so it ended at once with the Kingdome of Ifrael. For Ahaz king of Juda waged the Affyrian Teglatphalasfar against Pekah King of Ifrael, and against Rezin the last King of Damaseus: which Teglath first inuaded Damascena, and the region of soba, and tooke Damascus it selfe, and did put to death Rezin the last, carrying the inhabitants captive. This was the second time 20 that the Affyrians attempted Ifrael. For first, Phul Belochus entred the borders thereof (Menahem gouerning Israel) who stopt the enterprize of Phal with a thousand talents of filuer : for this Phul Belochus, whose pedigree wee will examine hereafter, being scarce warme as yet in his seate at Babyion, which hee, with the helpe of his companion Arbaces, had wrested from Sardanapalus: having besides this King of Syris in his way, who feemed to be a great and strong Prince, was content to take the composition of a thousand talents of the King of Ifrael for that present time. But his sonne Teglath following the purpose of his father Belochus, and finding so excellent an occasion, as the warre begun betweene Ifrael and Iuda, Pekah commaunding in the one, and Achaz in the other, his neighbour Rezin being also wrapt in 40 that warre, and wasted in strength thereby, did willingly accept the offer of Achaz King of Iuda, his imprest and entertainment. So, first attempting Damaseus, which lay in his path towards Ifrael, he carried it (as is before remembred) and then with great case posses himselfe of the Cities of Nephthalim: leading with him a great part of the people captine. And his sonne Salmanassar, whom Ptolomy calleth Nabonassar, after the reuolt of Holea, forced Samaria: and rent that Kingdome asunder. So as the line and race of Ninus in Sardanapalus, whom Belochus supplanted; the race and Monarchie of the Syrian Adads in Rezin, whom Teglath flaughtered; the Kingdome of Israel in Hosea, whom Salmanassar ouerturned; happened necre about a time: that of Ninus in the daies of Belochus, and the other two in the daies of Teglatphalassar, and Salmanassar his sonne. For Sardanapalus perished, Osiaruling Iuda; and the other two Kingdomes were diffolued, Achaz yet liuing.

Laftly, the Kingdome of Inda it selfe, being attempted by Senacherib, the Sonne of Salmanassar in vaine, and preserved for the time by God miraculously, was at length vtterly ouerturned. Hierufalem and the Temple burnt 132 yeeres after the captiuitie of Ifrael, and Samaria: the destruction of Ifrael beng in the ninth yeere of Holea: that of Indain the eleanenth of Zedechia. Now the Emperours of Allyrinand Babylon held also the Kingdome of Syria from the eight yeere of Salmanasser, to the last of Baltassar, whom Herodotus calleth Labynitus; in all about 200. yeeres. After these the Persians from Cyrus to Darius their last King, held Syria about 200,

Then Alexander Macedon tooke this among other Provinces of the Persian Empire, and his successions the Seleucide reigned therein, till it became subject vnto the 10 power of the Romanes, from whom it was wrested long after by the Saracens, and remaineth now in possession of the Turke, as shall be shewed in due place. Thus much of the nations bordering voon the Israelites, with whom they had most to doeboth in warre and peace, being the onely people, whose Historic in those antient times carried an affured face of trueth.

Of the Tribe of BENIAMIN, and of Hierusalem.

The territorie of Bethel, which at the first belonged to the Kingdom of the tenne Lude and Israel Tribes, from the time of the great victorie of Abia against Ieroboam (of which 2.Chr. betweene Hai 13.) was taken from them, and adiogned to the Kingdome of Inda: and so it continued, as appeares by the Storie of Ioshia: which performed the Prophecies against See 2.95 to the altar of Bethel, 2. Reg. 23. whence those coastes I. Macc. 11.34. are called Aphie-mathe 1 ynderrema, which Greeke word fignifieth as much as, A thing taken away, to wit, from the fland the place tenne Tribes. It was one of the three Seigniories or Prafectures which Demetrius in 1. Macc. 11. 34. his Epiftle mentioneth, as added by him to the Dition of the Iewes, out of the Sa- med for one maritan Country. A part of it, as appeares 2. Chron. 12.19. was Hephrauin, which lof. or the three 18.22. is called Hophram, belonging to this Tribe of Beniamin.

Not farre from this Bethel, in this Tribe, we finde three other Citles often mentioned in the Scriptures, Rama, Gibha; and Gebah. Of the name Rama, * it is noted leves out of alreadie, in the description of Ephraim, that there were many townes so called, Samara, this because of their high situation. But whereas they finde out Rama in the Tribe of lying toward Inda (as it feemes because Mat. 2. it appeares that it bordered Bethlehem) and also the East to te-20 out of Brochard and Breidenbach make Silo to have beene called Rama, and finde yet date ward the another Rama in Zabulon; these three haue no warrant in the Scripture. Of Rama VVest: and d. in the Tribe of Affer, as it feemes, wee haue testimonie 10,19.29 and of an other in which even Nephthalim Iof. 19.36. of a third Rama, where Samuel dwelt in Mount Ephraim 1. Of a fourth Rama we reade 2. Reg. 8.29. which is Ramoth in Gilchad. The first, Tribe of simewhich is most often mentioned, is Rama of Beniamin, seated as we faid, necre Bethel South, which 20 the vttermost South-border of the Kingdome of the tenne Tribes: for which cause 10,19,8 is cal-Bassshain the time of Afa King of Juda, fortified it, to hinder those that did fly from the South and him to Ala. Of this Rama, or Ramatha I should rather thinke lofeph was, that buried otherwise Ba-Christ: because it was neerer to Hierusalem, and after the captivitie belonged to In-halath beer. dan, as it appeares Efd. 2,26. where in that it is joyned with Gebah, it is plaine that he fruition that speaketh of that Rama with whose stones (after Baasha had ceased to build it) Asa (as is, Gouerning it is 1. Reg. 25.22.) built Gebah adioyning to it both being in Beniamin. And as Rama a genitius was the South-border of the tenne Tribes, so was Gebah the North-border of the whence the Kingdome of Iuda: whence 2. Reg. 23. 8. we creade that Iofiah through all his King. Walgar out of the Stellusping. dome, euen from Gebah, which was the North-border, to Beer-fleba which was the the septiment read loft 24.356 South-border, deftroyed the places of Idolatry.

* See in the hither halfe of

T what time Hierufalem was built (which afterward became the Prin- 20 ceffe of all Cities) it doth not appeare. Some there are who imagine that Melchifedee, was the founder thereof in Abrahams time. But *according to others, that Citic out of which Melehifedee incountred Abraham (in his returne from the ouerthow of the Affyrian and Perfian Kings or Captaines, when Lot was made prisoner) standeth by the river of Iordan, in the halfe Tribe of Manalle bordering Zabulon, which was also called Salem, and by the Greekes Solima.

Hierusalem (whensoeuer or by whomsoeuer built) was a principall Citie in Iosua his time : yet not fo renowned as Hazor the Metropolis (in those daies and before) of all the Cananites, Adonizedek (whom Iofua flew) was then King of Hierufalem. 40 That it was belonging to the Jebusites it is manifest: for how long socuer they held it before Molestime, they were Mafters and Lords thereof almost 400, yeeres after him : even till David wanne it : and therefore in all likelihood, it was by the Iebu(ai (the children of Iebuseus the some of Canaan) built; after whom it was called Iebus. And so much did that Nation rely on the strength of the place, as when David attempted it, they bragged that their lame, and blinde, and impotent people should defendit.

David after he had by Gods affiftance poffest it and turned out the Iebusites, gaue it an exceeding great increase of circuit: strengthened it with a Citadell or Castle: and beautified it with many Palaces, and other buildings : changing the name from 50 Jebussalem, the Citic of the Jebusites, to Hierusalem, which the Geekes call Hierosolima. After Davids time Salomon amplified, beautified and strengthened it exceedingly. tofcomt. Appl. 1. It was againe fackt and a part of the wall throwne downe by Ioas King of Ifrael, while Amasia the twelfth King thereofgo 2 Kin. 16.

And Manasse the sonne of Ezekiah, the fonne of Achaz, by the vaunts made by Ezekiah, to the Embassadours 2.Kj 6.25, of Merodach, lost the remaine, and the very bottome of their treasures It was againe spoiled by the Babylonians, Ioakim then reigning. But this ungratefull, Idolatrous, and rebellious Nation, taking no warning by these Gods gentle corrections and afflictions, but perfifting in all kinde of impietic, filling the Citie even to the mouth with innocent blood, God raifed up that great Babylonian King Nabuchodonofor, as his 2. The wrong done by Ptolomesus Lagi to ant, t. the second Temple, was required by the bountie of his sonne Ptolomeus Philadelphus. The mischiefe wrought by Antiochus Epiphanes and his followers, was amended partly by the great Offerings which were fent to Hieru/alem out of other Nations. Finally all the losses, which either the Citic or Temple had endured, might wel feeme forgotten in the reigne of Herod that vsurping and wicked, but magnificent cyle. Of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romanes.

N this florishing estate, it was at the comming of our Sauiour Christ Ie-(w: and after his death and afcention, it to continued about 40. veres. But then did Titus the Romane, being stirred vp, by God, to be the reuenger of Christ his death; and to punish the Jewes sinful ingratitude, incompasse it with the Romane armie, and became Lord thereof. Hee began the fiege at fuch time as the lewes, from all parts, were come vp to the celebration of the Paffeouer: To as the Citie was then filled with many hundreds of thou- 10 fands of all forts; and no manner of provision or store for any such multitudes. An extreame famine, with the civile diffention, opprest them within the walles; a forcible enemic affailed them without. The Idumaans also, who lay in wait for the destruction of the Iewes Kingdome, thrust themselves into the Citie, of purpose to betray it: who also burnt the Temple, when Nabuchodonofor tooke it. And to be short, there perified of all forts, from the first besieging to the consummation of the vimolifhed, as those which came afterward to see the desolation thereof, could hardly believe that there had beene any fuch place or habitation. Onely the three Heradian towers (workes most magnificent, and ouertopping the rest) were spared, af- 20 well for lodgings for the Romane garrifons, as that thereby their victorie might bee the more notorious and famous: for by those buildings of strength and State remaining, after-ages might indge what the rest were; and their honour be the greater

After this, fuch Iewes as were scattered here and there in Indea, and other Proninces, beganne againe to inhabite fome part of the Citie ; and by degrees to rebuildit, and strengthen it as they could, being then at peace, and tributaries to the Romane State : but after 65. yeeres, when they againe offered to reuolt, and rebell, Alim Adriance the Emperour flaughtered many thousands of them, and ouerturned those three Herodian Towers, with all the reft, making it good which Christ himselfe had 30 foretold; That there should not stand one stone uppon another, of that vngratefull Citie. Afterward, when his furie was appealed, and the Prophecie accomplished he tooke one part without the wall, wherein flood Mount Caluarie, and the Sepulcher of Christ, and excluding of the reft the greatest portion, hee agains made it a Citie of great capacitie, and called it after his owne name, Elia Capitolia. In the gate toward Bethel, he caused a Sowe to be cut in marble, and set in the front thereof, which hee did in despight of the Iewes Nation: making an Edict, that they should not from thenceforth euer enter into the Citic, neither should they dare so much as to behold it from any other high place ouertopping it.

In the yeere 1000, it was regained by Godfrey of Buillon, by affault, with an excceding flaughter of the Saracens, which Godfrey, when hee was elected King thereof, refused to be crowned with a Crowne of gold, because Christ, for whom hee fought, was therein crowned with thornes. After this recourry, it remained under the fucceffours of Godfrey 88. yeeres : till in the yeere 1197. it was regained by Saladine of AEgypt : and lastly, in the yeere 1517. in the time of Selim, the Turkes cast out the AEgyptians, who now hold it, and call it Cuzumobarec, or the Holy Citic. 50 Neither was it Ierufalem alone that hath so oftentimes beene beaten downe and made defolate, but all the great Cities of the world have with their inhabitants, in feuerall times and ages, fuffered the fame shipwracke. For even that land, sometime called holy, hath in effect, lost all her fertilitie, and fruitfulnesses witnesse the many hundreds of thousands which it fedde in the dayes of the Kings of Inda and Ifrael; it being at this time all ouer, in effect, exceeding stony and barraine. It also pleased God, not onely to consume with fire from heauen, the Cities of the Sodomites; but the very foile it selfe bath felt, and doth feele the hand of God to this day. God would not spare the beast that belonged to dimelek, no not any small number of them to bee facrificed to himselfe, neither was it enough that Achan himselfe was stoned, but that his moucables were also confumed and brought to ashes.

Of the vaine and malitious reports of Heathen writers, touching the

F the originall of the Iewes, prophane writers have conceived diver ly and injuriously. Quintilian speakes infamously of them, and of their leader; who (faith he) gathered together a pernitious Nation. Diodore and Strabo make them AEgyptians. Others affirme that while

Is governed AEgypt, the people were so increased, as Ierosolymus, and Indas ledde thence a great multitude of that Nation, with whom they planted the neighbour Regions; which might be meant by Moses and Aaron: for the name of Moses was accidentall, because hee was taken up and saued out of the waters. But Justine, of all other most malitious, doth derive the Jewes from the Syrian Kings; of Justin List whom, Damafeus, faith bec, was the first : and to him succeeded Abraham, Moses, and Ifrael, He againe supposeth (somewhat contrary to himselfe) that Ifrael had 20 tenne fonnes, among whom hee divided the land of Iuda; fo called of Iudas his eldest, who had the greatest portion. The youngest of the sonnes of Israel he calleth In feph: who being brought up in AEgypt, became learned in magicall Arts, and in the interpretations of Dreames, and lignes prodigious, and this toleph (faith hee) was father to Moles: who with the rest, by reason of their foule diseases, and lest they should infect others, were banished AEgypt. Further, hee telleth how these men thus banished, when in the Defarts they suffered extreme thirst and famine, and therein found reliefe the feuenth day, for this cause euer after observed the seauenth day, and kept it Holy; making it a Law among themselues, which afterward became a braunch of their Religion. Hee addeth also that they might not marrie 40 out of their owne Tribles, least discovering their vncleannesse, they might also be expelled by other Nations, as they were by the AEgyptians. These and like fables

Cornelius Tacitus doth as grofly belie them in affirming That in the inmost Oratorie of their Temple, they had the golden head of an Affe, which they adored. But herein Tacitus forgetteth himselfe, having in the fift booke of his owne Historie truely confessed of the Jewes, that they worshipped one onely God; and thought it most prophane to represent the Deitie by any materiall figure, by the shape of a man, or any other creature; and they had therefore in their Temples, no Image or representation, no not so much as in any Citie by them inhabited. Somewhat like 50 this hath A'exander Polyhistor, in Stephanus; who also makes Iudas with Idumea, the first parents of the Jewes.

Claudius Iolaus drawes them from Indaus, whose parents were Sparton and Thebis; Cited by Stewhence it came that the Spartans or Lacedamonians challenged kindred of the He- phasus in Isbrewes: but they did it as descended of Abraham, faith Insephus. Some of these reports feeme to have been gathered out of dinine letters; though wrefted and peructed, according to the cultom of the Hearten. For 6 have they obfeured and altered the Storico of the Greation, of Paradife, of the Floud; and giuen new names to the children of Alawin in the firft age: to Nauband his fonnes; in the fecond; and for Abraham, flast, and Lacob, Mofes, and the refl of the fathers, and leaders of the Hebrewer; all which fainings, as touching the Enwe and their originals, Nofephan against Appina and Terullian have difficiently andwered. For that the Hebrewer were the Children of Arphaced and Hebre, no man doubteth: and 60 Childrens originally, taking name either of Hebre, the fonne of Sale, or elfe (faith Montanus) of wandring, as is before remembred. And therefore doth Stephanus, the Greeke Grammarian, deriue the ikbrewes or tweek from Larabay shauing miliaken the name of Larabay, who was the fonne of labor, in the sixth defent. Their ancient names were first changed by the two grand-children of Laboras-for after Lawb, otherwise lifest, the chiefe part were called lifest, and here part after Elawor Edom, Edomiets, at length the remnant of Lawb, being most of the Tribe of Inda, honoured the name of Fubias, the some of Labob, and became Indians or Invest as also for a time in the name of Ephanut the some of logle, the chiefe of the Partiaches of the ten Tribes, therefor the tenne Tribes were comprehended; but were first rooted out when the Kingdome of Israe fell. Of the memorable thinges that happened in the world, from the death of Iosva to the Warre of Troy: which was about the time of Івритна.

> ò. I. Of the inter-regnum after I o s v A's death : and of OTHONIEL.

HEN Iofua was now dead, who with the aduise of the 70. Elders, and the high Priest, held authoritic ouer the people, and ordered that Common-weale: It pleased God to direct the Tribe of Inda (in whom the Kingdome was afterward established) to vndertake the Warre against the Canaanites, ouer whom (with Gods fauour, and the affiftance of Simeon) they became victorious.

In the first attempt which they made, they not only flew ten thousand, but made Adonibezek prisoner : the greatest and cruellest Commander, both of the Canaanites and Perizites.

This tyrants crueltie as elfe-where hath beene fignified, they returned in the fame 30 kinde vpon his owne head : and so by the torments which he now felt in his owne person (before no otherwise knowne vnto him but by his malitious imagination) made him confesse and acknowledge Gods institudgement against himselfe.

The Tribes of Inda and Simeon did also master and possessed during this interregrum (or as somethinke, before the death of Iosua) the Cities of Azotus, Askalon, Ekron, and Hierusalem, which they burnt, and the Iebusites afterward reedified. They tooke allothe Cities of tehron, Debir, or Kriathfepher, and Zephath, afterwards tiorna. And although it be not fet downe in expresse wordes that any one perfon commanded in chiefe ouer the people, as Mofes and Iofua did: yet it feemeth that Caleb syas of greatest authoritie among them: and that he with the adulfe of 40 Phinees directed and ordered their warres. For if any thinke that they proceeded without a chiefe, the good fucceffe which followed their undertakings witneffeth. the contrarie. And it was Caleb euen while Iofua gouerned, as appeares Iof. 10. 39. that propounded the attempt of Debir, to the rest of the Captaines: for the performance of which enterprise, he promised his Daughter Achsah: which he performed to otheried his yonger brother after the conquest: whose behaviour in that service was such, as (next vnto the ordinance of God) it gave him the greatest reputation among them, and may be effected the fecond cause of his preferment and election for their first Judge Soone after. But while those of Juda made warre with their borderers, from whom they only recoursed the mountainous Countries (for they 50 could not drive out the inhabitants of the Valleis, because they had Chariots of gron.) Ind. 1.94

The rest of the Tribes sought also to inlarge and establish their owne Territories: in which warre they laboured with variable successe: for as the house of Iolephrecouered Bethel, or Luz, from the Hittites, so did the Amorites recouer from Dan all Ind. 1.25; the plaine Countries : and forst them to saue themselues in the Mountaines. now the Ifraelites vinmindfull of Gods benefits, and how often he had miraculoufly a-fore-time defended them, and made them victorious over their enemies (the Elders being also consumed, who better aduised them in the Inter-regnum ) did not only ioyne themselues in marriage with the Heathen Nations : but (that which was more detectable) they ferued the Idolls of Baal, and Afteroth, with other the dead Gods of the Canaanites and Amerites. And therefore did the Lord God whom they had prouoked with their Idolatrie, deliuer them into the handes of the Aramites of Melopotamia: whom Chushan Rishathaim at that time commanded. But after they had felt the fmart of Gods displeasure against them eight yeares, it pleased him to have compaffion on his people, and to raife vp Othoniel to bee their Judge and 10 Leader: who by God affifted, deliuered his bretheren from oppression: and inforst the Aramites to returne into their owne Defarts, and into Mesopotamia adioyning, after which the Ifraelites had peace fortie yeares, during all the time of Othoniels gopernment. This Othoniel is thought by Toffatus to have beene the yonger brother of Caleb, for as much as in the booke of Judges he is twice called Othoniel the sonne of Cenaz Calebs yonger brother. Others doe rather interpret those wordes (Calebs vonger brother) as if they fignified the meanest of his kindred. Indeed it is not likely, that Calebs Daughter should marrie with her owne Vncle; yet it followes not therefore that Othoniel should have beene the meanest of the kindred. Wherefore we may better thinke that he was the Nephew of Caleb (as fome learned men ex- 20 pound it) and as the very wordes of Scripture seeme to inforce. For Caleb was the fonne of Jephunneth, and Othoniel the fonne of Cenas, Calebs yonger brother; that is, he was not brother to Caleb, but his yonger brothers sonne; to whom it was not only lawfull, but commendable to marrie with his Cofen German Calebs daughter.

How long it was from the death of Iofuah to the government of Othoniel, it cannot be found : but it seemes to have beene no short time. For many Warres were made in that space against the people of the Land. Laifb was then taken (as is thought) by the Danites; and the best writers are of opinion that between the times of Ioluah and Othoniel that civill warre brake out betweene the Beniamites and the rest of Israel, for the forcing to death of the Leuites wife. For it is written that in 30 those daies there was no King in Ifrael, but every man did that which was good in Ind.17. & 18. his owne cies. And as Inda led the people against the Canaanites during the Interregnum, fo was hee commanded to doe against Beniamin, cuen by the Lord God, whose direction they craued, as wanting a Judge to appoint what should be done, which sheweth it to have beene when Io (uah was dead, and before the government of Othoniel, especially considering, that all other times wherein they wanted Gouernours, were spent vnder such oppression of strangers, as would have given them no leane to have attended such a civill Warre, if their power had beene as great, as it was in the menaging of this action, wherein they so weakned the body of their eftate, by effusion of bloud, that in many ages they could not bring into the field such 40 numbers as formerly they had mustered against their bordering enemies.

Whether the times of the Kings which lived together with Otheniel, and after him with the reft of the ludges and Kings of Ifred and Meda, be precifely fet downe, I cannot anow, for the Chromologers, both of the former and latter times, differ in many particulars, to examine all which would require the whole time of along lifer and therefore I delire to be excurfed if in the fe comparison I erre with others of beter iudgement. For whether Enfehius and all that follow him, or his opposites (who make them folues fo conversant with the fe ancient Kings, and with the very yeare when they beganne to rule) have hit the marke of time of all other the furthed off and most defaced, I cannot but greatly doubt. Fter the death of Othoniel when Ifrael fell back to their former Idolatrie, God incouraged Moab to inuade and suppresse them: to performe which he ioyned the forces of Ammon, and Amalee vnto his owne, and fo (as all kinde of miserie readily findeth out those whom God hath abandoned, or for a time with-drawne his helpe from, thereby to make them feele the difference betweene his grace and his displeasure) these Heathen neighbouring Nations, had an easie conquest ouer Israel: whom God himselfe exposed to those perills: within which they were so speedily folded vp. In this miferable estate they continued full eighteen yeares under Eglon King of the Moabites, and his confederates. Yet as the mercies of God are infinite, he turned not his cares from their crying repentance : but raifed vp Ehud the fonne of Gera to deliuer them: by which weake man though maimed in his right hand, yet confident in the justnesse of his quarrell, and fearing that the Israelites were too few in numbers to contend with the Head of those valiant Nations, he resoluted to attempt vpon the per- 20 fon of Eglon, whom if he could but extinguish, he affured himselfe of the following victorie: especially giuing his Nation no time to reestablish their gouernment, or to choose a King to command, and direct them in the Warres. According to which resolution. Ehud went on as an Embassador to Eglon, loaden with presents from the Israelites, as to appeale him, and obtaining private accesse vpon the pretence of fome fecret to be reuealed: he pierst his bodie with a Poniard, made of purpose with a double edge: and shutting the dores of his closet upon him, escaped

It may feeme that being confident of his good fuccesse, hee had prepared the ftrength of Ifrael in readinesse. For sodainly after his returne, he did repasse Jordan, and invading the Territoric of Moab, overthrew their Armie confishing of 10000. 20 able and ftrong men: whereof not any one escaped. After which victorie, and that Samear his Successor had miraculously flaine 600. Philistimes with an Oxe goade: the Land and People of Ifrael lived in peace vnto the end of fourescore yeares from the death of Othoniel, which terme expired in the Worlds yeare 2691.

In the daies of Ehud Naomi with Elimelech her husband, and with her two fonnes, trauailed into Moah, and so the storie of Ruth is to be referred to this time. About the beginning of the fourfcore yeares which are given to Ehud, it was that Oreus King of the Molossians : otherwise Pluto, stale Proferpina, as shee walked to gather flowers in the fields of Hipponium in Sicilia: or (according to Paulanias) by the River Cephilus, which elsewhere he calleth Chemer, if he mean not two distinct Rivers. This stealth 40 being made knowne to Pyrithous with whom Hercules and Thefeus ioyned themfelues, they agreed together to recouer her : but Plute or Oreus (whom others call Aidonius) had (as they fay) a very huge Dogge, which fastened on Pyrithous, and tare him in pecces, and had also wearied Theleus, but that Hercules speedily rescued him : and by firength tooke and maftered the Dogge Cerberus : whereof grew the fable of Hercules his delivering of Thefeus out of Hell. But Zezes, as I take it, hath written this storie somewhat more according to the truth. For Theseus and Pyrithous faith he, attempted to feale Proferpina Daughter to Aidonius, King of the Molossians who had Ceres to Wife, the mother of Proferpina. Proferpina being a generall name alfo for all faire women. This purpose of theirs being knowne to Aidonius, Theseus 50 and Pyrithous were both taken, and because Pyrithous was the principall in this conspiracie, and Theseus drawne on by a kinde of affection or inforcement, the one was giuen for food to Aidonius his great Dogge Cerberus, the other held prisoner til Hercules by the infligation of Euriftheus deliucred him by ftrong hand. The rape of Orithya the Daughter of Erictheus, King of Athens, taken away by Borens of Thrace, is referred to the time of Ehud. The Poets ascribe this rape to the North winde, because Thrace is situate North from Athens. In his time also Tereus 10 rauished Philomela, of which the fable was deutsed of her conversion into a Nightingale. For Tereus having married her fifter Progne, conducting Philomela from Aihens to fee her fifter, forft her in the paffage, and withall cut out her tongue that shee might not complaine; perswading Progne his Wife that Philomela died in the midway: all which her brother in law's mercilesse behauiour towards her, Philomela expressed by her needle vpon cloth, and sent it Progne. In reuenge whereof Progne caused her only Sonne mys to be cut in peeces, and set before Tereus her husband, so drest as it appeared to be some other ordinarie soode: of which when he had eaten his fill: shee caused his head, handes, and feete, to be presented vnto him: and then fled away with fuch speede towards Athens where her Father Pandien yet lived, as 20 the Poets fained, that shee was turned into a Swallow. The place where it was performed Strabe finds to be Daulis in Phocis: and the Tombe of Tereus, Paufanias Lo hath built neare the Rocks Mergi, in the Territorie of Athens. By which as alfo by Panin Ass. the name Daulis, where these thinges are supposed to have beene done (whence also Philomela is called Dauliss ales) it appeares that it is true, which Thuydides notes by Thusla; way of digression in his Peloponnesian Warre, That this Tereus was not King in that which is now called Thracia, or in Odryla, (as the Poets call him Odrylius) but that Phocis a Countrie in Greece not farre from Attica, a Citie whereof is called Daulia, was in Pandions time inhabited by Thracians : of which this Tereus was King : whence Pandion to have amittle with his neighbours, made him his fonne in law casit is good

30 to beleeve, faith Thurydides, that Pandien King of Athens; made that alliance with a neighbour King from whom he might have fuccour, rather then with any Tereus, that should have held the Kingdome of Odrysa; which was greatly distant from thence. The occasion that the Poets chose a Swallow for Progne to be turned into. may sceme to haue beene partly because, as Pausanias saies: Daulide nec midificant, nec habitant in tota circum regione Hirundines; As if a Swallow remembring the wrong that was there done to her, and to her fifter, did for eyer hate that place.

Neare this time Melampus (who is faid to haue vinderstood the voices of Birds and Beafts) flourished, being also esteemed for an excellent Phisician. Hec restored to their former health the Daughters of Pratus King of the Argines, who (as the 40 Poets please) were made mad by Iuno: and thinking themselues to be Kine, fled into Poulls. the woods, fearing to be constrained to the Plough: for in those Countries, where Homer Odd it the ground was light, they did vie often to plough with Kine.

Of the same date was Tantalius, King of Lydia : whom Eusebius makes King of Phrygia: and also of that part of which the people were anciently Maones. He was faid to be the fonne of Impiter, as forme will haue it; because high to chils. he had that Planet in his afcendent, betokening wifedome and riches. It is faid that when he made a feast to the God; having nothing more pretions; he caused his owne Sonne to be flaine and dreft for the banquet : of whom Ceres cate part of one of the

And where it was denised, that he had alwaies Water and Fruit offered to his lips, and yet fuffered the torment of hunger and thirft, it was meant thereby, that though he abounded (by reason of his riches) in all delicacie of the world, yet his minde being otherwise and to higher desires transported, he enjoyed no pleasure at all by the rest. Of whom ouid:

Here T ANTALVS in water feekes for water, and doth miffe, The fleeting fruit he catcheth at: His long tongue brought him this. 10

This punishment, they say, was inflicted upon him, for that he discourred the fecrets of the Gods: that is, because he taught wisedome and vertue to mortall men: which storie Cornelius Gallus hath elegantly exprest in Verse. Others expound this fable otherwise and say, That Tantalus, though he excelled in riches, yet being thirflie of more aboundance, was neuer fatisfied. Of whom Horace against conetoufneffe.

Others conceine where it is fained of Tantalus, that he gaue the Nettar and Ambrofia of the Gods to vaine and vnworthie men, that hee was therefore by them in 30 that fort punished. Of which Natalis out of Pindarus.

Whereby it was meant that the secrets of Divinitie, ought not to be imparted to the vnpure Vulgar. For as the cleanest meates in a foule stomack, are therein corrupted, so the most high and reserved mysteries are often peruerted by an vncleane and defiled minde.

Mark.4.34.

To you it is given (faith Christ in MARKE) to know the mysterie of the Kingdome of God, but vnto them that are without all thinges be done in parables. So is it faid of him, that he expounded all thinges to his Disciples a-part. And therefore doth Gregorie Na-Greein Orat, de Zianzene inferre vpon a place of S. Pavl. Quod si Pavlo licuisset effariea, quorum restaratione dis. ipsi cognitionem casum tertium & vsque ad illud progressio suppeditauit, fortasse de Deo nobis aliquid amplius conflaret; If PAVL might have ottered the thinges, the knowledge 50 whereof the third heavens, and his going thither did bring onto him, peraduenture wee might know fomewhat more of God.

Pythagoras, faith Reudin, thought it not the part of a wife man, Afino lyram exponere, aut mysteria, qua ita reciperet, vt Sus tubam, & fidem graculus, & unguenta Scarabaus : quare silentium indixit discipulis, ne vulgo divinorum arcana patefacerent, qua meditando facilius, quam loquendo apprehendantur; To fet an Affeto a harpe, or to learne mysteries : which he would handle as a Swine doth a trumpet, or a lay a viall, or Scarabies and uncleane flies four-aigne ointment. Wherefore he commanded filence to his disciples: that they should not disclose divine mysteries to the common fort; which are easier learnt by meditation than by babling. And therefore did the Agyptians communicate their mysteries among their Priests in certaine Hieroglyphick letters, to the end that their secrets might be hidden from the Vulgar; and that they might bestow the more time in the contemplation of their couered meanings.

But to proceede with the contemporaries of Aod, or Ehud, with him it is also faid that Tityus lived whom Apollo flew, because he sought to force his Mother Latona. Euphorion hath it thus, that Tityus was the Sonne of Elara, the Daughter of Orchomenus; which Elarabeing beloued of Jupiter, to avoid Juno's revenge, he hid Elara in the earth, where shee was delivered of Tityus: whose Mother dying, and himselfe therein nourished, he was therefore called the sonne of the earth. Pausanias speaking of the graue of this Gyant, affirmes that his bodie occupied the third part of a furlong. But Tibullus hath a louder lie of his flature out of Homer.

> Porrectufa, nouem TITYVS per ingera terra Asiduas atro viscere pascit aues;

Hom, Cd. 11.

Nine furlongs stretcht lies Tirves, who for his wicked deedes The hungrie birds with his renewing liner daily feedes.

This Strabo doth thus expound; that Apollo killing this cruell and wicked Tyrant of Panopea, a Citie in Phocis, it was fained by the Poets to the terrour of others, that he was still eaten in Hell by birds, and yet still lined, and had his sless

Admetus King of Theffalie lived also in this Age, whom it is faid that Apollo first 20 ferued as a Heard-man, and afterward for his excellent wit was by him advanced; but hauing flaine Hyacinthus he crost the Hellespont, and fled into Phrygia: where together with Neptune, hee was entertained by Laomedon, and got his bread by working in bricke, for building of the walls of Troy, not by making the brickes leape into their places by playing on his Harpe : according to him in Onid which

Thus the Poets: but others, that hee laboured with his handes, as hired in this worke. And that He alfo laboured at the building of the Labyrinth in Greece, all the Paulin dis, Megariens witnesse, faith Paulanias;

In these daies also of Ebud, or (as some finde it) in the daies of Deborah, lived Perfeus the sonne of Impier and Danae, by whose Souldiers (as they failed out of Peloponnesus to secke their adventure on Affrica side) Medusa the Daughter and Succeffor of Phoreus, being weakely accompanied as flee hunted, neare the Lake

50 Triton, was surprised and slaine: whose beautie when Perfess beheld, he caused her Triton a Lake of head to be imbalmed, and carried into Greece: the beautie whereof was fuch and Affrica which formuch admired, and the beholders fo aftonished which beheld it, as thereof Pale collection grew the fiction, that all that looked on Medusa's head, were turned into Didymin peres

Cecrops the second of that name and 7. King of Athens, and Acrisius the 12. or Enfib, in chron. after Eufebius, the 14. King of the Argines, began also their raignes, as it is faid. in the time of this ludge : of which the first ruled 40 yeares, and the second 21 yeares. Alfo Bellerophon lived in this age, being the sonne of Glancus, the sonne of Silyphus: who inticed by Antea or Sthenobia the wife of Pratus of the Argues, to accompanie her, but refujing it, shee accused him to her husband that he offered to force her: wherupon Pretus fent Bellerophon into Lycia, about fome affaires of weight, between him and his Sonne in law Jobates : giving fecret order to Jobates to dispatch him : but Iobates thinking it dishonorable to lay violent handes on him: imployed him against Chimara, a Monster, vomiting or breathing fire. Now the Gods (as the report is) 10 pittying his innocencie, fent him the winged Horse Pegasus, sprung vp of the bloud of Medula, formerly flaine by the Souldiers of Perleus in Africa, to transport him. a horse that none other could master or bridle but Minerua : vpon which beast Bellerothon ouer-came Chimera: and performed the other feruices given him in charge: which done, as he returned toward Lycia, the Lycians lay in ambush to have slaine him: but being victorious also ouer all those, he arrived to Ishates in safetie: whom Jobates for his eminent vertues honoured, first with one of his Daughters : and afterward with his Kingdome: after which he grew so insolent, as he attempted to flie vp to heaven upon his Pegafus: whose pride Iupiter disdaining, caused one of his stinging flies fo to vexe Pegafus, as he cast off Bellerophon from his back, into the Valley of 20 Cilicia, where he died blinde: of which burthen Pegafus being discharged (as the fable goeth) flew back to heaven and being fed in Jupiters owne stable, Aurora beg'd him of Jupiter to ride on before the Sunne. This tale is diverfly expounded, as first by some. That it pleaseth God to relieue men in their innocent and vndeserued adperfitie, and to call downe those which are too high minded : according to that which is faid of Bellerophon: that when he was exposed to extreame hazard, or rather certaine death, he found both deliuerance and honor: but waxing ouer-prowd and prefumptuous in his glorious fortunes, he was againe throwne downe into the extremitie of forrow, and euer-during miferie. Secondly by others, That under the name of Chimera, was meant a cruell Pyrate of the Lycians, whose ship had in her 30 Blatar, in claric Prowe a Lyon, a Goate in the mid-ship, and a Dragon in the scarne, of which three beafts this Monster Chimera was faid to be compounded, whom Bellerophon pursued with a kinde of Galley of fuch swiftnesse that it was called the slying Horse: to whom the inuention of failes (the wings of a ship) are also attributed. Many other expositions are made of this tale by other Authors: but it is not vnlikely, that Chimera was the name of a ship, for so Virgil calleth one of the greatest ships of

Ion also from whom the Athenians (being ignorant of the antiquitie of their pa-Homer.inhymas rent Iauan) deriue their name of lones, is faid to have beene about Ehuds time: Homer calls them Isones, which hath a neare resemblance to the word Isuan. Perhaps 40 Lib. 18.6.13 de ci.Di. Li 18.6.15 it might be so that Ion himselfe tooke name from Ianan . it being a custome observable in the Histories of all times, to reviue the ancient name of a fore-father, in some the principall of his iffue.

The invalion of India by Liber Pater, is by fome reported as done in this age : but S. Augustine makes him farre more ancient: placing him between the comming out of Egypt, and the death of Iolua.

Fter I frael had lived in peace and plentie to the end of these 80. yeares they againe began to forget the giver of all goodness, and many of those being worne out, which were witnesses of the former miserie, and of Gods deliuerance by Ehnd, and after him by Samgar, the rest began to returne to their former neglect of Gods commandements. For as Plentie and Peace are the parents of idle fecuritie; fo is fecuritie as fruitfull in be-10 getting and bringing forth both danger and fubuerfion : of which all effates in the world haue tafted by interchange of times. Therefore when their finnes were againe ripe for punishment, Jabin King of Hazor, after the death of Ebud, invaded the Territorie of Ifrael, and having in his feruice 900, yron Chariots, besides the rest of his forces, he held them in subjection twentie yeares, till it pleased God to raise vp Deborah, the Prophetesse, who incouraged Baracto leuie a force out of Nephtalin, and Zabulon, to incounter the Canaanites. That the men of Nepthalim were more forward than the rest in this action, it may seem to have proceeded partly from the authoritie that Barae had among them, being of the same Tribe; and partly from their feeling of the common grieuance, which in them was more fenfible, than in o-20 thers, because Hazor and Harofeth the chiefe holds of labin, were in Nepthalim. So in the daies of Jeptha the Gileadites tooke the greatest care, because the Ammonites with whom the Warre was, preffed most vpon them, as being their borderers. Now as it pleased God by the left hand of Ebudto deliuer Ifrael from the Moabite: and by the counsaile and courage of a woman, to free them from the yoke of Canaan, and to kill the valiant Sifera by Iael the Kenites wife : fo was it his will at other times , to worke the like great thinges by the weakest meanes. For the mightie Assyrian Nabuchodonofor, who was a King of Kings, and refittleffe, he ouerthrew by his owne imaginations, the caufers of his brutilh melancholy: and changed his marchleffe pride into the base humilitie of a Brast. And to approve that he is the Lord of all

30 power, he sometime punisheth by inuisible strength, as when he slaughtered the Armie of Senacherib by his Angell : or as he did the Egyptians in Moles time: fomtime by dead bodies, as when he drowned Pharao by the waves of the Sea : and the Canaanites by haile-stones in the time of Iosua: sometimes by the ministerie of men, as when he ouerthrew the foure Kings of the East, Chedorlaomer, and his companions, by the houshold feruants of Abraham. He caused the Moabites and Ammonites to fet vpon their owne confederate the Armie of the Edomites; and having flaine them to kill one an other in the fight of Ichofaphat: and of the like to these a volume commandate of examples may be gathered. And to this effect did Deborah the Propheteffe fpeake vnto Barae in these wordes: But this journey that thou takest, shall not be for thine honour, Jud 4.9.

40 for the Lord shall fell Siser a into the handes of a Woman. In which victoric all the ftrength of the Canaanite Iabin fell to the ground, even to the last man: in the end of which Warre it feemeth that Iabin himfelfe also perished, as appeareth by the last Verse of the fourth of Indees.

After all which Deborah giueth thankes to God, and after the acknowledgment of all his powerfulneffe, and great mercies, shee sheweth the weake estate whereinto Ifrael was brought for their Idolatrie by the Canaanites, and other bordering Nations in these wordes: Was there a shield or speare seene among fortic thousand of Israel? Ind. 5. 118. the also sheweth how the Israelites were seuered and amased, some of them confined ouer Iordan, and durst not joyne themselves to the rest; as those of Reuben in Gilead: Varto that the Alberites kept the Sea-coast, and forsooke their habitations towards the Land, and the children of Dan who neighboured the Sea, crept into their ships for safetie, showing thereby that all were dispersed, and all in effect lost. Shee then curfeth the inhabitants of Meroz, who dwelling neare the place of the battaile (belike fearing the fuccesse) came not out to affist Ifrael, and then blesseth Lack the wife of Heber the Kemte, who nailed Siferain her Tent: shewing the ancient affe-Gion of that race to the Ifraelites. For though the Familie of Heber were inforced in that miserable time of subjection, to hold correspondencie with Jahin the Canamite, yet when occasion offered them meanes, they witnessed their loue and faith to their ancient friends. Laftly, shee derideth the Mother of Silera who promifed her fonne the victorie in her owne hopes; and fancied to her felfe, and described the fpoiles both of Garments and Maidens by him gotten. For conclusion, shee dire-

From the beginning of Isbins oppression to the end of that peace, which Deborath and Barae purchased vnto Israel, there passed 40. yeares. In which time the King- 10 dome of dreas which had continued 5.44. yeares was translated to Aspense: The translation of this Kingdome Fines out of Paulanias write that this effect: After Danase, Lyneaus fucceeded in Argos, after whom the childs at of Abss the fonne of Lyncens divide the Kingdome : of which Aerifius being eldeft held Argos it felfe: Pretus his brother posset Ephys or Corinth, and Taynthos, and other Cities with all the Territorie towards the Sea, there being many monuments in Tirynthos, which wit-

Now Acrifius was foretold by an Oracle, that hee should be slaine by the sonne of his Daughter Danae: whereupon he caused her to be inclosed in a Tower, to the end that no man might accompanie her. But the Ladie being exceeding faire, it is 29 fained that no piter turned himfelfe into a golden shower which falling into her lap, begat her with child : the meaning whereof was, that fome Kings fonne, or other Worthie man, corrupted her keepers with gold: and enloyed her, of whom Perfess was borne: who when he grew to mans effate, either by chance (faith Ctefus) or in thewing his grand-father the invention of the difeus, or leaden ball, flew him vnwils lingly. After this Perfeus, to avoide the infamic of Patricide in Argos, changed Kingdomes with his Vncle Prietus: and built Mycane. This imprisonment of Danae, Sophocles reporteth otherwise: and that shee was inclosed in a brasen vault, under the Kings Hall with her Nurse and Keepers. Then the Lord by his Angell stirred vp Gideon the sonne of Ioash, afterward called Ierubbaal: whose scare and vnwillingnesse, and how it pleased God to hearten him in his enterprize, it is both largely and precifely fet down in the holy Scriptures: as also how it pleased God by a few select persons, namely 300. out of 32000.men, to make them know that he only was the Lord of Hosts; Each of these 300. by Gideens appointment carried a trumpet, and light in a pitcher, instruments of more terrour than force, with which he gaue the great Armie of their enemies an alarum: who hearing so loude a noise, and seeing (at the crack of so many pitchers broken) fo many lights about them, effected the Armie of Ifrael to be infinite, and strucken with a fodaine feare, they all fled without a ftroke ftricken; and were flaughtered in 10 great numbers : two of their Princes being made prisoners and staine. In his returne the Febramites began to quarrell with Gideon because hee made warre without their affiltance, being then greedie of glorie, the victorie being gotten : who (if Gideon had failed and fallen in the enterprise) would no doubt have held themselves happie by being neglected. But Gideon appealing them with a mild answere followed after the enemie, in which purfuit being tired with trauaile, and wearie euen with the flaughtering of his enemies, he defired reliefe from the inhabitants of Succoth, to the end that (his men being refreshed) he might ouer-take the other two Kings of the Midianites: which had faued themselues by flight. For they were soure Princes of the Nations which had invaded and wasted Ifrael: to wit, Oreb and Seeb, which 20 were taken already, and Zebah and Salmunna which fled.

Gideon being denied by them of Succoth fought the like reliefe from the inhabitants of Penuel, who in like fort refused to succour him. To both of these places he threatned therefore the reuenge, which in his returne from the profequation of the other two Princes he performed: to wit, that hee would teare the flelh of those of Succoth with Thornes and Briars, and destroy the Inhabitants and Citie of Penuel: Now why the people of these two Cities should refuse reliefe to their bretheren the Ilraelites, especially after so great a victorie: I may presume to make coniecture; it feemes likely, first that those Cities set ouer Iordan, and in the way of all inualions to be made by the Moabites, and Ammonites, and Midianites, into Ifrael, had either 30 made their owne peace with those Nations, and were not spoiled by them : or else they knowing that Zeba and Salmunna were escaped with a great part of their armie, might feare their reuenge in the future. Secondly, it may be laid to the condition and dispositions of these men : as it is not rare to finde of the like humour in all ages. For there are multitudes of men, especially of those which follow the warre, that both enuic and maligne others, if they performe any praife worthy actions, for the honour and fafetie of their owne Countrie, though themselves may be affured to be are a part of the smart of contrarie successe. And such malitious hearts can rather be contented that their Prince and Countrie should suffer hazzard, and want, than that fuch men as they millike should be the Authors or actors of any glorie or good 40

Now Gideon, how or wherefocuer it were that hee refreshed himselfe and his wearic and hungric Souldiers, yet he followed the opportunitie, and purfued his former victoric to the vttermost; and finding Zebah and Salmanna in Karkor (suspense) eting no farther attempt vpon them) he againe surprised them, & slaughtered those ting no lattice attempt, you that he specified in the former attempt. 12000s, and with all he tooke Zebab and Salmans, prisoners; whom because themselves had exequited Gisleons bretheren before at Tabor, he caused them both to be staine; or (as it is written) at their owne request flow them with his owne hands: his Son whom he first commanded to doe it, refusing it, and in his returne from the consummation 50 of this meruailous victorie, he tooke reuenge of the Elders of Succoth, and of the Citizens of Penuel: forgiving no offence committed against him; either by strangers or by his bretheren the Ifraelites. But fuch mercy as he shewed to others, his own chilalren found foon after his death, according to that which hath been faid before. The debts of crueltie and mercie are neuer left vnfatisfied: for as he flew the 70. Elders of Succoth with great and vnufuall torments, fo were his owne 70. fonnesal, but one, murthered by his owne bastard Abimilee. The like Analogie is observed by the Rabmurrhered by disowire Datairu Annines. I the like Analogie is concluded by the hav-bines, in the greatest of the plagues which God brought vpon the AEgyptians, who having caused the male children of the Hebrewes to bee flaine, others of them to be cast into the riuer and drowned: God rewarded them euen with the like measure, destroying their owne first borne by his Angell, and drowning Pharach and his armie in the redde fea. And hereof a world of examples might bee given, both out of the Scriptures and other Histories.

In the end so much did the people reuerence Gideon in the present for this victoric, and their owne deliuerance, as they offered him the Soueraigntie ouer them, Ind 3.23. and to establish him in the Gouernment; which heerefused, answering i mill not reigne ouer you, neither shall my childe reigne ouer you, but the Lord shall &c. Now if any man demaund how it was possible for Gideon with 300. men to defroy 120000. of their enemies and afterward 15000. which remained, wee and purt the may remember that although Gideon with 300, gaue the first alarme, and put the Midianites in rout and disorder; yet all the rest of the armic came into the slaughter, and pursuite, for it is written; That the men of Israel being gathered together out 104.57.1.12.

This is that Arreus who holding his brother in icalousic as an attempter both of his wife and crowne, flew the children of Thyestes, and causing their slesh to be drest did therewith seast their sa-

40 ther. But this crueltie was not unreuenged. For both Atreus and his fonne Agamemnon were flaine by a base sonne of Thesses, yea the grandchildren; and all the linage of Atreus died by the same sword.

In Gideons time also those things were supposed to have beene done which are written of Dedalus and Icarus. Dedalus they say, having slaine his Nephew Attalus, fled to Minos King of Crete for fuccour, where for his excellent workermanshippe he was greatly effected, having made for Minos a Labyrinth like vinto that of AE-gypt. Afterward he was faid to have framed an artificiall Cowe for Psylphes. Queene, that the, being in love with a faire Bull, might by putting her felfe into the Cow fatisfie her luft, a thing no leffe vinatural than incredible, had not that share-

30 leffe Emperour Domitian exhibited the like beaftly spectacle openly before the people of Rome in his Amphitheater; of purpose as may seeme to verifie the olde fable. For sait appeares by those verses of Martial, wherein the flattering Poet magnifieth the abhominabe shew as a goodly Pageant in those vitious times,

Tun Et am

Iunctam Paliphaen Dicteo credite Tauro Vidimus, accepit fabula prisca fidem. Nec se miratur Cafar longena vetustas Quicquid fama canit, donat arena tibi.

But concerning that which is reported of Paliphae, Servius makes a leffe vnhonest confirmation of it, thinking that Dedalus was of her counfell, and her Pandar for the enticing of a Secretarie of Minos called Taurus, which fignifieth a Bull, who begat her with child, and that the being delivered of two fonnes, the one refembling Taurus, the other her husband Minos, it was fained that the was deliuered of the Mon- 10 fler Minotaur, haife a Man and halfe a Bull. But this practife being discouered, and Dedalus appointed, to be flaine, he fled out of Crete to Cocalus King of Sicil: in which paifage he made such expedition, as it was fained that he falhioned wings for himfelfe and his foane to transport them. For whereas Minos pursued him with boats which had oares onely, Dadalus framed failes both for his owne boate, and for his fonnes, by which he outwent those that had him in chase. Vpon which new inuention Icarus bearing himfelfe ouerbold was ouerborne and drowned.

It is also written of Dedalus that he made Images that could move themselves, and goe, because he carued them with legs, armes and hands, whereas those that preceded him could onely present the bodie and head of those men whom they 20 cared to counterfait, and yet the workmanshippe was esteemed very rare. But Plutarke who had seene some of those that were called the Images of Dadalus found them exceeding rude.

Herind Plat. Pauf,lib.9.

With Gideon also florished Linus the Theban, the sonn of Apollo, & Terpsichore who instructed Thamaris, Orpheus, and Hercules. Hee wrate of the Creation, of the Sunne and Moones course, and of the generation of living Creatures, but in the end he was flaine by Hercules his scholler with his owne harpe.

Againe, in this age those things spoken of Sphins and Oedipus are thought to haue been performed. This Sphins being a great robber by sea and land, was by the Corinthian Armie ledde by Oedipus ouercome. But that which was written of her 30 propounding of riddles to those whom shee mastered, was meant by the rockie and vnaccessible mountaine neere Thebes which she defended, and by Oedipus dissoluting her probleme, his victorie ouer her. She was painted with wings, because exceeding fwift, and with the bodie of a Lyon for her crueltie. But that which Palaphatus reports of Sphinx were more probable did not the time disproue it, for he cals her an Amazonite and the wife of Cadmus: who when by her help he had cast Draco out of Thebes (neglesting her) he married the fifter of Draco, which Sphinx taking in despightfull part, with her owne troops she held the mountaine by Thebes, from whence the continued a tharpe warre vpon the Thebans till by Qedipus ouerthrown. About this time did Mines thrust his brother out of Crete, and held sharpe warre 40 with the Megarians, and Athenians, because his some Androgeus was slaine by them. He possest himselfe of Megara by the treason of Seylla, daughter of Wifus the King. He was long Master of the sea, and brought the Athenians to the tribute of deliuering him every yeere feuen of their sonnes; which tribute Theseus released as shall bee shewed when I come to the time of the next Judge Thala. In the end hee was flaine at Camerinus or Camicus in Sicilia by Cocalus the King, while he purfued Dadalus: and was esteemed by some to be the first law-giver to those Ilands.

To this time are referred many deeds of Hercules, as the killing of Anteus the gyant, who was faid to have 60, and odde cubites of length, which though Plutarke doth confirme, reporting that there was fuch a bodie found by Sertorius the Roman 50 in Lybia, where Hercules flew Antaus: yet for my felfe I thinke it but a lowd lie. That Anteus was of great strength, and a cunning wrestler, Eusebius affirmeth: and because he cast so many men to the ground, hee was fained to bee the sonne of the Earth. Plinie faith that he inhabited neere the gardens Hesperides in Mauritania. S.

Augustine affirmes that this Hercules was not of Greece, but of Lybia : and the Hydra Auguscialis also which he ouercame, Plato expoundeth to be a subtle Sophister.

Q. VI. Of the expedition of the Argonauts.

Bout the eleuenth yeere of Gideon, was that famous expedition of the Argonauts: of which many fabulous discourses have been written,

Pelias the sonne of Neptune, brother by the mothers side to A fon who was Iasons father, reigning in Ioleus a towne of Thessalie, was warned by the Oracle of Apollo to take heede of him that ware but one shoe. This Pelias afterward facrificing to Neptune, inuited Infon to him, who comming hastily, lost one thoe in paffing ouer a brooke : whereupon Pelias demanded of him what course he would take (supposing he were able) against one of whom an Oracle should aduise him to take heede : to which question when Isson had briefly answered, that he would fend him to Colchos, to fetch the golden fleece, Pelias immediatly commannded him to vndertake that feruice. Therefore Iason prepared for the voyage, having a shippe built by Argus, the sonne of Phryeus, by the Counsell of Pallas: wherein hee procured all the brauest men of Greece to faile with him : as Typhis the Master of the thippe, Orpheus the famous Poet, Caffor and Pollux the fonnes of Trndarus, Telamon and Peleus, fonnes of Acus, and fathers of Aiax and Achilles, Hercules, Theleus, Zetes and Calais the two winged fonnes of Boreas, Amphiaraus the great Southfaver. Meleager of Calidon that flew the great wilde boare : Afealaphus and Ialmenus or Almenus the sonnes of Mars, who were afterwards at the last warre of Troy, Laertes the father of Plyffes, Atalanta a warlike virgine, Idas and Lynceus the fonnes of Aphareus, who afterwards in fight with Caffor and Pollux flew Caffor, and wounded Pollux, but were flaine themselves : Lynceus by Pollux, Idas by Jupiter with

These and many other went with Infon in the ship Argo: in whose prowe was a table of the beech of Dodona, which could speake. They arrived first at Lemnos: the women of which Iland, having flaine all the males, purpoling to lead an Amazonian life, were neuertheleffe contented to take their pleasure of the Argonauts. Hence they came to the Country about Cyzicus: where dwelt a people called Doliones; ouer whom then reigned one Cyzicus; who entertained them friendly; but it fo fell out, that loofing thence by night they were driven by contrary winds back into his port, neither knowing that it was the same Hauen, nor being knowne by the Doliones, to be the same men: but rather taken for some of their bordering enean mics: by which meanes they fell to blowes, infomuch that the Argonautes flew the most part of the Doliones together with their King Cyzicus; which when by daylight they perceived, with many teares they folemnized his funerall. Then departed they againe and arrived shortly in Mylia, where they left Hercules and Polyphemus the fonne of Elates, who went to feeke Hylas the darling of Hercules, that was rani-

Poliphemus built a towne in Myfia, called Cios, wherein he reigned. Hercules returned to Argos. From Mysia the Argonautes failed into Bythima, which then was peopled by the Bebryces, the auncient inhabitants of the Country, oner whom Amreus the forme of Neptune was then King. He beeing a strong man, compelled all stran-50 gers to fight with him, at whorlebattes, in which kinde of fight hee had flaine many, and was now himselfe slaine by Pollux. The Bebryces in reuenge of his death flew all vpon Pollux, but his companions referred him, with great flaughter of the people. They failed from hence to Salmydeffus, a towne in Thrace (formwhat out of their way) wherein Phineus a Soothfayer dwelt, who was blinde and vexed with the Harpyes. The Harpyes were faid to be a kinde of birds, which had the faces of women and foule long clawes, very filthy creatures, which when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and denouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest, that they could not be endured. When therefore the Argonautes craned his aduife, and direction for their voyage : you shall doe well (quoth he) first of all to deliner me from the Harpyes, and then afterwards to aske my Counfaile. Whereupon they caused the table to be coursed, and meat set on, which was no fooner fet downe, then that prefently in came the Harpyes, and played their accustomed prancks: when Zetes and Calais the winged young men faw this, they drew their fwerds, and purfued them through the ayre; fome fay 10 that both the Harpyes and the young men died of wearinesse in the slight, and purfuit. But Apollonius faith that the Harpyes did couenant with the youthes, to doe no more harme to Phineus, and were thereupon difmiffed. For this good turne Phineus gaue them informations of the way, and aduertifed them withal of the daungerous rockes, called Symplegudes, which by force of windes running together, did thue vp the paffage : wherefore he willed them to out a pigeon before them into the paffage: and if that paffed fafe, then to adventure after her: if not, then by no meanes to hazard themselves in vaine. They did so, and perceiving that the pigeon had only lolta piece of her taile, they observed the next opening of the rockes and then rowing with all their might, paffed through fafe, onely the end of the poope was 20 bruifed.

From thence forward, (as the tale gorth) the Symplegades have flood fill, for the Gods, fay they, had decreed that after the pallage of a hipper, they thould be fixed. Thencethe Argensutes came to the Marindyni, a people inhabiting about the mouth of the river Parthenius, where Lyeus the King entertained them courteoully. Here Islaman a Sooth fayer of their company was flaine by a wild boare; also heere Typhis died; and "Mneus vidertooke to fleare the hipper. So they passed by the river Thermoelon, and mount Casasifus, and came to the river Phasin, which runnes through the land of Calebo, When they were entired the hauen, Islam went to Active the king of Colebo, and cold him the Commaundement of Pelias, and cause of 30 his comming, destring him to deliver the golden Flece, which Actes, as the Fable gooth, promised to doe, if he alone would yoake together two brazen hooft bulles, and plowing the ground with them, sow of ragions teeth, which Mineral had given to him, being part of those which Cachins did sow at Thebes. These bulles were great and stores, and the cathed out fire: Vulcan had given them to Attes.

Whilest /afon was in a great perplexitic about this taske, Medea the daughter of AEJes, fell into a most vehement loue of him, so farre foorth, that being excellent in Magique, the came privily to him, promiting her helpe, if he would affure her of his marriage. To this Iason agreed, and confirmed his promise by oath. Then gaue the to him a medicine wherewith the bad him to annoint both his bodie and his ar- 40 mour, which would preferue him from their violence: further she told him, that armed men would arise out from the ground, from the teeth which hee should fowe, and fet vpon him. To remedie which inconucnience, shee bad him throw ftonesamongst them as soone as they came vp thicke, whereupon they would fall together to blowes, in fuch wife that he might eafily flay them. Is for followed her counfaile; whereto when the cuent had answered, hee againe demaunded the Fleece. But AEcies was so farre from approxing such his delire, that hee denifed how to destroy the Argoniutes, and burne their shippe, which Medea perceiuing, went to Isfon, and brought him by night to the Fleece, which hung vppon an oake in the groue of Miss, where they fay it was kept by a Dragon, that nener flept. This Dragon was by the Magique of Medea cast into a sleepe : so taking away the golden Fleece, the went with Lifen into the thippe Argo; having with her her brother Absyrtus.

AEtes vnderstanding the practises of Medsa, provided to pursue the ship, whom

when Medeaperceized to be at hand, (he flew her brother, & cutting him in pieces the feattered his limbes in discrete places, of which A Better Inding fome, was faine to fecke out the reft, and fuffer his daughter to paffe: the parts of his fonne hee buried in a place which thereupon he called Tom; the Greeke word fignifieth Dissifton. Afterwards he fent many of his fubicedes to fecke the hippe Argo, threatning that if they brought not backe Medeathery fhould fuffer in her flead. In the meane while the Argonusts were driven about the Seas, and were come to the River Eridanus, which is Po in Italia.

Instite offended with the flaughter of Ablytus, were them with a great temporal, and carried them they knew not whither; when they came to the Illustic Ablytudes, there the flippe Argo (that there might want no incredible thing in this Fable) Ipake to them, and faid that the anger of Inpater floudd not ceafe, till they came to Aufoins, and were clenked by Cires, from the murther of Abfyrius. Now they thereupon fayling between the coaftes of Isphas, and dallis, and palling through the fen of Surdinia and along the coaft of Hetwiris, came to the Ile of AEsa, wherein Circe dwelt, who cleaned them. Thence they fayled by the coaft of the Syreus, who fang to allure them into danger: but Orpheus on the other fide fang fo wel that he flayed them. Only Butes fwamme out vnto them, whom Fenus ramified, and carried to Ishbesom in Scieller of well.

Hauing paft the Syrens, they came betweene Seylla and Churyhdis, and the ftragling rocks which feemed to call out great force of flames and finoke. But Their and the Nereides, conneyed them fafe through at the appointment of nine. So they coasted Siellie where the becues of the Sunne were, and touched at Coreyra the Iland of the Phexeer, where King Aeinoise reigned. Meane while the men of Whiles that had beene sent by AEeres in quest of the shippe Argo, hearing no newes of Its. and fearing his angerifthey fulfilled not his will, betooke themselues to new habitations: Some of them dwelt in the mountaines of Coreyra, others in the Ilands Adfyrithet, and some comming to the Pheases, there sound the thippe Argo, and demanded Metaa of Acinous, where to Alienous made answere, that if thee were not 14 slows from he'r busband. Artee the wife of Alienous hearing this, married them where from the for e they of Culchos not during to returne home, flayed with the Phaeaers for the Argonautes departed thence, and after a while came to Crete. In this Iland Minos reigned, who had a man of braffe given to him (as formed the Tablest Say) by Fulcan. This man had one veine in his bodie reaching from the necke to the heele, the end whereof was closed by with a brazen naile, his name was Talus. his cultome wasted runne thrice a day about the Iland for the defence of it. When hee saw, the shippe Argo passed by he threw shones at it, but Medaa with her Magique destroyed him. Some say that the slew him by potions, which made him madde; others that 40 promising to make him immortall, the drew out the naile that stope his veine; by which meanes all his blood ranne out, and he died; others there are that say he was stained by Pana, who wounded him with an arrow in the check. From hence the Argonautes failed to destina where the were faint to faith for fresh water. And laftly from AEgina they failed by Eubea and Locris home to Ioleos, where they arri-

Some there are that by this journey of Isson, wholf find the mysteric of the Philosophers Stone, called the golden Fleece, to which also other superfine Chymists, draw the twelve labours of Heroules. Sudday thinks that by the golden Fleece, was ment a booke of Parcennent, which is of theepeskinn, and therefore called golden, 50 because it was taught therein how other mettals might be transmuted. Others would signifie by Isson wisdome, and moderation, which ouercommeth all perils: but that which is most probable is the opinion of Dereilus, that the Storic of such a passing was true, and that Isson with the rest went indeed to robbe Celebos, to which they might arrive by boate. For not faire from Cauches there are certaine steeper.

falling torrents which wash downe many graines of gold, as in many other parts of the world, and the people there inhabiting vie to fet many fleeces of wooll in those descents of waters, in which the graines of gold remaine, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witnesseth to be true. The many rockes, straites, fands, and Currents, in the paffage betweene Greece and the bottome of Pontus, are Poetically connerted into those herie bulles, the armed men rising out of the ground, the Dragon cast asleepe, and the like. The man of brasse, the Syrens, Scylla and Charybdis, were other hazards and aduentures which they fell into in the Mediterran fea, difguised, as the rest, by Orpheus, under poeticall morrals : all which Homer afterward vfed (the man of braffe excepted) in the description of Vlyffes his transiles on the 10 fame Inland-feas.

 Of Abimelech, Tholab, and law, and of the Lapytha, and of Thefeus, Hyppolytus &c.

Fter the death of Gedeon, Abimelech his base sonne begotten on a Concubine of the Sechemites, remembring what offers had bene made to his father by the people, who defired to make him and his their 20 perpetuail Princes; and asit feemeth, supposing (notwithstanding his fathers religious modestic) that some of his brethren might take on them the Soucraignrie, practifed with the inhabitants of Seckem (of which his mother was natine) to make election of himfelfe, who being eafily moued with the glorie, to hauea King of their owne, redily condescended and the better to inable Abimelech, they borrowed 70 pieces of filuer of their Idoll Baalberith, with which treasure he hyred a company of loose and desperate vagabonds, to assist his first deteliable enterprife, to wit, the flaughter of his 70. brethren the fonnes of Gidem, begotten on his wines, of which he had many, of all which none escaped but 10th am the voungest, who hid himselfe from his present furie : all which hee executed on 30 one flone, a crueltie exceeding all that bath beene written of in any age. Such is humanchimbition, a monfter that neither feareth God (though all-powerfull, and whose feuenges are without date and for curel failing) neither hath it respect to na-ture; which laboured the preservation of euery being: but it rageth also against her, though gamished with beautie which neuer dieth, and with loue that hath no end. All other passions and affections by which the soules of men are tormented. are by their contraries oftentimes relifted or qualified. But ambition, which begetteth enery vice, and is it felfe the childe and darling of Satan, looketh only towards the ends by it felfe fet downe, forgetting nothing (how fearefull and inhumane foeuer) which may ferue it: remembring nothing, whatfoeuer inflice, pictic, right or 40 religion can offer and alleadge on the contrary. It afcribeth the lamentable effectes of like attempts, to the errour or weakenesse of the vndertakers, and rather praiseth the adventure than feareth the like successe. It was the first sinne that the world had, and beganne in Angels: for which thy were cast into hell, without hope of redemption. It was more auncient than man, and therefore no part of his naturall corruption. The punishment also preceeded his creation, yet hath the Diuell which felt the fruart thereof, taught him to forget the one as out of date, and to practife the other, as befitting enery age, and mans condition.

In the youngest of Gideons sonnes having escaped the present perill, sought by his best persyalions to alienate the Sechemites, from the affilting of this mercilesse tyrant, letting them know, that those which were vertuous, and whom reason and religion had taught the safe and happie estate of moderate subjection, had refufed to receive as vnlawfull, what others had not power to give, without direction from the King of Kings: who from the beginning (as to his owne peculiar people) had appointed them by whome and how to be gouerned. This hee taught them by the Oline, which contented it felfe with it's fatneffe, the Figge tree with fweetnesse, and the Vine with the good juyce it had: the Bramble onely, who was most base, cut downeall the rest, and accepted the Soueraigntie. He also forestold them by a Propheticall fpirit, what fliould befall them in the end, and how a fire should come out of the Bramble, and confume the Cedars of Libanon.

Now (as it is an easie matter to call those men backe whom rage without right leddcon) Gael the sonne of Ebed withdrew the Citizens of Sechem, from the scruice of Abimelech: who therefore after some affaults entred the place, and maistred it; 10 and in conclusion fired the towne, wherein their Idoll Badberith was worshipped, and put all the people of all forts to the flaughter. Laftly, in the affault of the Calle or Tower of Teber, himselfe was wounded in the head with a flone throwne ouer the wall by a woman, and finding himfelfe mortally brufed, he commaunded his owne page to pierce his bodie, thereby to attoid the dishonour of being slaine by fo feeble a hand.

While Abmelech viurped the Gouernment, the Lapithe and Centaures made warre against the Thebanes. These Nations were descended of Apollo and were the first in those parts that denised to mannage horses, to bridle and to sit them : in somuch as when they first came downe from the mountaines of Pindus, into the Spaniard first inuaded that Empire.

After the death of Abimeleeh, Thola of Isfachar gouerned Israel 23. yeeres, and after him Jair the Gileadite 22. yeeres, who seemeth to bee descended of Jair the fonne of Manaffe, who in Mofes time conquered a great part of Gilead, and called the same after his owne name, Haboth Jair. For to this Jair there remained thir Nam. 83.41. tie of those Cities, which his auncester had recouered from the Amerites. Of these sudges, because there is nothing else written, it is an argument that during all sudges. their times, Ifrael lived without disturbance and in peace,

When Iair judged Ifrael, Priamus beganne to reigne in Troy, who at fuch time as Hercules facked Ilium, was carried away captine with his fifter Helione into Greece, and being afterward redeemed for ransome, hee rebuilt and greatly strengthened, and adorned Troy; and so farre inlarged his Dominions, as hee became the supreme Lordin effect of all Asia the leffe. He married Heeuba the daughter of Cisseus King 10 Tu? of Thrace, and had in all (faith Cicero) fiftie fonnes, whereof feauenteene by Hecuba, of whom Paris was one; who attempting to recouer his aunt Hesione, tooke Helena the wife of Menelaus the cause of the warre which followed.

Thefeus the tenth King of Athers began likewise to reigne in the beginning of Lair: fome writers call him the fonne of Neptune and Athra: but Plutark in the 40 Storie of his life findes him begotten by Agens, of whom the Gracian feet betweene it and Afia the leffe tooke name. For when Minos had maistered the Athemans, fo farre as hee forft them to pay him seauen of their sonnes energy yeere for tribute, whom hee inclosed within a Labyrinth, to bee denoured by the monfter Minotaur : becanfe belike the fonnes of Taurus, which hee begat on Paliphae the Queene, had the charge of them: Among these seauen Theseus thrust himselfe, not doubting by his valour to deliuer the rest, and to free his Countrie of that slauerie occasioned for the death of Androgeus, Minos his fonne.

And having possess himselfe of Ariadnes affection, who was Minos daughter hee received from her a bottome of thred, by which hee conducted himfelfe 50 through all the crooked and inextricable turnings of the Labyrinth, made in all like that of the Citic of Crocodiles in Egypt; by meane whereof having flaine Minataur, hee found a readie way to returne. But whereas his father Egene had ginen order, that if hee came backe with victorie and in fafetie, hee should vse a white faile in figne thereof, and not that mournfull blacke faile, vnder which they left the port of Athens. This instruction being either forgotten or neglefted A gens descrying the shippe of Theleus with a blacke faile catt himselfe ouer the rockes into the fea, afterward called of his name Ageum

One of the first famous actes of Theseus, was the killing of Seyron, who kept a pasfage betweene Megara and the Peloponnejian Isthmos, and threw all whom hee mastered into the sea, from the high rockes. Afterward hee did the like to Cereyon, by wreftling, who yfed by that Arte to kill others. Hee also ridde the Country of Procrulles, who yied to bend downe the strong limbes of two trees, and fastned by cordes fuch as hee tooke, part of them to one and part to the other bough, and by their springing backe tare them asunder. So did hee roote out Periphetes and other 10 mischieuous theeues and murtherers. Hee ouerthrew the armie of the Amazons, who after many victories and vaftations, entred the Territorie of Athens, Thefeus hauing taken their Queene Hyppolita prifoner, begat on her Hippolytus: with whom afterward his mother in law Phadra, falling in love, and hee refuling to abuse his fathers bed, Phadra perswaded Theseus that his sonne offered to force her: after which it is fained that Thefeus befought Neptune to reuenge this wrong of his fonnes, by fome violent death. Reptune taking a time of advantage fent out his Sea-Calues, as Hippolytus passed by the sea shore, and so affrighted his horses, as cafting the Coach ouer, hee was (by being intangled therein) torne in pieces. Which miscrable and undescrued destinie, when Phadra had heard of, shee strangled 20 herselfe. After which it is fained, that Diana entreated Asculapius to set Hippolytus his pieces togither, and to restore him to life : which done, because hee was chafte, thee ledde him with her into Italie, to accompanie her in her hunting, and field fports.

It is probable that Hyppolytus, when his father fought his life, thinking to escape by Sca, was affronted thereat, and received many woundes in forcing his paffage and escape; which woundes Asculapius, to wit, some skilfull Phisician, or Chirurgion healed againe, after which hee past into Italy, where hee lived with Diana, that is the life of a hunter, in which hee most delighted. But of these auncient prophane Stories, Plutarch faith well, that as Cosmographers in 30 their descriptions of the world, where they finde many vast places whereof they know nothing, fill the fame with strange beastes, birdes, and fishes, and with Mathematicall lines, fo doe the Gracian Historians and Poets, imbroder and intermixe the tales of auncient times, with a world of fictions and fabulous difcourfes. True it is, that Thefeus did many great things in imitation of Hercules, whom hee made his patterne, and was the first that gathered the Athenians, from being difperft in thinne and ragged villages : in recompence whereof, and for deuifing them lawes to liue vnder, and in order, hee was by the beggerly, mutable, and vngratefull multitude, in the end banished. Some say per Ostracismum, by the Lawe of Lottes, or names written on shelles, which was a deuice of his 40

Hee stole Helen (as they say) when she was 50. yeeres olde, from Aphidna, which Citie Caftor and Pollux ouerturned, when they followed after Theleus to recouer their fifter. Erafiftratus and Paufanias write that Thefeus begat her with child at Argos, where shee crested a Temple to Lucina: but her age makes that tale valikely to bee true, and so doth Ouid, Non tamen ex facto fructum tulit ille petitum ere. The rape Eusebius findes in the first of Jair, who gouerned Ifrael 22. yeeres, to whome succeeded Jephta or Jepte fixe yeeres, to whom Ibzan who ruled seauen yeeres, and then Habdon eight yeere : in whose time was the fall of Troy. So as, if Theseus had a childe by her in the first of Iair, (at which time wee must count her no lesse 50 than fifteene yeere olde, for the women did not commonly beginne fo young as they doe now) shee was then at least two and fiftie yeere olde at the destruction of Troy: and when shee was stollen by Paris eight and thirtie: but herein the Chronologers doe not agree. Yet Eusebius and Bunting with Halicarnasseus doe in effect confent, that the Citie was entred, and burnt in the first yeere of Demophoon King of Athens, the successour of Mnestheus, the successour of Theleus, feauenteene dayes before the Summer Tropique, and that about the eleventh of September following, the Troians crost the Hellespont into Thrace, & wintred there, and in the next spring that they nauigated into Sicilia, where wintring the second yere, the next fummer they arrived at Laurentum, and builded Lauinium. But S. Augustine hath it otherwise, that when Polyphides gouerned Sicyon , Mnessheus Athens, Tautanes Affyria, Habdon Ifraell, then Aneas arrived in Italie, transporting with him in twen-Angalectides! tie shippes the remainder of the Troians: but the difference is not great: and hercof 10 more at large in the storie of Troy at hand.

In Stepan Phelis the two and twentieth King, reigned eight yeeres, beginning by the common account in the time of Thola. His fuccessours, Adrafus who reigness ned foure yeeres, and Polyphides who reigned thirteene, are accounted to the time of Lair, so is also Mnestheus King of Athens, and Atreus, who held a great part of Peloponnesus. In Assiria, during the gouernment of these two peaceable Judges, Mitreus and after him Tautanes reigned. In Agypt Amenophis, the sonne of Ramses, and afterwards Annemenes.

Of the warre of Thebes which was in this age.

N this age was the warre of Thebes, the most auncient that ever Greeke Poet or Historian wrote of. Wherefore the Romane Poet Lucretius, affirming (as the Epicares in this point held truely against the Peripa-teticks) that the world had a beginning, vigeth them with this

Si nulla fuit genitalis origo Rerumque & mundi, semperque aterna fuêre, Cur supra bellum Thebanum, & funera Trois, Non alias alij quoque res cecinere poeta?

If all this world had no originall, But things have cuer beene as now they are: Before the fiege of Thebes or Troyes last fall, Why did no Poet fing fome elder warre?

It is true that in these times Greece was very saluage, the inhabitants being often 40 chaced from place to place, by the captaines of greater Tribes; and no man thinking the ground whereon hee dwelt his owne longer than hee could hold it by strong hand. Wherefore merchandize and other intercourse they vsed little, neither did they plant many trees, or fow more corne than was necessarie for their suftenance. Money they had little or none, for it is thought that the name of money was n ot heard in Greece, when Homer did write, who measures the valew of gold and braffe by the worth in cattel; faying that the golden armour of Glaucus, was worth 100. becues, and the copper armour of Diomedes worth nine.

Robberies by land and fea were common and without shame, and to steale horses or kine was the viuall exercise of their great men. Their townes were not 50 many, whereof those that were walled were very few, and not great. For Mycene the principal Citie in Peloponnesus was a very little thing, and it may wel be thought that therest were proportionable : briefly, Greece was then in her infancic, and though in some small townes of that halfe Ile of Peloponnesus, the inhabitants might haue enjoyed quietnesse within their narrow bounds; as likewise did the

Atheniani because their Country was so barren, that none did care to take it from them: yetthat the land in generall was very rude it will cassly appeare to such as consider, what Thary shides the greatest of their Hilborians bath written to this effect, in the prastice to his Hilboria. Wherefore, as in the selator trimes, idle Clinonicles vse when they want good matter, to fill whole bookes with reports of great frostes, or dry summers, and other such things which no man cares to reade, fo did they who spake of Greece in her beginnings, remember onely the great shoods which were in the times of Organians and Demattion: or else rehears selator fables of men changed into birds, of strange moniters, of adulterie committed by their Gods, and the mightie men which they begat, without writing ought that sauou- to red of humanitie before the time of the warre of Thebes: the briefe whereof

QEdipus the fonne of Laius King of Thebes, having beene cast foorth when hee was an infant, because an Oracle forctolde what cuill should come to passe by him, did afterwards in a narrow paffage contending for the way, flay his owne father, not knowing either then or long after, who hee was. Afterward hee became King of Thebes, by marriage of the Queene locasta, called by Homer Epicaste: on whom, not knowing her to bee his mother, hee begat two lonnes, Eteocles and Polynices. But when in proceffe of time, finding out by good circumstances, who were his parents, hee vinderstood the gricuous murther and incest hee had committed, he 20 tore out his owne eyes for griefe, and left the Citie. His wife and mother did hang her selfe. Some say, that OEdipus having his eyes pulled out, was expelled Thebes, bitterly curling his fonnes, because they suffered their father to bee cast out of the Towne, and ayded him not. Howfocuer it were, his two Sonnes made this agreement, that the one of them should reigne one yeere, and the other another yeere; and so by course rule interchangeably: but this appointment was ill observed. For when Polynices had after a yeeres Gouernment resigned the Kingdome to his brother: or (according to others) when Eteocles had reigned the first yeere, hee refused to give over the rule to Polynices. Hercupon Polynices fled vnto Argos, where Adrastus the sonne of Talass then reigned, vnto whose pal- 30 lace comming by night, hee was driven to feeke lodging in an out-house, on the

There hee met with Tydeus the sonne of OEneus, who was fledde from Calydon: with whom striuing about their lodging, hee fell to blowes. Adrastus hearing the noyle came foorth and tooke up the quarrell. At which time perceiuing in the shield of Tydeus a Bore, in that of Polynices a Lyon, hee remembred an olde Oracle, by which hee was aduifed to give his two daughters in marriage, to a Lyon and a Bore : and accordingly hee did bestowe his daughter Argia vpon Tydeus, and Deipyle vpon Polynices, promising to restore them both to their Countries. To this purpose leuying an armie, and affembling as many valiant Captaines as he could draw 40 to follow him, hee was defirous among others to carrie Amphiaraus the fonne of Oicleus a great Soothfayer, and a valiant man, along with him. But Amphiaraus, who is faid to have foreseene all things, knowing well that none of the Captaines should escape, saue onely Adrastus, did both vtterly refuse to bee one in that expedition, and perswaded others to stay at home. Polynices therefore dealt with Eriphyle the wife of Amphiaraus, offering vnto her avery faire bracelet, vpon condition that thee should cause her husband to affish him. The Soothsayer knowing what should worke his destinie, forbad his wife to take any gift of Polynices. But the bracelet was in her eye so precious a iewell, that shee could not refuse it. Therfore whereas a great controuerlie, betweene Amphyaraus and Adrastus, was by way 50 of compromise put vnto the decision of Eryphile, either of them being bound by folemne oath to stand to her appointment : shee ordered the matter fo, as a woman should, that loued a bracelet better than her husband. Hee now finding that it was more casie to foresee than avoide destinie, sought such comfort as reuenge might affoord, giving in charge to his fonnes, that when they came to full age, they should kill their mother and make strong warre vpon the Thebanes.

Now had Adraffus affembled all his forces, of which, the featen chiefe leaders were, himselfe, Amphiaraus, Capaneus, and Hippomedon (in steade of whom some name Medifieus) all Argines, with Polynices the Theban, Tydeus the AEtolian, and Parthenopaus the Arcadian fonne of Meleager and Atalanta. When the armie came to the Nemean wood, they met a woman whom they defired to helpe them to fome water, the having a child in her armes, laid it downe, and led the Argines to a 10 foring: but ere shee returned, a Serpent had flaine the childe. This woman was Hypsipyle the daughter of Thoas the Lemnian, whom shee would have faued when the women of the Ifle flew al the males by confpiracie intending to lead an Amaz onian life. For fuch her pictic, the Lemnian wives did fell her to Pyrates, and the Pyrates to Lyeurgus Lord of the Country about Nemer, whose young sonne Opheltes or Archemorus, the did nurse, and lost as is shewed before. When you the childs death thee hid herfelfe for feare of her maister, Amphiaraus told her somes where they should finde her and the Argines did both kill the Screent which had flaine the childe, and in memoric of the chaunce, did inflitute folemne funerall games called Nemean, wherein ... uftus wanne the prize with his fwift horse Arion . Tydeus 20 with whorlebats, Am aus at running and quoiting, Polynices at wreftling, Parthenopeus at shooting, and one Landoeus in darting. This was the first institution of the Nemaan games, which continued after famous in Greece for very many ages. There are, who thinke that they were ordained in honour of one Opheltus, a Lacedamonian. Some fay by Hercules, when hee had flaine the Nemean L you; but the common opinion agrees with that which is here fet downe.

From Nomea the Argines marching onwards, arrived at Citheron, whence Tydens was by them fent Embaffadour to Thekes, to require of Escedes the performance of Couenants betweene him and Polynices. This meffage was nothing agrecable to Escedes, who was throughly refolued to holde what hee had, as long as hee could:
30 which Tydens perceiving and intending partly to get honour, partly to try what

30 which Tyzen betterming and rectioning party to get motions party to try white mettle was in the Thebans, hee made many challenges, and obtained victorie in all of them, not without much enuie and malice of the people, who laide fiftie men in ambulh to intercept him at his returne to the armie, of which fiftie hee flewe all but one, whome hee fent backe to the Citie as a reporter and witnelf of his valour. When the Argines vnderflood how refolued Eteoles was, they prefented themselues before the Citie, and incamped round about it. Thebesis faid to haue had at that time seauen gates, which belike stoode not farre asunder, seing that the Argines (who afterward when they were very faire stronger, could scarce muster who more thousandes then Thebes had gates) did compasse the towne. Advassus 40 quartered before the gate Homoloides, Capaneus before the Ogystan, Tydeus before

40 quartered octrot the gate runniadas, capanels octrot the Ogytan, 19 and before Crenis, Amphirams at Prefixs, Hippomedon at Anchais, Parthenopeus at Electra, and Polymies at Hippfila. In the mean feafon, Eteocles hauing armed his men, and appointed Commanunders wrote them, took eadulifor Treflus the Soothfayer, who promifed victorie to the Thebans, if Menseins the fonne of Creon a principall man of the Citie, would wowehimfelfe to be effaine in honour of Offars the God of warre. So full ofmalice and pride is the Dirull, and lo enuious at his Creators glorie, that hee not onely challengeth honours due to God alone, as oblations and facrifice with all Diuine worthippe, but commanundeth vs to offer out felues, and our children wrote him, when hee hath fufficiently clowded mens vnderthanding, 50 and bewitched their wils with ignorance and blinde deutotion. And fuch abhominable facrifice of men, maides, and children hath hee exacted of the Sprinns, Car nable sacrifice of men, maides, and children hath bee exasted of the Syrians, Cartheginans, Gelles, Germanes, Cyprians, & Eyptians, and of many other, if not of all Nations, when through ignorance or feare they were most filled with superstition. But as they grewe more wife, so did he waxelesse impudent in cunning, though not leffe malitious in defiring the continuance of fuch barbarous inhumanitie. For King Diphilus in Cipres without adulfe of any Oracle, made the Idoll of that Country rest contented with an Oxe in stead of a man. Tiberius forbad humane sacrifices in Affrick : and crucified the Priestes in the groues where they had practifed them. Hercules taught the Italians to drowne men of have in stead of the liuing yet among the faluages in the West Indies these cruell offerings have been practifed of late ages; which as it is a fufficient argument that Satans malice is onely covered and hidden by this fubtiltie among citill people: so may it serue as a probable Coniecture of the barbarifmes then reigning in Greece. For Menacius as foone as hee vnderstood that his death might purchase victorie to his people; bestowed himselfe (as 10 hee thought) yoon Mars, killing himfelfe before the gates of the Citie. Then was a battell fought, wherein the Argines prenailed fo farre at the first, that Capanew advancing ladders to the walles, got vp vpon the rampart: whence, when hee fell or was cast downe, or (as writers hane it ) was stricken downe by Jupiter with a thunderbolt, the Argines fled. Many on each part were flaine in this battell, which caused both sides to defire that Eteocles and Polynices might trie out the quarrell in fingle fight : whereto the two brethren according, flewe each

Another battell was fought after their death, whereig the fonnes of Allagus behaued themselues very valiantly: Ilmarus one of the sonnes slewe Hippomedon 20 which was one of the feuen Princes: Parthenopeus being another of the feauen (who was faid to have beene so faire that none would hurt him when his face was bare) was flaine by Amphidicus, or as fome fay, by Periclymenus the fonne of Neptune; and the valiant Tydeus by Menalippus: yet ere Tydeus died, the head of Menalippus was brought vnto him by Amphiaraus, which hee cruelly tore open and swallowed vp the braines. Vpon which fact, it is faid, that Pallas who had brought from Jupiter fuch remedie for his wound, as should have made him immortall, refused to beflow it vpon him: whereby perhaps was meant that his honour which might haue continued immortall did perish through the beaftly rage, that hee shewed at his

The hoaft of the Argines being wholly discomfitted, Adrastus and Amphiaraus fledde: of whom Amphiaraus is said to haue been swallowed quicke into the earth, neere to the river Ismenus, togither with his Chariot, and so lost out of mens fight, being peraduenture ouerwhelmed with dead carcafes or drowned in the river; and his bodie neuer found nor greatly fought for. Adrastus escaped on his good horse Arion, and came to Athens; where fitting at an Altar called the Altar of Mercie, hee made supplication for their aide to recouer their bodies . For Creen having obtained the Government of Thebes, after the death of Eteocles, would not fuffer the bodies of the Argines to bee buried : but caused Antigone, the only daughter then living of OEdipus, to bee buried quicke, because shee had sought out and 40 buried the bodie of her brother Polynices, contrary to Creons Edict. The Athenians condescending to the request of Adrastus, did send foorth an armie under the Conduct of Thefeus, which tooke Thebes, and restored the bodies of the Argines to Sepulture: at which time Euadnethe wife of Capaneus, threw herfelfe into the funerall fier, and was burnt willingly with her husband. But it little contented the fonnes of those Captaines which were flaine at Thebes, that any leffereuenge should bee taken of their fathers death, than the ruine of the Citie: wherefore tenne yeeres after having levied forces AEgialeus the sonne of Adrastus, Diomedes of Tydeus, Promachus of Parthenopaus, Sthenelus of Capaneus, Therfunder of Polynices, and Euripylus of Meciftens, marched thither under the conduct of Alemeon the fonne of Amphiarans: 50 with whom also went his brother Amphiloitus. Apollo promised victoric if Alemeon were their Captaine, whom afterward by another Oracle hee commanded to kill his owne mother.

When they came to the citie, they were incountred by Laodamas the fon of Eteocles then King of the Thebanes, (for Creen was only Tutor to Laedamas ) who though he did valiantly in the battaile, and flew Agialeus, yet was he put to the worst, and driuen to flie,or (according to Apollodorus) llaine by Alemaon. After this difafter the citizens began to defire composition; but in the meane time they conuaied themselves with their wives and children away from thence by night, and so began to wander vp and downe, till at length they built the Towne called Effica. The Argines when they perceived that their enemies had quitted the Towne, entring into it, lacked it. threw downe the walls, and laid it wast; howbeit it is reported by some that the Towne was faued by Ther fander, the sonne of Polynices, who causing the Citizens to 10 returne, did there raigne over them. That hee faved the Citic from vtter destruction, it is very likely, for he raigned there, and led the Thebanes to the Warre of Troy, which very shortly after ensued.

Of IEPMTA, and how the three hundred yeares which he speaketh of, IVD. II. v.28. are to be reconciled with the places ACT. 13.20. I.R EG. 6.1. together with some other thinges touching Chronologic about thele times.

Ther the death of Lair (neare about whose times these thinges happened in Greece, and during whose gouernment, and that of Thola, Ilrael liued in peace and in order) they revolted againe from the law, and feruice of God, and became more wicked and Idolatrous than euer. For whereas in the former times they worthipped Baal and Afteroth, they now became followers of all the Heathen Nations adioyning, and imbraced the Idolls of the Aramites, of the Zidonians, Moabites, and Ammonites : with those of the Ind. 18 Philistims. And as before it pleased God to correct them by the Aramites, by the Amalekites, and Midianites: To now hee scourged them by the Ammonites, and after- The

Now among the Ifraelites, those of Gilead being most oppress, because they bor-18, years are dered upon the Ammonites, they were inforst to seeke tephta, whom they had for- sneed in the merly despited and cast from them, because he was base borne; but he (not with- World 2812) flanding those former injuries) participating more of godly compassion, than of de- in which years uilish hatred and reuenge, was content to leade the Gileadites to the Warre, vpon lethia began, condition that they should establish him their Gouernour after victorie. And when he had disputed with Ammon for the Land, disproued Ammons right, and fortified the title of Ifrael by many arguments, the same prenailing nothing, he beganne the warre; and being strengthened by God, ouer-threw them: and did not only beate them out of the plaines, but forfithem ouer the mountaines of Arabia, euen to Min. 14d. 11. 12. nith, and Abel of the vineyards, Cities express heretofore in the description of the holy Land. After which victorie it is faid, that he performed the vaine vow, which hee made, to facrifice the first living creature hee incountred, comming out of his house to meet him; which happened to be his owne daughter, and only child, who with all patience submitted her selfe, and only desired two Moneths time to bewaile her Virginitie on the mountaines of Gilead; because in her the issues of her Father ended: but the other opinion that shee was not offered, is more probable, which perinted Borrheus and others proue fufficiently.

After these thinges the children of Ifrael, of the Tribe of Ephraim, either envious 50 of Iephta's victorie, or otherwise making way to their future calamitie, and to the most grieuous slauerie that euer Ifrael suffered, quarrelled with Iephta, that they were not called to the Warre, as before time they had contested with Gideon. Tephia hereupon inforst to defend himselfe against their furie, in the incounter slew of them two and fortie thousand, which so weakened the body of the Land, as the Philistims Indiana,

( where he faies that Ifrael had then poffer the Fast side of Jordan 200, yeares) to speake somewhat of the times of the Judges. and of the differing opinions among the Diuines and Chronologers : there being found three places of Scriptures touching this point feeming repugnant, or disagree- 10 ing: the first is in this dispute betweene Jephta and Ammon, for the right and poffesfion of Gilead: the second is that of S. Paul Act. 13. the third that which is in the first of Kings. Iephta here challengeth the possession of Gilead for 200. yeares : Saint Paul giveth to the Indges, as it feemes, from the end of Iofua, to the last of Heli, 450. yeares. In the first of Kings it is taught, that from the departing of Ifrael out of Agypt, to the foundation of Salomons Temple, there were confumed 480. yeares. To the first Beroaldus findeth Jephta's 200. yeares to be but 266. yeares, to wit, 18. of Id facit nume- feth a certaine number, for an vncertaine : Sie vt dieat annum agi propè trecente simum, 20 ro certo prom-certopro, posto. ex quo nullus litem ea dere mouerit Israeli; So he speaketh (saith he) as meaning, that then it was about or wel-nigh the three hundreth yere, fince Ifrael poffeffed those Contries, no man fliction, to be added to Beroaldus his 266. he addethalfo 28, yeares more, and so maketh vp the fumme of 365. These 28, yeares hee findeth out thus: 20, yeares hee giues to the Seniers betweene Iolua and Othoniel: and where Beroaldus alloweth but 18. yeares to Io/na his government, Codoman accounts that his rule lasted 26. according to Iosephus; whereas S. Augustine and Eusebius gine him 27. Melanchton 32. The truth is that this addition of 28. yeares is farre more doubtfull than the other of 71. But though we admit not of this addition, yet by accounting of some part of the yeares of affliction (to wit, 34. yeares of the 71.) if wee adde them to the 266. yeares of Beroaldus, which reckoneth none of thefe, we have the just number of 300, yeares. Neither is it strange that Iephta should leave out more than halfe 40 of these yeares of affliction: seeing as it is already said the Ammontes might except against these 71. yeares, and say that during these yeares, or at least a good part of them, the Ifraelites had no quiet possession of the Countries in question. Martin Luther is the Author of a third opinion making those 300, yeares remembred by Iephta, to be 306. which odde yeares, faith he, Iephta omitteth. But because the yeares of enery Indge as they raigned, cannot make up this number of 206, but doe only compound 266, therefore doth Luther adde to this number, the whole time which Moles spent in the Delarts of Arabia Petran; which fortie yeares of Moles added to the number which Beroaldus findeth of 266, make indeede 206.

Iolua, 40, of Othoniel, 80, of And and Samgar, 40, of Debora, 40, of Gideon, 2, of Abimilech, 23. of Thola, and 22. of Jair: But Jephta (faith Beroaldus) putteth or propomaking question of their right. Codoman on the contrarie finds more yeares than Jephta named by 65. to wit, 365. whereof 71. were spent in Ifraels captivitie, at severall times, of which (as Codoman thinketh) Jephta forbare to repeate the whole fumme or any great part, leaft the Ammonite should have justly objected, that 71. of those yeares, the Ifraelites were in captinitie and vaffalls to their neighbour Princes, and therefore knowing that to name 300. yeares it was enough for prescription, hee omitted the rest. To inflific this account of 365, yeares, belides the 71, yeares of captinitie or af- 20

But I fee nothing in the text to warrant Luthers judgement herein: for in the dispute betweene Iephta and Ammon for the Land of Gilead, it is written in the person of Ammon in these wordes. Because Israel tooke my Land, when they came up from Agypt from Arnon unto Iaboc, & c. now therefore reflore those Landes questy or in peace. So by this place it is plaine that the time is not to bee accounted from Mo/es departure out of Egypt: but from the time that the Land was posself. For it is said, Quià cepit Ifrael terram meam; Because Ifrael tooke my Land : and therefore the beginning of this account is to be referred to the time of the taking : which Tephtas answere also confirmeth in these wordes. When Ifrael dwelt in Heshbon, and in her Townes, and in Aroer and in her Townes, and in all the Cities that are by the coast of Arnon 200. yeares: why did vee not then recover them in that space? fo as this place speakes it directly, that Ifrael had inhabited and dwelt in the Cities of Gilead 200. yeares : and therefore to account the times from the hopes or intents, that I frael had to possesse it, it seemeth fomewhat strained to me; for wee doe not vie to reckon the time of our conquests in France, from our Princes intents or purpoles, but from their victories and pof-

Junius neuerthelesse likes the opinion of Luther, and saies that this time of 200. yeares hath reference, and is to take beginning from the first of Iephtas narration: when he makes a briefe repetition of Moles whole journey : to wit, at the fixteenth Verse of the eleuenth Chapter of Indges in our translation in these wordes. But when Ifraelcame up from Egypt, &c. and therefore Moses his 40. yeares (as he thinks) Junios in the 11 are to be accounted, which make the number of 305, yeares; and not only the time of tud. rat, in which Ifrael poffest Gilead, according to the Text and Iephtas owne wordes: of which I leave the judgement to others; to whom also I leave to judge, whether we 20 may not beginne the 480. yeares, from the deliuerance out of Agypt to the Temple, even from the first departure out of Agypt, and yet finde a more probable reconciliation of S. Pauls and Iephtas account with this reckoning, than any of those that as yet haue beene fignified. For first, touching tepht as 300. yeares of possession of the East side of Iordan, it is to be remembred that for a good while before the Israelites poffeffed it, Sehon and Og had dispoffeffed Moab and Ammon thereof: fo that when the Ifraelites had conquered Sehon and Og, the right of possession, which they had paffed to Ifrael; and so lephta might say that they had possessed those Countries 200. yeares, reckoning 266. yeares of their owne possession, and the rest of the possession of the two Kings Sehon and Og, whose right the Ifraelites had by the law 30 of conquest.

The second place disputed is this of S. Paul Act. 13. that from the end of Iosua to Read the 24 of the beginning of Samuel, there past 450 yeares. And this place Luther understan- Influs, and the dethalfo befides the letter, (as I finde his opinion cited by Function Krent femius, and remain classes) Beza, for I haue not read his Commentaries. For he accounteth from the death of 4. Beza in his Mofes, to the last yeare of Heli, but 357. yeares: and this hee doth the better to ap- Annotations proue the times from the egreffion out of Agypt to the building of the Temple, of the Adis v. so which in the first King. 6. is faid to be 480. yeares.

Now for as much as S. Paul (as it feemes) finds 450. yeares from the death of Jofua, to the last of Heli, and leaves but 30. yeares for Saul and Samuel, who governed 40 40. for David who ruled 40. and for Salomon who ware the Crowne three whole yeares ere the foundation of the Temple was laid; therefore Luther takes it, that there was errour in the Scribe, who wrate out this peece of Scripture of S. Paul: to wit. Then afterward he gaue unto them Judges about 450. yeares, unto the time of S A- 45,13.20. MVEL the Prophet: the wordes then afterward, being clearly referred to the death or after the death of Iofua, as shall be hereafter proued. But where S. Luke rehearing the wordes of S. Paul wrate 350. yeares (faith Luther) the Scribe in the transcription being deceived by the affinitie of those two Greeke wordes, whereof the one fignifieth 300 and the other 400 wrate Tetracofiois for Triacofiois 400 yeares, for 300. yeares, and 450. for 350. This hee feeketh to strengthen by many arguments: to 50 which opinion Beza in his great Annotations adhereth. A contrarie judgement to this bath Codoman: where Luther and Beza beginne at Moles death, he takes his account from the death of Io/ua, and from thence to the beginning of Samuel he makes 430. yeares: to wit of the Indges (not reckoning Sampsons yeares) 319 and of yeares of seruitude and affliction under strangers 111. The reason why he doth not reckon

Sampfons 20. yeares, is because he thinkes that they were part of the 40. yeares, in which the Philiflims are faid to have oppreffed Ifrael. For it is plaine that during all Samplons time they were Lords oner Ifrael. So then of the Iudges, besides the 111. wares of feruitude, Codoman reckoneth (as I have faid) 319 yeares, which two fummes put together make 430. yeares, and whereas S. Paul nameth 450. yeares, he finds 20. yeares to make vp S. Pauls number, to have beene fpent after the death of lofus by the Soniors, before the captinitie of Chufban, or the election of Othoniel: which 25, yeares added to 430, make 450, according to S. Paul. To approve this time of the Elders, he citeth two places of Scriptures, namely the 24. of lofus, and the second of Iniges, in each of which places it is written, that Ifrael ferned the Lord 10 all the daies of Iosva, and all the daies of the Elders that over-lived Iosva, foasto thefe times of the Elders, Codeman gineth 20 yeares, which make as before 450.according to S. Paul. Neither would it breede any great difficultie in this opinion, if here also the 20. yeares of the Seniors, betweene Josus and Othoniel, should be denied. For they which denie these yeares and make Othoniels 4c, to beginne presently ypon the death of losus, as in the beginning of this reckoning they have 20. yeares lesse than Codoman, fo toward the end of it (when they reckon the yeares of affliction apart from the yeares of the Iudges) in the number of Samplons yeares and of the 40. yeares of the Philiftims oppreffing the Ifraelites, they have 20. yeares more than Codoman. For they reckon these 40. yeares of oppression all of them a-part from 20 Sampsons 20. but Codoman as is said makes Sampsons 20. to be the one halfe of the 40. of the Philistims oppressions; so that if the 20. yeares of the Seniors, be not allowed to Codoman, then he may reckon (as the letter of the Text seemes to inforce) that the Philistims in an Inter-regnum, before Sampson judged Ifrael, vexed the Ifraelites 40. yeares belides the 20. while Sampson was their Judge, and so the reckoning will come to 450. yeares betweene the end of Iofia, and the beginning of Samuel, though wee admit not of any Inter-regnum of the Seniors, betweene Iofua and Othoniel : For if the times of their affiletion be fummed, they make 111. yeares, to which if we adde the yeares of the Indges, which are 339, we have the inft fumme of 450. And this computation either one way or other, may feeme to bee much more probable, than 20 theirs that correct the Text, although we should admit of their correction thereof, and reade with them 350. for 450. For whereas they conceive that this time of 350. yeares, is to beginne immediatly, or soone after the death of Moses: certainly the place of S. Paul doth euidently teach the contrarie, though it bee received for true that there was vitium feriptoris in the rest. For these be S. Pauls wordes : And about the time of 40. yeares, God suffered their manners in the wildernesse: And he destroied Seuen Nations in the Land of Canaan, and divided their Land to them bylot. Then afterward he gaue unto them Indges about 450. yeares, unto the time of SAMVEL the Prophet. So as first in the eighteenth verse he speaketh of Moles and of his yeares spent in the wildernesse, then in the nineteenth verse he commeth to the acts of Josus; which 40 were that he destroied seuen Nations in the Land of Canaan, and divided their Land to them by lot. In the twentieth verse it followeth: Then afterward hee gaue them Indges about 450. yeares, &c. and therefore to reckon from the death of Moles, is wide of S. Pauls meaning, so farre as my weake understanding can pierce it. The only inconvenience of any waight in opinion of Codoman touching this place, in the Acts is that it seemes irreconciliable with the account 1. Rev. 6.11. For if indeede there were spent 450. yeares betweene the end of Iosua and the beginning of Samuel, certainly there must needes be much more than 480, yeares betweene the beginning of the Israelites iournying from Agypt, and the foundation of the Temple by Salomon. To this difficultie Codoman answereth, that these 480. yeares 1. Reg. 6. 1, must be ginne to be reckoned, not in the beginning, but in the ending of their lournying from Egypt, which he makes to be 25. yeares after the beginning of Otheniels gouernment; from whence if we cast the yeares of the Indges, with the yeares of sernitude (which fummes according to his account, of which we have already spoken, make 397. yeares) and so to these yeares adde the 40. of Samuel, and Saul, and the 40. of Dauid, and the 3. of Salomon, wee shall have the inst summer of 480. yeares. Neither is that distinhed, that the annue specifions is not of the other doctored gerefions in some interpretable feel finite, the yeare of their comming out of **Egypt (for so it is in the originally or the yeare after they came out of **Egypt, may well be vinder-flood for the yeare after they were come out thence, that is, after they had ended their wandring from thence. For so wee finde that thinges which were done 40. yeares after they had set foot out of **Egypt, are fail to bane been done in their going out of **Egypt, as Ifd. 1 1.4. CHAP. 12. S. 8. of the Historie of the World.

The next point to be cleared is how their iournying should be faid not to have had end vntill the 2.5, yeare after the victorie of othernel. To this codeman answereth that then it had no end till when all the Tribes had obtained their portions, which happened not vntill this time: at which time the Dantes at length sated 20 themselves, as it is declared Ind. 18 For doubtlessee to this time the expedition may 20 themseliues, as its acctared Ind. 18-For doublishes to this time the expedition may most connected by the referred. And thus without any great inconnectinector him appearing doth Codoman reconcile the account of tophra, and S. Paul, with that in the first of Kingis. 6-Now whereas it is faid that the expedition of the Danites was when Ind. 18.15 there was no King in Ifrael: to this Codoman answereth, that it is not necessfair that we should suppose that Othoniel liued all those ao, yeares of rest, of which Ind. 3, 11 I fo that by the 2, yeare after his victorie, either he might have been dead, or at least as Gideon did, he might have resulted all sourcingstife, and Go either way it might truly be faid that at this time (to wit, the 25, yeare after Othoniels victorie) there was no King in Israel. This opinion of Codoman, if it were as consonant to other Corazon Robogors grounding their opinions on the plaine T ext, where it is indisputable, as it

30 mongers ground enough and coherent; might perhaps be receited as good: effectially confidering that the specches of S.Paul, have not otherwise found any interpretation, maintaining them as also futely true, in fach manner as they found, and are set downe. But seeing that he wanteth all helpe of authoritie, we may justly suffect the supposition whereupon his opinions ignorated; it being fach as the content of many Authors would hardly suffice to make very probable. For who hath told Codeman that the conquest of Laufh, by the T tibe of Dan, was performed in the flue and twentieth years of Othomiel? Or what other probabilitie hath he than his owne consecutor, to show that othomiel did so renounce the office of a ludge after 40 flue and twentie yeares, that it might then be truly said there was no King in 1/5 rael, but curely man did that which was good in his owne eas.

Now concerning the rehearfall of the law by Mofes, and the flopping of Iordan, they might indeed be properly faid to haue beene, when Ifrael came out of Expris, like as we day that King Edward the first was crowned when he came out of the holy Land, for so all iournies with their accidents commonly take name from the place either whence or whither they tend. But I thinke he can finden of such phrase of speech in Scripture as limiteth aiourney by an accident, or faith by concurring the proposition, when Iordan was turning back, Ifrael came out of Expris. Indeed most vnproper it were to give date vnto actions commenced long after, from an expedicion finished long before, namely to say that King Edward at his articulout of Pa-

50 tion finished long before, namely to say that King Edward at his arrivall out of Palessima, did winne Scotland, or died at Carlile. How may we then believe that enterprize performed so many yeares after the division of the Land (which followed the conqueltat the journies end) should be said to have beene at the time of the departure out of Agypt. Or who will northinke it most strange that the most notable account of time, feruing as the only guide for certaine ages in facred Chronologie, floudd not take name and beginning from that fluthrious delinerance out of Leppt, rehearfed often by God himselfe among the principall of his benefits to fixed, where of the very day and moneth are recorded in Scripture (as likewife are the yeare and moneth wherein it expired) and the forme of the year vpon that occation changed, but flould haue reference to the furprizing of a Towneby 600. men, that robbed a Chappell by the way, and flool from thence Idolls to be their guides, as not going to worken Gods pame? For this accident whereupon Cooloman buildeth hath either no time giuen to it, or a time farre different from that which he supposeth, and is indeeder rather by him placed in such a yeare, because it best flood with his inter-to-pretation for to haue it, than for any certainty or likelihood of the thing it selfe.

Wherefore we may best agree with such as affirme that the Apostle S. Paul did not herein labour to set downe the course of time exactly (a thing no way concerning his purpose) but only to shew that God, who had chosen Ifrael to be his people, deliuered them out of bondage, and ruled them by Indges, and Prophets, vnto the time of Saul: did raise vp our Lord Iefus Christ out of the feede of David the King, in whose succession the Crowne was established, and promise made of a Kingdome that should have no end. Now in rehearing briefly thus much which tended as a Preface to the declaration following (wherein he sheweth Christ to have beene the true Messas) the Apostle was so farre from labouring to make an exact calculation 20 of times (the Historie being so well knowne and beleeued of the Iewes to whom he preached) that he spake as it were at large of the 40. yeares consumed in the wildernesse, whereof no man doubted, saying that God suffered their manners in the wildernesse about 40, yeares. In like manner he proceeded saying that from the divifion of the Land vnto the daies of Samuel the Prophet, in whose time they required to have a King, there passed about 450, yeares. Neither did he stand to tell them. that an hundred and eleuen yeares of bondage mentioned in this middle while, were by exact computation to be included within the 230, yeares of the Indges: for this had beene an impertinent digression from the argument which hee had in hand. Wherefore it is a worke not so needfull as laborious, to search out of this place that 30 which the Apostle did not here intend to teach, when the summe of 480, yeares is fo express and purposely set downe.

Now that the wordes of S.Paul (if there be no fault in the Copie through errour of some Scribe) are not so curiously to be examined in matter of Chronologie, but must be taken as having reference to the memorie and apprehension of the yulgar, it is cuident by his ascribing in the same place 40. yeares to the raigne of Saul: whereas it is manifest that those yeares were divided between Saul and Samuel, yea that farr the greater part of them were spent under the gouernment of the Prophet, how focuer they are here included in the raigne of the King. As for those that with so much cunning for fake the generall opinion when it fauoureth not fuch exposition 40 as they bring out of a good minde to helpe where the neede is not oner-great; I had rather commend their diligence, than follow their example. The wordes of S. Paul were fufficiently instified by Beroaldus, as having reference to a common opinion among the Scribes in those daies, that the 111, yeares of seruitude were to be reckoned a part from the 339, yeares afcribed to the Indges; which accompt the Apostle would not in this place stand to contradict, but rather chose to speake as the vulgar, qualifying it with a quali, where he faith quali quadringent is & quinquaginta annis; As it were four ehundred and fiftie yeares. But Codoman being not thus contented, would needes have it to be fo indeede; and therefore diffoynes the members to make the accompt euen. In so doing he dasheth himselfe against a notable Text, whereupon all Authors have builded (as well they might and ought) that purposely and precifely doth cast up the yeares from the departure out of Egypt, vnto the building of Salomons Temple, not omitting the very Moneth it selfe.

faith to his owne interpretation of S. Paul, he thinketh it more needfull to find fome new expolition for that which is of it felte most plaine; shan to examine his owne coniecture you a place that is full of control defte. This by expounding, after a firrange methode, that which is manifest by that which is obscure, he looseth himself in those wates wherein before him neuer han walked. Surely if one should vrge him to giue reason of these new opinions, he must needs answere, That otherwise could not gouerne aboue 25, yeares, because then was the taking of Lass, at which time there was no King in Jirael; That the Danties must needes have taken Lassis at that time, because else we could not reckon backwards from the Soundation of the 12 Templet only action that might be termed the comming of Jirael out of Lassis, without excluding the yeares of fertivated, and that the yeares of fertivated must needes be included, for that otherwise he himselfes should have spent his kinne vainely, in Seeking to pleasure S. Pausi with an exposition. Albeither this ground be throng enough to vphold a paradoxe, I senue it to the decision of any indicious R ender.

And now to proceede in our florie. To the time of lephs are referred the death of Hereules, the rape of Helen by Paris, and the provilions which been husband. Menn-law, taiging then in Jopets, and his prototion, y symmony Kingof Myeris, indee for her recoverie. Others referre this rape of Henry the four between of Hesen from which time, if the Warre of Try (as they uppost) did not beginned ill the third of Month time, if the Warre of Try (as they uppost) did not Elons, yet the Greekes had they eyers, to prepare the findious is the rule holding not true in this Warre, long, preparate hells elevent affer without it, that a long preparation begets if heedle with one to the Greekes and they are the preparation for the Greekes confunction years in the agreempt and Try as it feetnes was entred, lack than do burnt in the third dear of Hebbith.

Ionnes and 30. grand-children. And whereart is finprofeed, that the Judaina, 40. yeares of freads oppression by the Pablithme (of which Judaina, 14), tooks beginning from the ninth yeare of Tath and ended which he fall of **Laborn** I say name and for the opinion. For Ephrain bad had the earlie of superior languant Lephra, for its calling them to Warre over Invalue, if the Pablithme had held them in Gruinted in their owne I criticories and if Ephrain could have brought 4,2000 armed men into the field, it is not likely that they were then oppress, and had it been true that they were, who will doube but that they would rather have fought against the Pablithms with so powerfull an Armie for their owne delinerance, than against their owne Derthen the IfPacities But Ammon being ouerthrowne, it seemed at that time, that they feared no other cremie. And therefore these 40. yeares must either be supplied elsewhere, as in the time of Samplem and afterward: or effect by must be referred to the inter-expanse between the

Thus it seemes by Firgil, who followed furely good authoritie, that Tencer first gaue name to that Countrie, wherein heraigned ere Trey was built by Dardanus: of which Dardanus in the samebooke he speakes thus.

But contrarie to this, and to fo many Authors, approuing and confirming it, Reineccius thinkes that these names, Troes, Teueri, and Thraces, are derived from Tiras 40 or Thir as the sonne of laphet: and that the Dardanians, Mylians, and Assanians, mixt with the Troians, were Germane Nations, descended from Ashkenaz, the sonne of Gomer: of whom the Countrie, Lake, and River of Ascanius in Asia tooke name. That Ashkenaz gaue name to those places and people it is not vnlikely: neither is it unlikely that the Ascani, Dardani, and many others, did in after-times passe into Europe: that the name of Tencer came of Tiras, the coniccture is somewhat hard. Concerning Tencer, whereas Halicarnasseus makes him an Athenian, I finde none that follow him in the same opinion. Fireil (as is before shewed) reporteth him to be of Crete, whose authoritie is the more to be regarded, because he had good meanes to finde the truth, which it is probable that he carefully fought, and in this did follow: 50 feeing it no way concerned Augustus (whom other-whiles he did flatter) whether Teucer were of Crete or no. Reineceius doth rather embrace the opinion of Diodorus and others, that thinke him a Phrygian, by which report he was the Sonne of Sonmander and Ida, Lord of the Countrie, not founder of the Citie; and his Daughter or Neece Batia was the second wife of Dardanus, founder of Troy. Reineccius further thinkes that Atlas raigned in Samothracia, and gaue his Daughter Electra to Corytus, or Coritus: and that these were Parents to Chryle, first wife to Dardamu. Virgil holds otherwise, and the common Tradition of Poets makes Dardanus the sonne of Eleêtra by Inpiter, which Electra was the Daughter of Atlas, and wife to Coritus King of Hetruria, to whom shee bare Infins. Annius out of his Berefis finds the name of Cambobla (con, to whom he gives the addition of Coritus, as a Title of dignitie, making him Father of Dardanus and Iasius; and further telling vs very particularly of the faction between these Bretheren, which grew to such heate, that finally Dardanus killed his Brother, and thereupon fled into Samothrace. The obscuritie of the historie giues leaue to Annius of saying what he lift. I that loue not to vse such liber- 10 tie, will forbeare to determine any thing herein. But if Dardanus were the Sonne of Lapiter, it must have beene of some older Impiter than the Father of those that lived about the Warre of Troy. So is it likewise probable that Aslas the Father of Electra Eucoce, decon, was rather an Halian than an African, which also is the opinion of Boccace. For (as hath often beene faid) there were many Inpiters, and many of allmost energy name of the Gods; but it was the custome to ascribe to some one the acts of the rest, with all belonging to them. Therefore I will not greatly trouble my selfe with making any narrow fearch into these fabulous antiquities, but set downe the Pedigree according to the generall fame; allowing to Teuer such Parents as Diodorus giues, because others give him none, and carrying the line of Dardanus in manner following. 30

Concerning the beginning and continuance of the Trotan Kingdome, with the length of enery Kings raigne, I have chosen good Authors to bee my guides, that in a Historic, whereon depends the most ancient computation of times among the Greekes, I might not follow incertainties, ill cohering with the confent of Writers, and generall paffage of thinges elsewhere done. And first for the detiruction of Troy, which was of greater note than any accident befalling that Citie whilest it stood, it is reckoned by Diolorus to be 780, yeares more ancient than the beginning of the 94th. Olympiad. Wherea charefore 372, did passe betweene the beginning of the Olympiaels, and the first yeare of the 94th, it is manifest that the remainder of 780. yeares, that is, 408. yeares went betweene the destruction 10 of Troy, and the first institution of those games by Iphitus, if the authoritie of Died in pref. Die orus be good proofe, who elfewhere tells vs, that the returne of the Herachda, which was 80. yeares after the fall of Troy, was 328. yeares before the first Dianyf.Halic.

Died.l.14.

Hereunto agrees the authoritie of Tionifus Halicarnafeus, who placing the foundation of Rome in the first of the seuenth Olympiad, that is four and twentie yeares after the beginning of those games, accounts it 4:2 later than the fall of Troy. Solin Politifica. Solina in expresse wordes makes the institution of the Olympiads by Iphitus, whom he calleth Iphiclius, 408. yeares later than the destruction of Troy. The summe is eafily collected by necessarie inference out of diners other places in the same 20 Eufeb deprep. booke. Hercunto doth Eufebius reckoning excludinely agree : and Eratofthenes Emaglito. (as hee is cited by Clemens Alexandrinus) makes vp out of many particulars, Cts. alex, from the fame totall fumme, wanting but one yeare, as reckoning likewife excludible.

> The other collections of divers Writers that are cited by Clemens in the fame place, doe neither cohere any way nor depend upon any collaterall Historie, by which they may be verified.

The destruction of Tray being in the years before the Olympiads foure hundred and eight : wee must seeke the continuance of that from the beginning to the end out of Eufebius, who leades vs from Dardanus on-wards through the raignes of 39 foure Kings, by the space of two hundred and fine and twentie voltres; and after of Priamus, with whom also at length it ended. As for the time which passed vnder Laomedon, wee are faine to doe, as others have done before vs, and take it vpon trust from Annua his Authors; beleening Atanetho so much the rather, for that in his accompt of the former Kings raignes and of Priamus, he is found to agree with Eusebins, which may give vs leave to thinke that Annius hath not herein corrupted him. But in this point we neede not to be very fcrupulous; for feeing that no Hiflorie or accompt of time depends upon the raigne of the former Kings, but only youn the ruine of the Citie vnder Priamus, it may fuffice that wee are carefull to place that memorable accident in the due yearg.

True it is that some objections appearing waightie, may be alleadged in maintenance of different computations, which with the answeres I purposely omit, as not willing to dispute of those yeares, wherein the Greekes knew no good forme of a yeare; but rather to make narration of the actions which were memorable, and acknowledged by all Writers, whereof this destruction of Troy was one of the

The first enterprise that was under-taken by generall consent of all Greece was the last Warre of Troy, which hath beene famous enen to this day, for the numbers of Princes and valiant Commanders there affembled : the great battailes fought with variable successe : the long indurance of the siege ; the 50 destruction of that great Citie; and the many Colonies planted in fundry Countries, as well by the remainder of the Troians, as by the victorious Greekes after their unfortunate returne. All which thinges with innumerable circumftances of especiall note, have beene delivered vnto posteritie, by the excellent wits of many writers, especially by the I oems of that great Homer, whose verses have giuen immortalitie to the action, which might elfe perhaps haue bene buried in obliuion, among other worthy deedes done both before and fince that time. For it is true which Horace faith;

> Vixère fortes ante AGAMEMNONA Multi, sed omnes illach imabiles Vrgentur, ignotique longâ Notte: carent quià vate facro.

Many by valour haue deseru'd renowne Ere AGAMEMNON: yet lye all opprest Vnder long night, vnwept for and vnknowne: For with no facred Poet were they bleft.

Yet foit is, that whileft these writers have with strange fables, or (to speake the best of them) with Allegories farre strained, gone about to inlarge the commendations of those noble undertakers: they have both drawne into suspition that great vertue which they fought to adorne, and filled after-ages with almost as much ig-20 norance of the Historic, as admiration of the persons. Wherefore it is expedient that wee feeke for the knowledge of fuch actions, in Histories; learning their qualities who did menage them of Poets, in whose works are both profit & delight: yet fmall profit to those which are delighted ouermuch; but such as can either interpret their fables, or separate them from the naked trueth, shall finde matter in Poems, not vnworthy to bee regarded of Historians. For those thinges excepted which are gathered out of Homer, there is very little, and not without much disagreement of Authours, written of this great warre. All writers confent with Homer, that the rape of Helen by Paris the fonne of Priamus, was the cause of taking armes; but how he was hereunto emboldened it is doubtfull.

Of the Rape of HELEN: and firength of both fides for the warre.

Erodotus fetcheth the cause of this rape from very farre; saying, That whereas the Phanicians had rauished Io, and carried her into Egypt, the Greekes to bee reucinged on the Barbarians, did first rauish Europa whom they brought out of Phanicia into Creta, and afterward Otedes, whom they fetcht from Colchos, denying to reflore her to her fa-

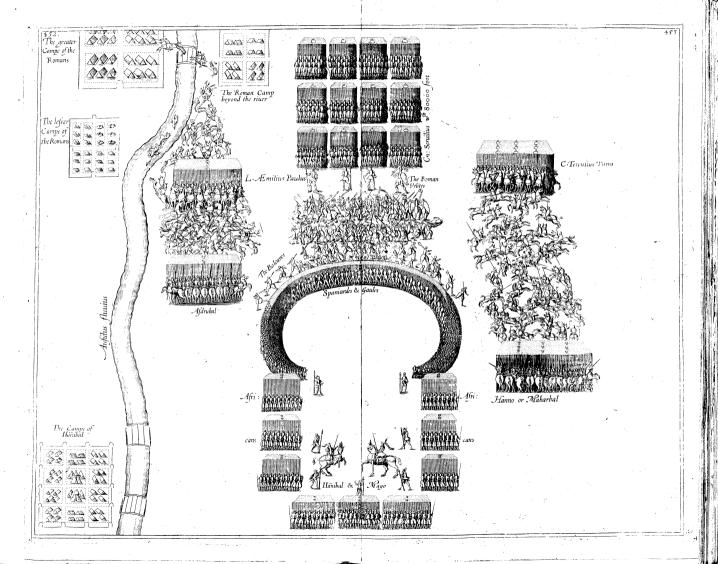

40 ther, till such time as they might be satisfied for the rape of 10. By these deedes of the Greekes, Paris (as the same Herodotus affirmes) was imboldened to doe the like; not fearing such reuenge as insued. But all this narration seemes friuolous. For what had the King of Colchos to doe with the injurie of the Phanicians? or how could the Greekes, as in reuenge of 10, plead any quarrell against him, that neuer had heard the name of Phanicians? Thucydides a writer of vnquestionable sinceritie maketh it plaine, that the name of Barbarians was not yfed at all in Homers time, which was long after the warre of Troy; and that the Greekes themselves were not then called all by one name Hellenes, as afterwards. So that it were vnreasonable to think, that they should have sought reuenge vpon all Nations as barbarous, for the iniu-50 rie receiued by one: or that all people else should have esteemed of the Greekes, as of a people opposed to all the world; and that even then when as the Greekes had not yet one common name among themselues. Others with more probabilitie say, for Telamon (as it feemes ) was a cruell man, feeing his owne forme Tencer durft not come in his fight, after the warre of Troy, but fled into Cypres, one ly because his brother Aiax ( which Tencer could not remedie ) had flaine himfelfe. Yet, were it fo that Hesione was ill intreated by Telamon, it was not therfore likely, that Priamus her brother would fecke to take her from her husband, with whom the bad lived about thirtie veeres, and to whom the had borne children which were to faceeede in his Dominion. Whereupon I thinke that Paris had no regard, either to the rape of Europs. Medas, or Helione; but was meerely incited by Venus, that is by his luft, to do that which in those dayes was very common. For not onely Greekes from Barbarians, and Barbarians from Greekes, as Herodotis discourseth, but all people were ac- 10 customed to steale women and cattell, if they could by strong hand or power get them; and having stollen them, either to sell them away in some farre Country, or keepe them to their owne vie. So did Theleus and Pirvihous attempt Proferpina; and fo did Thefew (long before Paris) rauith Melen. And thefe practifes, as it appeares in Thury lides were to common, that none durft inhabite necre vnto the fea, for feare of pyracie, which was accounted a trade of life no leffe lawfull than merchandife: wherefore Tyndareus the father of tielen, confidering the beautie of his daughter, and the rape which Theieus had made, caused all her wooers who were most of the principall men in Greece, to binde themselves by solemne oath, that if shee were taken from her husband, they should with all their might helpe to recouer her. This 20 done, hee gaue free choyce of a husband to his daughter, who chofe Menelaus brother to Agamemnon. So the cause which drew the Greekes vnto Troy in reuenge of Helens rape, was partly the oath which so many Princes had made vnto her father Tyndareus. Hercunto the great power of Agamemnon was not a little helping; for Agamemnon besides his great Dominions in Peloponnesus, was Lord of many Ilands: he was also rich in money, and therefore the Areadians were well contented to follow his pay, whom he imbarqued for Troy in his owne ships, which were more than any other of the Greeke Princes brought to that expedition.

Thus did all Greece, either as bound by oath, or ledde by the reputation and power of the two brethren, Agamemnon and Menelaus; or defirous to partake of 20 the profit and honour in that great enterprife; take armes against the Troians. The Greekes Fleet was (by Homers account) 1200. Fayle or thereabouts; but the veffels were not great: for it was not then the manner to build shippes with deckes; onely they vsed (as Thucydides faith) small shippes, meete for robbing on the Sea; the least of which carried fiftie men, the greatest 120. euery man(except the Captaines) being both a Marriner and a Souldier. By this proportion it appeares that the Gracian armie confished of 100000, men or thereabout. This was the greatest armie that ouer was raifed out of Greece; and the greatnesse of this amie, doth well declare the strength and power of Troy, which tenne whole yeeres did stand out against such forces: yet were the Troians which inhabited the Citie not the tenth part of this 40 number, as Agamemnon faid in the second of Homers Iliades; but their followers and avdes were very many and strong. For all Phrygia, Lycia, Millia, and the greatest part of Misthe leffe, tooke part with the Troians. The Amazones also brought them fuccour. And Rhefus out of Thrace, and Memnon out of Affyria (though some

ð. III.

Of the Gracians iourney, and Embassage to Troy, and of Helenacs being detained in Ægypt; and of the Sacrificing of Johnsenia

Herefore the Greeks vinwilling to come to tryall of armes, if things a might beecompounded by treatic, flent Menelum and Vilijes Limbalfadours to Troy; who demannded Helen and the goods were taken with ber out of Menelum his houle. What an fiwere the Troins made heremotic is veneratin, Herodatu from the report of the & Expitum Pricish.

makes it very probable that Helen was taken from Paris before his returne to Troy. The fumme of his discourse is this.

Paris in his returne with Helena, being driven by foule weather vnto the coast of Ægypt, was accused for the rape of Helen by some bondmen of his, that had taken Sanctuarie. Protess then King of Agypt, finding the acculation true by examination, detained Helen, and the goods taken with her, till her husband should require them: difmiffing Paris without further punishment, because hee was a stranger. When therefore the Greekes demaunding Helen had answere, that she was in £gypt: 20 they thought themselves deluded, and thereupon made the warre, which ended with the ruine of Troy. But when after the Citie taken, they perceited indeed the had not been there, they returned home, fending Menelaus to aske his wife of Proteus. Homer and the whole Nation of Poets (except Eurypides) vary from this Historie, thinking it a matter more magnificent and more gracefull to their Paems, for the retaining of a faire Ladie, than that they endured all by force, because it lay not in their power to redeliuer her. Yet in the fourth of his Odyffes, Homer speakes of Menelaus his being in Agypt, before he returned home to Sparta; which voyage it were not eafily believed, that he made for pleasure : and if he were driven thither by contrary windes, much more may we thinke that Paris was likely to have beene go driven thither by foule weather. For Paris immediatly vpon the rape committed, was enforced to fly, taking fuch windes as hee could get, and rather enduring any ftorme, than to commit himfelfe to any Hauen in the Greeke feas; whereas Menelaus might have put into any port in Greece, and there have remained with good entertainment, vntill such time as the winde had come about, and served for his Na-

One great argument Herodotus brings to confirme the faying of the Agyptian Priests, which is, that if Helen had beene at Troy, it had beene vtter madnesse for Priamus to fee fo many miferies befall him, during the warre, and fo many of his fonnes flaine for the pleasure of one, who neither was heire to the Kingdome (for 40 Hector was elder) nor equall invertue to many of the reft. Belides, it may feeme that Lucian spake not more pleasantly than truely, when he said that Helen, at the warre of Troy, was almost as old as Queene Hecuba, considering that she had beene rauished by Theseus the companion of Hercules, who tooke Troy when Priamus was very young; and confidering further, that the was fifter to Caffor and Pollux (the and Pollux being faid by some to have beene twinnes) who failed with the Argonautes, having Telamon the father of Max in their companie before the time that Hesione was taken; on whom Telamon begat Aiax, that was a principall commander in the Trojan warre. But whether it were fo, that the Trojans could not, or would not reftore Helen, so it was that the Embassadours returned ill contented, and not very 50 well intreated; for there wanted not some that aduised to have them slaine. The Greekes hereupon incenfed, made all hafte towards Troy: at which time Calchas (whom some say to have beene a runnagate Trojan, though no such thing be found in Homer) filled the Captaines and all the Hofte with many troublesome answeres and dininations. For he would have Agamemnons daughter facrificed to appeale

Diana, whose anger he said withstood their passage. Whether the young Ludy were facrificed or whether (as fome write) the Godaelle was contented with a hinde, it is not needfull heere to be disputed of. Sure it is that the malice of the depill which awaits for al opportunities, is neuer more importunate than where mens ignorance is most. Calchas also told the Greekes, that the taking of Troy was impossible till some fatall impediments were remoued and that till tenne yeeres were past, the towne should hold out against them. All which not with standing the Greekes proceeded in their enterprise; under the commaund of Agamemnon, who was accompanied with his brother Menelaus; Achilles the most valiant of all the Greekes, his friend Patroclus, and his Tutor Phanix; Aiax and Teucer the fonnes of Telamon; Idomeneus, 10 and his companion Meriones; Neftor, and his fonnes Antilochus, and Thrafymedes; Viilles: Mneltheus the fonne of Petreus captaine of the Athenians : Diomedes the fonne of Tydeus, a man of fingular courage; the wife and learned Palamedes; Alcalaphus, and Jalmenus, the fonnes of Mars, who had failed with the Argonauts: PhiloEtetes alfo the fonne of Parn, who had the arrowes of Hercules, without which Calchas faid that the Citie could not be taken; Aiax the sonne of Oileus, Peneleus, Thoas, Eumelus, Tilandrus, Eurypilus, Athamas, Sthenelus, Tlepolemus the fonne of Hercules; Podalyrius, and Machaon, the fonnes of Afeulapius: Epeus viho is faid to have made the woodden horfe, by which the towne was taken; and Protefilaus, who first leapt on shore, neglecting the Oracle that threatned death to him that landed first.

Of the Actes of the Gracians at the fiere.

Hese and many other of lesse note, arriving at Troy, found such sharpe entertainment, as might callly perswade them to thinke that the war would bee more than one yeeres worke. For in the first encounter they loft Protefilaus, whom Hector flew, and many other, without athey loft Protefilaus, whom thector new, and many other, mumbers 30 ny great harme done to the Troians: faue onely that by the in numbers 30 of men, they wonne ground enough to incampe themselves in, as appeareth in Thueydides. The principall impediment which the Greekes found, was want of victuals, which grew upon them by reason of their multitude, and the smallnesse of their veffels, wherein they could not carry necessaries for such an armie. Hereupon they were compelled to fend some part of their men, to labour the ground in Cherronesse: others to robbe vpon the sea for the reliefe of the Campe. Thus was the warre protracted nine whole yeeres, and either nothing done, or if any skirmishes were, yetcould he townereceine little loffe by them, having equal numbers to maintaine the field against such Greekes as continued the siege, and a more safe retrait, if the enemie got the better.

Wherefore outd faith, that from the first yeare till the tenth, there was no fighting at all : and Heraclides commends as very credible the report of Heraclicus : That the Greekes did not lye before Troy the first nine yeeres: but onely did beate vp and downe the feas, exercifing their men, and inriching themselues, and so by wasting the enemies Country, did blocke up the towne, unto which they returned not untill the fatall time drew neere, when it should be subjected.

This is confirmed by the enquirie which Priamus made, when the Greeke Princes came into the field, the tenth yeare, for he knew none of them, and therefore fitting vpon an high tower (as Homer tels) he learned their names of Helen: which though it is like to be a fiction, yet could it not at all have beene supposed that hee should so beeignorant of them, if they had shewed themselues before the towne so many yeerestogether. Betweenethese relations of Thucydides and Herodicus, the difference is not much, the one faying that a few of the Greekes remained in the Campe before Troy, whilest the rest made purueyance by land and sea : the other that the whole armie did spend the time in washing the sea-coastes. Neither doe the Poets greatly disagree from these authours: for they make report of miniptownes and I ands wasted, and the people carried into Captiuite; in which actions Achillet was imployed, whom the armie could not well, nor would have spared, if any service of importance had beene to be performed before the Citie. Howssource it was, this is agreed by generall consent, that in the beginning of that summer, in which Troy was taken, great booties were brought into the Campe, and a great pessioned arose among the Greeke: which some said that Apollo service in reuenge of his Prictes daughter, whom Agamenties had refused to tegoe, for any ransome: but

10 Menalide interpreting the place, faith that by Apolb was mean the Sunne: who raifed pefficient fogges, by which the armie was infelted; being lodged in a mooriful pecce of ground. And it might well bee that the campe was outer-petfered with those, who had been abrode, and now were lodged all close together; hauing also grounded their flippes within the fortifications.

About the same time atose much contention betweene Asymemman and Achillerabout the bootic, whereof Asymemman, as Generall, hauting first chosen for his part a captine woman, and Achilles in the second place chosen for himselfie an other, then Airs, Yiffes, and so the rest of the Chieftantes in order. When the Soons soon sayer Calchas had willed that Asymempons woman strong the order to her father, Apollo's

20 Prief, that so the Pestilence might cease, then this gatherinin greatly rage and say, that hee alone would not look his part of the spoile, but would either take that which had been eigenen to sheller, or that which had fillen to the so, or to Mylight. Hereupon Ashike desied him, but was saine to suffer all partiently, as not able to hold his Concabitie by strong hand, nor to reunding the follow otherwise than by refusing to fight, or to send forth his Companies. But the Greeks incharged by their Captaines, presented themselses before the Citie without him, and his troupes.

The Trohans were now relicued with great facciours, all the neighbour Countries having fent them ayde: partly drawnet of that warre by their. Commanders, 30 who affilded Prishms for money, wherewith be abounded when the warre beganne (as appeares by his words in Homer) or for loue of him felfe and his sonnes, or hope of marriage with some of his many and faire daighters; partly also (as we risy well guesse) into the other when they was then they was the det he Countries additioning with Troy. So that when Hether is filled out of the towne, hee was little inseriour to his enemies in numbers of men, or qualitie of their Leaders. The principall Captaines in the Troian armie, were Hether, Paris, Deiphobus, Hethens and the other sonnes of Prishms: Leaness, Anterior, and his sonnes, Pelydamss, Sapedon, Clause, Asius, and the sonnes of Panthus, belies Refus, who was slaine the first night of his arrivall. Memoon, Queene Penthessa, and others who came to 40 wards the end of the warre. Betweene these and the Greekes were many battels fought: the greatest of which were, that at the tombe of King Mus you the plaine; and an other at the very trenches of the Campe, wherein Hestor brake through the fortifications of the Greekes, and began to fire their flips; at which time Airx, the sonne of Telamon with his brother Teucer, were in a manner the onely men of note that remaining vinwounded, made head against Hestor, when the state of the Greekes was almost desporate.

Another battell(for fo antiquitie cals it) or rather the fame renewed, was fought by Patroclus, who hauing obtained leaue, drew forth Abillies troopes, releising the wearie Greekes with a fresh supply. Agamennon, Diomedes, Visifes, and the rest of the Princes, shough sore wounded, yet were driven to put on armour, and with help of Patroclus, repelled the Trains we should hardly. For in that slight Patroclus was lost, and his body, with much contention recouvered by his friends, was brought backe into the Camps: the armour of Abillies which he had put on, being torne from him by Better. It was the manner of those warres, hauing slaine a man, to strippe him and hale away his bodie, not reftoring it without ransome, if he were one of marke. Of the vulgar little reckoning was made: for they lought all on foote, flightly armed, and commonly followed the fuccesse of their captaines; who rode not voon horses, but in Chariots, drawne by two or three horses, which were guided by fome truftie followers of theirs, which draue vp and downe the field, as they were directed by the Captaines, who by the swiftnesse of their horses presenting them-felues where neede required, threw first their lauelins, and then alighting fought on foote, with fwords and battel-axes, retiring into the rankes of the footmen, or elle returning to their Chariots when they found cause, and so began againe with a new dart asthey could get it, if their old were loft, or broken. Their armes defensive to were helmets, breft-plates, bootes of braffe or other mettall, & shields commonly of leather, plated ouer. The offentiue were fwords and battel-axes at hand; and flones.

arrowes or darts when they fought at any diffance. The vic of their Chariots (befides the swiftnesse) was to keepe them from wearinesse, whereto the leaders were much subject, because of their armour, which the strongest and stoutest warre hea-nieft :alfo that from them they might throw their lauching downewardes, with the more violence, Of which weapon I finde not that any carried more than one or two into the field; wherefore they were often driuen to returne to their Tents for a new one, when the old was gone. Likewife of armours they had little change any peece were loff or broken, he was driven to repaire it with the like if he had any fitting, taken from some Captaine whom hee had flaine, and stripped or else to borrow of them that had by fuch meanes gotten fome to spare. Whereas therefore debilles had loft his armour which Hector (as is faid before) had taken from the body of Patroclus, he was faine to awaite the making of new, ere he could enter the fight : where of he became very delirous that he might revenge the death of Patre-

At this time Agamemnon reconciled himselfe vnto Achilles, not enely restoring as well as he might. In the next battell dehilles did fo behaue himselfe, that he did 30

his concubine Brifers, but giving him very great gifts, and exculing former matters not onely put the Troims to the worft, but also flew the valiant Hector, whom (if Homer may herein be believed) heechaced three times about the walles of Troy.

But great question may bee made of tiomers truth in this narration. For it is not likely that Hector would flay alone without the Citic (as Homer doth report of him)

when all the Trojans were fled into it: nor that he could leape ouer the rivers of Xan-

thus and Simois, as he must have done in that flight : nor that the Troians perceiving

Hettor in fuch an extremitie, would have forborne to open some of their gates and
